Original proceedings in mandamus.

On the seventh of September, 1875, Fred. Wagner, mayor of the city of Pleasanton, as relator, filed in this court his affidavit for a writ of mandamus to compel certain county officers of Linn county to remove their offices from Mound City to the city of Pleasanton. An alternative writ of mandamus was allowed and issued, the style of action being, "The State of Kansas, upon the relation of Fred. Wagner, Plaintiff, against M. E. Woodford and others, Defendants." Said writ is as follows:

"State of Kansas, County of Shawnee—ss.: The State of Kansas to M. E. Woodford, William Worden, *and W. H. Shattuck, as county commissioners of the county of Linn, F. J. Weatherbie, as county clerk, Ed. R. Smith, as clerk of the district court, and A. G. Seaman, as treasurer of said county, Greeting:

"Whereas, it appears by the affidavit of Fred. Wagner, as relator, that said relator resides in and is the mayor of the city of Pleasanton, in the said county of Linn, and is the owner of real and personal property in said city, and a tax-payer and legal elector thereof; that at an election duly called and held in the several election precincts of said county of Linn, on the fourteenth of April, 1874, for the purpose of relocating the county-seat of said county,—the result of which was duly proclaimed by the board of county commissioners on the eighteenth of April, 1874,—the county-seat of said county was duly and legally located and established at said city of Pleasanton; that from that time said city of Pleasanton has been and still is the legal county-seat of said Linn county; that, upon the proclamation of said result as aforesaid, all the county offices of said county, and all the books, records, and property belonging and pertaining to said county offices, respectively, were removed to said city of Pleasanton, and there kept and maintained, and all the public business of said county required to be done and transacted at the county-seat was done and transacted at said city of Pleasanton, at which place, also, the several terms of the district court of said county were held, until about the thirteenth of March, 1875, when you, the said M. E. Woodford, Wm. Worden, and W. H. Shattuck, constituting and acting as the board of county commissioners of said Linn county, unlawfully ordered and directed the removal of said county offices, and the books, records, and property belonging and pertaining to said offices, from said city of Pleasanton to a place called Mound City, situate about seven miles from said county-seat; and that thereupon you, the said F. J. Weatherbie, county clerk, Ed. R. Smith, clerk of the district court, and A. G. Seaman, county treasurer, unlawfully and wrongfully removed your respective offices, and the books, records, and papers thereof, and property pertaining thereto, from said county-seat to said Mound City; and from that time you, the said F. J. Weatherbie, county clerk, Ed. R. Smith, clerk of the district court, and A. G. Seaman, county treasurer, have kept and held, and still keep and hold, your respective offices as such county officers, and have been and still are transacting public and official business as such officers at said Mound City, in violation of the *statutes of this state, and of your official duty, and to the great inconvenience of said relator, and of the whole people of the county having public business to transact at the county-seat; and that you, the said M. E. Woodford, Wm. Worden, and W. H. Shattuck, county commissioners as aforesaid, have held and still hold your sessions, as the board of county commissioners of said Linn county at the place kept by said F. J. Weatherbie as the office of county clerk in said Mound City, in violation of law and your official duty, and in contempt of the wishes and interests of said relator, and of the whole people of said county.

"And whereas, it is in and by said affidavit further alleged and shown that, since the location of the county-seat of said Linn county at the city of Pleasanton as aforesaid, three-fifths of the electors of said county have not petitioned the board of county commissioners of said county for a relocation, nor for a removal of said county-seat, and that a majority of the legal electors of said county have not consented, by election, or in any other manner, to any change of said county-seat from said city of Pleasanton; that an official registration of the male adults of said county of Linn, twenty-one years of age and upwards, was made by the assessors of said county in the year 1874, as required by law, and filed in the office of the county clerk; that the whole number of such male adults, as returned by said assessors on the assessment rolls of the several townships, was 3,042; and that the whole number of legal electors in said county for all purposes connected with the ordering, holding, and determining the result of a county-seat election, in the months of January, February, and March, 1875, was 3,042.

"And whereas, it is further alleged and shown by said affidavit that the only petition presented to the board of county commissioners of said county for an election to relocate or to remove the county-seat of said county, since its location at Pleasanton as aforesaid, was presented to said board on the nineteenth of January, 1875; that said petition was not signed nor authorized by three-fifths, nor by a majority, of the legal voters of said county; that the said petition, upon which the pretended election hereinafter mentioned was held, purported to be signed by 1,964 persons, and the names subscribed thereto (numbering in all 1,964) were claimed by the persons who presented said petition to be the names of legal electors of said county; that in truth and in fact the said petition was composed of 52 separate more than six months before the remaining sheets of said petition (which were circulated by the friends of Mound City) were used or circulated; that said 12 sheets were fraudulently attached to and presented with the other sheets of said petition to said board; that, in addition to said 311 names so fraudulently attached as aforesaid to said petition, 262 of the names appearing thereon were wholly fraudulent, and did not represent the name of any legal elector or electors of said county; that 82 other names appearing on said petition were the names of persons who were at the time said petition was circulated and presented, and still are, non-residents of said Linn county; that 31 other names appearing on said petition were names of persons residing in said county who did not in fact sign said petition, nor authorize any person to sign said petition for them; that 7 other names thereon were the names of persons deceased before said petition was circulated; that 6 other names thereon were the names of minors, residing in said county; that 62 names appeared on said petition in duplicate, and four in triplicate, and that all of such names were placed upon said petition by some person or persons with the intent to procure the ordering of an election and the removal of said county-seat by fraud, and to evade the statutes regulating the relocation and removal of county-seats; and that, in all, 765 names of the said 1,964 names appearing on said petition were altogether fraudulent and spurious. And the said relator, by said affidavit, further alleges and shows that the frauds contained in said petition as aforesaid were not known by him, nor by the inhabitants of said Pleasanton, until after the pretended election hereinafter mentioned had been held, nor until after the thirteenth of March, 1875; and that said relator and the people of Pleasanton could not ascertain the fraudulent character of said petition before the pretended election hereinafter mentioned was held.

"And whereas, it is by said affidavit further alleged and shown that the only election held in said county since the location of said county-seat at Pleasanton, as aforesaid, for the relocation of said county-seat, was held on the twenty-third of February and the ninth of March, 1875; that on the said twenty-third of February the *505 whole number of votes cast was 2,084, and *that of these 853 were cast in favor of Pleasanton, 873 were cast in favor of Mound City, 332 were cast in favor of Barnard, and 26 were cast in favor of La Cygne; that on said ninth of March 2,510 votes were cast, of which 1,200 were in favor of Pleasanton, and 1,310 were in favor of Mound City; that at said election held on said twenty-third of February and ninth day of March no place received votes equal in number to a majority of the whole number of legal electors of said county; and that, aside from said illegal and insufficient petition, and said inoperative and fruitless election, it is not pretended by you, or either of you, that any petition has been presented to said county board of commissioners, or filed, asking for an election, or that any election has been held for the purpose of removing said county-seat from said city of Pleasanton, or for relocating the same; nor, in truth, has any such petition been filed or presented, or any such election been held, other than as hereinbefore stated and recited.

"And whereas, it further appears from said affidavit that the probate judge, register of deeds, and county attorney of said county still keep and hold their respective offices, and the records, books, and papers thereof, at said city of Pleasanton; and that the probate court of said county is held in said city; and that said city of Pleasanton, since the pretended election aforesaid was held, has been recognized and declared by the judge of the district court of said county to be the county-seat of said county.

"And whereas, it further appears from said affidavit that due demand has been made upon each of you to remove your respective offices to said city of Pleasanton, and there keep them, and that you neglect and refuse so to do.

"And whereas, it is further shown by said affidavit that by reason of your said unlawful and wrongful acts, in removing your respective offices, and the books and records thereof, from said city of Pleasanton, and your refusal to return them to said city, and of the transaction of the public business of said county at Mound City, the said relator, and all the other citizens, property owners, and tax-payers of said city of Pleasanton, are injured in their business and their property, and they and the whole people of said Linn county having public or private business to transact at the county-seat are greatly injured and damaged by being compelled to go such distance of seven miles from the county-seat to transact the same, and that said relator cannot have adequate relief without the aid of a writ of mandamus.

"And whereas, said relator prays that a writ of mandamus *506 . may be *awarded and issued against said defendants, commanding them to do and perform certain acts in said affidavit, and hereinafter specified:

"Now, therefore, we, being willing that due and speedy justice shall be done in the premises, do command and enjoin you, the said M. E. Woodford, Wm. Worden, and W. H. Shattuck, as county commissioners of said Linn county, that immediately after the receipt of this writ you provide suitable rooms at said city of Pleasanton, the county-seat of your said county, for county purposes; and we do command and enjoin you, the said F. J. Weatherbie, as county clerk, you, the said Ed. R. Smith, as clerk of the district court, and you, the said A. G. Seaman, as county treasurer of said county, and each of you, that, immediately after the receipt of this writ, you remove your respective offices of county clerk, clerk of the district court, and county treasurer to said city of Pleasanton, county-seat as aforesaid, and the books, papers, records, and property to said offices respectively belonging and pertaining, and that you there keep and hold your said offices as by law required; or, in default thereof, that you show cause, if any you have, before the supreme court of the state of Kansas, at the city of Topeka, on the twenty-seventh of September, 1875, why you have not done as herein commanded and required; and have you then and there this writ, with your return thereon.

"Witness my hand, and seal of the supreme court of Kansas, at Topeka, this seventh of September, 1875.

[SEAL.]

"A. HAMMATT, Clerk Sup. Court."

Said writ is indorsed as follows:

"The within writ of mandamus allowed and granted by the supreme court, this seventh of September, 1875.

"SAMUEL A. KINGMAN, Ch. Justice."

Said writ being served and returned, the defendants appeared and filed a motion to quash said writ, because "(1) the relator has no capacity to sue; (2) the action is not brought in the name of the real party in interest; (3) said alternative writ does not state facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought, and does not show any neglect or omission of official duty by or on the part of the defendants." This motion was set for hearing, and was argued on the nineteenth of October, 1875. A. F. Ely, Joel Moody, and McComas &

McKeighan appeared for defendants, in support of the motion *507 to quash. R. W. Blue, *S. H. Allen, W. R. Biddle, and W.

C. Webb appeared for the relator, in opposition to said motion, and in favor of the mandamus. The case was argued by Messrs. Ely and McComas for defendants, and by Mr. Webb for relator.

A. F. Ely, arguing that the motion to quash should be sustained, contended:

The alternative writ shows two elections, at the last of which 2,510 votes were cast: 1,200 in favor of Pleasanton, and 1,310 in favor of relocating the county-seat at Mound City. This shows the "consent of a majority of the electors of the county," within the meaning of section 1 of article 9 of the constitution. The legislation of the state shows the legislature has at all times deemed the number of votes cast at county-seat elections as conclusive of the number of electors in the county at the time of the election. See Laws 1861, p. 115, § 5, and page 117, c. 20; Laws 1863, p. 46, § 1; Laws 1864, p. 79, § 1; Laws 1865, p. 71, § 1; Laws 1867, p. 76, § 1; Gen. St. 1868, p. 297, c. 26, §§ 6, 7. In each of these enactments the legislature declares that the location of the county-seat shall be located at the place receiving "a majority of the votes cast" at the election provided or ordered for such purpose. If the legislature understood that the constitution required the consent of a majority of all the electors of the county, whether voting or not voting, it would have said so, and would have provided some mode for ascertaining the number of the electors. This has not been done; while, by repeated and continuous legislative declarations that county-seats shall be located and relocated by "election," and the result in each case determined in accordance with the "majority of the votes cast" at such election, the legislature gives the strongest proof that the safest and most satisfactory mode of ascertaining the whole number of electors is, upon full and fair notice to all the people that an election will be held, to take the number of votes cast as the number of electors of the county.

How could the board of county commissioners know in advance
 *508 what was the number of votes in the county? It is *claimed that the "registration law," known as chapter 86, Gen. St., (p. 894,) provides an adequate mode. This act was passed in 1867, and provides for an annual registration to be made by the county assessor, of all "adults," males and females; while the county-seat act, Gen. St. c. 26, was passed in 1868, and section 4 thereof provides that, "for the purposes" of such act, "the number of legal electors shall be ascertained from the last assessment rolls of the several township assessors in the county." But if the "registration lists" required by said chapter 86 shall be held to be the "assessment rolls" contemplated by section 4 of chapter 26, (which we deny,) then we contend that said chapter 86 is abrogated by the provisions of chapter 76 of the Laws of 1873, providing for an "enumeration of persons" to be made annually by the "township assessors," and no such list or enumeration is alleged or shown by the alternative writ to have been made. See cases of State v. City of St. Joseph, 37 Mo. 270; 38 Mo. 455; Scott v. State, 1 Sneed, 690.

Again, the presumption is in law that all electors not voting "assent" to the change or relocation of the county-seat. It is the "consent" of the electors which the constitution requires, without providing in what mode that consent must be ascertained. It is therefore for the legislature to prescribe the mode; and when the legislature provide for an "election," and declare that the result shall be determined by such election, it will be presumed, in support of such legislation, that all electors who stay away from the polls, by their absence and silence, "consent" that a "majority of the votes cast" shall determine the question for all "the electors of the county."

As to the petition for the election. Section 4 of the county-seat act (chapter 26) declares that "the number of legal electors," for the purposes of the petition and the election mentioned in sections 1 and 2 of that act, shall be ascertained from the "assessment rolls." The alternative writ alleges that the number of legal electors, as shown by the "registration list" made in accordance with chapter 86, was

3,042; but it does not pretend to state the number as shown

*509 by the "assessment rolls." But *if it did, still the determination of the board of county commissioners is conclusive.

The election petition presented to them contained 1,964 names as petitioners for a relocation of the county-seat. The county board acted upon this petition,—acted judicially,—and determined that it was “the petition of three-fifths of the legal electors of the county,” and thereupon ordered the election. Their decision in this respect is final, and the court cannot now go behind their determination, and inquire into the legality or sufficiency of the petition.

Again, the alternative writ shows that two elections were held; one on the twenty-third of February, at which no place received a majority of the votes, and the second on the ninth of March, at which there was a majority of 110 votes cast in favor of Mound City. Now, we contend that no inquiry can be had in this case into any matter or proceeding anterior to said second election. And we think this question is settled in the Howard county county-seat case, recently decided by this court, in which the court say: “The amendment of 1872 to the contest act, providing that ‘in no case shall the validity of any election be inquired into beyond the one last had,’ * * * plainly indicates that a contest made after the second election must be limited to that election.” Light v. State, 14 Kan. *493, *494. Now, the facts in the case at bar, as shown by the alternative writ of mandamus, bring the case clearly within the decision quoted from; and it is too late for the relator or plaintiff to inquire into the sufficiency of the petition upon which the first election (that of twenty-third February) was ordered.

W. C. Webb, for the relator, submitted:

The motion of the defendants to quash the alternative writ, to be a proper proceeding under our practice, must have the force and effect of a demurrer, and as such must admit the facts alleged and stated in the writ. The real question is, Does the alternative writ state facts sufficient to entitle the relator to the relief sought?

*510 It is alleged, and is undisputed, that in April, 1874, *the county seat of Linn county was legally located at the city of Pleasanton, and that it legally remained there until the ninth of March, 1875. Then, by order of the defendant commissioners, (illegally, as we claim,) a part of the county officers removed to Mound City, removing also their respective offices, and the public records. The alternative writ of mandamus shows the facts and proceedings constituting the grounds or pretext on which the defendant commissioners made their order for such removal; and these facts and proceedings, we claim, show that the order of removal made by the defendant commissioners, and the removal made by the other defendants, were illegal, and that the county-seat still remains, in judgment of law, at Pleasanton. We assert two distinct propositions, and upon these we base our demand for the relief by mandamus, compelling defendants to remove their respective offices from Mound City to Pleasanton:

(1) The county board or commissioners had no jurisdiction to make the order of January 19, 1875, that the question of relocating the county-seat be submitted to a vote at an election to be held on the twenty-third of February. The county-seat having been located at Pleasanton "by a vote of the electors of the county," the county board were powerless to act unless "upon the petition of three-fifths of the legal electors of the county." Gen. St. § 2, c. 26. The alternative writ shows and alleges that, "since the location of the county-seat of said Linn county at the city of Pleasanton as aforesaid, three-fifths of the electors of said county have not petitioned the board of county commissioners of said county for a relocation, nor for a removal of said county-seat; that a majority of the legal electors of said county have not consented, by election, or in any other manner, to any change of said county-seat from said city of Pleasanton; that an official registration of the male adults of said county of Linn, twenty-one years of age and upwards, was made by the assessors of said county in the year 1874, as required by law, and filed in the office of the county clerk; that the whole number of such male adults, as returned by said assessors on the assessment rolls of the several townships, was *511 3,042; and that *the whole number of legal *electors in said county for all purposes connected with the ordering, holding, and determining the result of a county-seat election, in the months of January, February, and March, 1875, was 3,042.*"

These facts are admitted by defendant's motion. But it is claimed that the "registration" list referred to or stated is one made in accordance with the registration act of 1867, (Gen. St. c. 86, p. 894,) and not the one required or contemplated by section 4 of the county-seat act, (Gen. St. c. 26, p. 297.) This claim is not well founded. The statement in the writ is broad, and was made with special reference to the provisions of both the acts named, and the allegations framed so as to come within the very terms of the county-seat act. That act says: "Sec. 4. For the purposes of this act, the number of legal electors in the county shall be ascertained from the last assessment rolls of the several township assessors in the county."

Let it be first observed that there were no "township assessors" when this act was passed, (March, 1868.) The office of county assessor was not abolished, nor that of township assessor created, until March, 1869. Laws 1869, pp. 111, 113, c. 30, § 3. Said section 4 therefore means legal assessors for the time being, appointed and authorized by law, if it means anything. So regarding it, the alternative writ states and shows the making, returning, and filing of an "official registration" of the male adults of Linn county in the year 1874, the returning of the whole number of such adults by the assessors on the "assessment rolls of the several townships," and then avers that "the whole number of legal electors in said county, for all purposes connected with the ordering, holding, and determining the result of a county-seat election [in Linn county] in the months of January, February, and March, 1875, was 3,042."

This, it would seem, disposes of the technical objection, that the alternative writ counts upon and shows as the basis for the *512 petition a registration of adults made under the registration act alone. But it will not escape the attention of the court that the language of section 4 of the county-seat act, designating the "assessment rolls" as the basis for determining the number of "legal electors," is most bungling, and the section (if the "assessment rolls" proper were literally intended) might well be treated as void for uncertainty. Nobody having any legal sense would ever take the names of the persons assessed or taxed, as they appear on the "assessment rolls," as the list, or as determining the number, of legal electors. Nor is there anything on or in the "assessment rolls" by which any person assessed therein can be "ascertained" to be a "legal elector;" nothing to show whether such person is an infant or an adult, a resident or non-resident, a citizen or an alien, or, where initials only are given, whether male or female. It is impossible, therefore, to "ascertain from the last assessment rolls of the several township assessors" "the number of legal electors in the county."

The first general county-seat act can be found in the Laws of 1863, p. 46, c. 24. Said act was amended by chapter 26, Laws 1865, p. 71; and further amended by chapter 46, Laws 1867, p. 77. The present act (Gen. St. 1868, c. 26) embraces the general features of the former statutes, and contains some new provisions, most notable of which is this bungling section 4, above quoted. It is due to the revisors, however, to say that they are not responsible for the section as it stands. They reported the section (Report of Revisors, p. 420, § 3) as follows: "For the purposes of this act, the number of legal electors in the county shall be ascertained from the poll-lists of the general election next preceding the presentation of the petitions hereinbefore mentioned." With this clear, sensible, and just provision before them, it is marvelous that the legislature of 1868 should allow some ignorant meddler to substitute the almost meaningless provision now standing as section 4. But it was done; and it is proper to find, if we can, some rational construction for the section as *513 adopted. It is not reasonable to suppose, as already *shown, that the framer or the legislature intended by the term "assessment rolls" the roll or rolls made and returned by the assessors showing the real property assessed in the county, with the names of the owners, nor the roll or rolls showing the valuation of the personal property assessed, with the names of the persons so assessed. No one could ever have supposed that such lists or rolls did or could show the "number of legal electors in the county." Then what was meant? This act was passed and approved in March, 1868. At the previous session of 1867 (Laws 1867, p. 194, c. 113) an act was passed "providing for the registration of all adult persons in each county in this state," section 1 of which provided that the assessor, "when making the assessment of personal property," should make a list (or roll) "of all persons of both sexes, twenty-one years of age and upwards, on the first day of March of each year, and file the same in the office of the county clerk, designating the township or ward in which said person resides." Section 2 of said act provides that "whenever it is necessary to ascertain the number of adult persons twenty-one years of age or upwards in any county, township, or ward, upon which to have any action of the county commissioners, or other officers, the list on file in the county clerk's office shall be taken as conclusive on that subject."

The evident intention of this act was that the assessor should make two lists,—one of male adults and one of female adults; that, in all cases where an election or other proceeding should be called or ordered upon the petition of electors, the requisite number should be determined from the one list; and where any matter, as in granting licenses to sell intoxicating liquors, (section 1 of the dram-shop act,) should be determined upon the petition of the adults of both sexes, the requisite number of petitioners therefor should be ascertained from both such lists. Now, in the light of this registration act of 1867, then on the statute book, and the evident intent of such act, do not the words, "last assessment rolls," in section 4 of the county-seat act of 1868, mean "assessors' lists" required by said registration *514 act? Granted *that the words are not happily or aptly chosen. But it is the duty of the court to sustain the act, by liberal interpretation, where the intent of the law-maker is apparent, rather than to render it wholly ineffectual by a narrow or strict construction. Giving the acts the construction suggested, and they can be upheld as prescribing a reasonable and proper rule. And so the alternative writ was framed to cover the language of both acts; the facts alleged being within the intent or scope of both. These facts, alleged in the writ, and admitted by the defendants, show that the number of legal electors in Linn county, when the petition was presented to the county board in January, 1875, was 3,042. Three-fifths of this number is 1,827. The petition contained 1,964 names, all told, of which 765 are admitted to be false, forged, fictitious, fraudulent, etc., leaving only 1,199 legal electors, or 626 less than the requisite three-fifths; and the county board had no jurisdiction to order an election, and their order therefor, and all proceedings thereunder, are void.

It is worthy of observation that the manipulators of said county-seat petition, and the county board, regarded said "assessors' lists," showing 3,042 male citizens, as the basis for determining the number of legal electors. On that basis, 1,827 were the necessary three-fifths. The petition contained 1,964 names,—only 137 more than the requisite number. The county-seat petition was filed in January, 1875. The whole number of "votes cast" at the general election in Linn county in 1874, for representatives, three districts, was 1,829; for senator, 1,795; for associate justice of this court, 1,853. If the "votes cast" constituted the basis, 1,113 petitioners (being three-fifths of the number of legal electors at the last preceding election) would have been sufficient, and there would have been no need to add 765 false, forged, and spurious names to the 1,199 genuine names, in order to bring the case within the jurisdiction and power of the county board.

It is claimed by defendants that, the county board having passed *515 upon and adjudged the petition for an election sufficient, and ordered an election thereupon, which has been held, the question of its legality and sufficiency, with respect to jurisdiction, is res adjudicata, and that this court is concluded by their decision. It is hardly worth the while to argue against a proposition seemingly so absurd. If the proposition were correct, then no "petition"—no actual petition by any number of electors—is necessary, for a corrupt and scheming county board can forge and manufacture an entire paper, call it a petition, and affix the requisite number of false and forged names, and names of fictitious persons, and thereupon, by their order for an election, wholly override the statute, and defy the wishes and will of the people. A much stronger ground of objection is that the relator has slept upon his rights; that, if he would question the sufficiency of the petition, he should have done so before the election was held and the votes canvassed. But this objection is met and answered by the averment in the alternative writ that "the frauds contained in said petition were not known by the relator, nor by the inhabitants of said Pleasanton, until after said pretended election had been held, nor until the thirteenth of March, 1875, and that said relator, and the people of Pleasanton, could not ascertain the fraudulent character of said petition before said pretended election was held." The relator, therefore, is not estopped; the adjudication of the county board is not final; and this court, if it finds that the petition did not contain the genuine signatures of competent petitioners equal to three-fifths the number of legal electors, as shown by the "last assessment rolls," (assessors' lists,) must find that the county board had no power or authority, and must hold that said pretended election of twenty-third February and ninth March was and is utterly void, and that the county-seat still remains at Pleasanton.

Defendants contend that the amendment of 1872, to the contest act passed in 1871, precludes all inquiry as to the petition and the jurisdiction of the county board to order the election, because there were two elections held; one on the twenty-third February, *516 the other, March 9th. That amendment consists in adding to section 7 of chapter 79 of the Laws of 1871 a proviso, as follows: "Provided, however, that in no case shall the validity of any election be inquired into beyond the one last had, and upon which the proceeding is based." Laws 1872, p. 271. And counsel claim that this court in the recent Howard county case (Light v.

State, 14 Kan. *489) held and decided that in a case like this said proviso applies, and cuts off all inquiry. A single sentence in the opinion of the court in that case may seem to hold to that view. But such sentence is obiter dictum. The question was not in that case at all. The facts were most unlike the facts here; and, besides, the real question there decided was that the parties aggrieved by the action of the county board, in throwing out and refusing to canvass a part of the returns of the (so-called) first election, should have proceeded at once, and not wait (as they did) until after the (so-called) second election was had; that by so sleeping on their rights, with full knowledge of the facts, and taking the chances in a second election, they were estopped from denying the validity of the first election. And that decision was no doubt correct. But to go further, and throw in a reference to the amendment of 1872, obiter, was wholly unnecessary. But if the court really intended to ground its decision upon that amendment, or to fortify its decision in that case upon the construction which the court intimates, then we most respectfully submit that the proviso of 1872 was not designed or intended to have any such application, and will not bear any such construction. The words, "upon which [election] the proceeding [or action] is based," clearly indicate, not merely the isolated fact of receiving ballots on a particular day, but the entire proceedings, anterior and subsequent, necessary to constitute an "election" within the legal signification of that word. Now, in this case, upon what election does the relator base his proceedings in demanding that a peremptory mandamus be awarded against the defendants?

*517 Certainly not upon the vote of ninth March, *and its result, nor upon that of twenty-third February, nor upon both together. It is upon the fact that the county-seat is legally at Pleasanton, where it was located in April, 1874. The defendants base their defense upon the pretended election held twenty-third February and ninth March, 1875. So, in this respect, the proviso of 1872 has no application. But we go further, and claim that the word "election," as used in this proviso, does not mean "vote," but means decision, determination, political adjudication; and, whenever it takes two or more "votes" to secure the requisite "consent of a majority of all the legal electors," no one of such votes is properly an "election," but it takes them all, with all the necessary anterior proceedings,—petition, order, notice,—and the intermediate and subsequent proceedings,—canvass and proclamation,—to constitute an "election." It is in this sense in which the word is employed in the proviso of 1872. To illustrate: In 1870 the county-seat of Linn county was legally at Mound City. In 1871 it was relocated at La Cygne. In 1873 it was relocated at Farmer City. Conley v. Fleming, 14 Kan. *382. In 1874 it was relocated at Pleasanton. And now it is claimed that the circle is completed, and in March, 1875, it was relocated at Mound City. This action is a contest between Pleasanton and Mound City. Let us suppose that Mound City, instead of relying upon the pretended election of 1875 for a return of the county-seat, should insist and undertake to show in this action or proceeding that the election of 1871, by which the county-seat was taken from Mound City to La Cygne, was void; that no legal removal had been effected; that all intermediate elections were therefore void; and that Mound City having again, by an accidental return of the uneasy and migratory wheelbarrow which carries the county-seat, became possessed of that unstable article, is therefore entitled to retain it. In such case the proviso of 1872 would apply, and, by its terms and evident meaning, would cut off all inquiry into the validity of the election of 1871, or either of those of 1872, 1873, and 1874. It would in effect say, what this court in the Howard county case said, that the parties *518 *alleging such illegality in an election, either as a cause of action, or ground of defense, were simply too late; that their rights, actual or supposed, were lost by their laches and their delays. So, too, in regard to elections held for the purpose of voting bonds, (for the proviso of 1872 is added to a section in relation to the contest of such elections, as well as county-seat elections.) Take this case: In the city of A., in 1873, the question of voting city bonds to B. for a particular purpose was submitted to the electors. The election was held, votes cast, and canvass made. The canvassers determine the proposition lost by a trifling majority. In 1874 the same question is again submitted at an election duly called. Votes are cast and canvassed, and the canvass shows the proposition is defeated by a large majority. B. then pretends to have discovered that the canvassers of the election held in 1873 rejected the returns from one ward, which, if canvassed, would have shown a decided majority at such first election in favor of the issue of the bonds, and thereupon brings mandamus to compel the city council as canvassers to canvass the rejected votes, add them to those already canvassed, declare the result, and issue the bonds. Would not this court say that the proviso of 1872 applied; that such election was not "the last one had" upon the same question between A. and B.? Many cases might be put where the proviso of 1872 would apply as a safe rule, without perverting its language, or giving it a strained construction; both of which, it seems to us, are done in holding that the word "election" is synonymous with the word "vote." This word "election," in its broadest and best sense,—that is, in its political signification,—means the act of choosing; choice; determination; decision. The "act" is the necessary and continuous proceedings from the inceptive step to the end. The "choice" or "decision" is the consummation of the purpose for which the "act" was instituted and carried on. This would seem to be the obvious meaning and purport of the words of the proviso in question. To give that proviso the construction contended for by defendants is to say that a corrupt county *519 *board and clerk may forge an entire petition, or falsely enter upon their records that a petition was presented when there was none at all; order a county-seat election; make a false canvass of the votes cast, if necessary to their purpose; order a "second" election; and declare, beyond the power of judicial review, that whatever place receives a majority of the votes cast at such "second" election is the county-seat. And if a petition on which over one-third the whole number of names were forged and fraudulent, corruptly placed there in order to bring it (as to numbers) within the jurisdiction of the county board, is beyond the reach of judicial inquiry here, we may expect to see some interesting proceedings on the part of county commissioners, who in such decision will find immunity for almost every fraudulent and corrupt proceeding possible in regard to county-seat elections.

(2) But another proposition remains: If for any reason or cause this court holds against the relator upon the question of jurisdiction or authority of the county board to order an election, then we insist that the result of the election, as canvassed and proclaimed, did not remove the county-seat from Pleasanton to Mound City. We shall assume, as conclusively established by the foregoing considerations, that, at the time of said county-seat election, in February and March, 1875, the number of legal electors was, and was legally ascertained to be, 3,042. Now, the constitution provides, (article 9, § 1:) "The legislature shall provide for organizing new counties, locating county-seats, and changing county lines; and no county-seat shall be changed without the consent of a majority of the electors of the county."

The language of this section is peculiar, and the words employed show that the framers had a deliberate purpose and object in mind, and that the section was carefully framed so as to accomplish such purpose, and secure such object. Let it first be observed that the question of changing a county-seat need not necessarily be submitted to an election at all. Much less does the constitution require that such question shall be determined from the number of "votes cast" at an election. The means or manner by which the "consent of a majority of the electors" shall be obtained, is left wholly to the discretion of the legislature. That this clause is indeed peculiar, and is greatly significant, will be seen from the pertinent language elsewhere used in the constitution:

Art. 2, § 13. "A majority of all the members elected to each house, voting in the affirmative, [and entered upon the journal,] shall be necessary to pass any bill." (See, also, section 5 of article 11.)

Art. 11, § 6. Certain laws proposing the creation of public debts must be "submitted to a direct vote of the electors of the state at some general election," and to have any effect must be "ratified by a majority of all the votes cast."

Art. 13, § 8. "No banking law shall be in force until the same shall have been submitted to a vote of the electors of the state at some general election, and approved by a majority of all the votes cast at such election."

Art. 14, § 1. Proposed amendments to the constitution must be submitted to the electors at a general election, and to be adopted must be approved by "a majority of the electors voting on said amendments."

Art. 15, § 8. The permanent location of the capital was to be submitted to a popular vote, "and a majority of all the votes cast at a general election shall be necessary for such location."

Sched. §§ 9, 11. The adoption of the constitution was submitted to an election to be held "on the first Tuesday in October, 1859," and to have any force or effect must receive "a majority of all the votes cast at such election."

Sched. § 25. The homestead clause (section 9 of article 15) was to be voted upon separately, "and if a majority of all the votes cast at said election shall be against such provision, then it shall be stricken from the constitution."

Now, we submit that when in every other instance the mode of submission or decision, and the rule as to sufficiency, are both succinctly set forth in the constitution, and that instrument, as to the change of county-seats, silent itself as to the mode of effecting the change, gives unrestricted power to the legislature in that regard, but specifically requires that, whatever the mode, no change shall be made "without the consent of a majority of the legal electors of the *521 county," surely, *the peculiar form of expression must challenge the attention and careful consideration of every thoughtful man.

The language is prohibitory,—"no county-seat shall be changed without the consent of a majority of the legal electors." How is the number of legal electors to be ascertained? "The legislature shall provide for locating county-seats." This is mandatory, and imposes upon the legislature the duty to provide by law for ascertaining the number. This duty the legislature undertook to perform by the acts of 1867 and 1868, (chapters 86 and 26, Gen. St.) It was and is within the power of the legislature to provide for changing county-seats by petition alone, or by the order of the county board, or order of the district court, or district judge, or in any other manner, provided a mode for ascertaining the number of legal electors in the county be ascertained, and a majority of such legal electors give their consent to the change. And this "consent" may be given by petition, letter, or vote, as the legislature may choose to prescribe. It is claimed by defendants that the legislature has by law said that an election shall be the mode for ascertaining the judgment of the electors, and that the statute says that a majority of the votes cast shall be sufficient. This is conceded. But the legislature has not said that the number of "votes cast" at such election shall be deemed and held to be the "number of legal electors in the county." They might have said so, but they did not. On the contrary, recognizing the fact that many legal voters do not vote, the legislature, in 1867, provided for a registration by the assessors of the male adults, and made such assessors' lists the guide for the county board in certain official proceedings; and in the county-seat act, in 1868, these assessors' lists were most undoubtedly intended to govern and control as to the number of "legal electors," for all purposes pertaining to the removal or location of county-seats. We therefore contend that the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the county-seat act, that a majority of the "votes cast" can determine the election, must give way to the paramount command of the constitution, which requires the consent of *a majority of all the "legal electors" in the county, whether they vote or not.

*522 But it is urged that those who do not vote, by their absence and silence, give their consent to the change. On the other hand, it seems to us that in this case absence and silence must be held to be non-consent. It is like the vote of the senate or house on the passage of a bill. The constitution provides that "a majority of all the members elected to each house, voting in the affirmative, shall be necessary to pass any bill." Every absent member therefore counts "no," just as effectually as if he were present and voted "no." To change a county-seat the "consent of a majority" of all the legal electors is required,—not their silence. The people understand this; and those who are opposed to any change of the county-seat, and have no disposition to fool away a day or two every six months in watching the movements of that uneasy vehicle which carries the county-seat from place to place, reason thus: "I am opposed to any removal of the county-seat. If I go to the election, I shall vote against removal. No removal or change can be made unless a majority of all the electors in the county consent. The whole number of legal electors has been ascertained, and is known, and my vote against removal will have no greater effect than my silent dissent. Consent is required. To give consent requires action,—affirmative action. It will take 1,522 votes in favor of removal to change the county-seat, and it matters nothing whether the votes cast against removal be many, or few, or none. As I shall not give my consent, I shall stay at home and attend to my business." It would seem that, in view of the requirement and the prohibition of section 1 of article 9 of the constitution, above quoted, no satisfactory answer can be made to an elector who reasons in that way. When "consent" is positively required,—when it is made an indispensable condition,—the argument that the absent voter, by his absence, consents is a weak one. See cases of Sheeley v. Wiggs, 32 Mo. 398, and State v. Justice's Co. Ct., 41 Mo. 44. What, then, is the conclusion? The number of legal electors was 3,042.

*523 At the vote taken in March (the so-called second election) the number of *votes cast was 2,510; 1,200 for Pleasanton, (against removal,) and 1,310 for Mound City, (for removal.) A majority of 3,042 is 1,522. The vote for Mound City is 212 short of the number requisite to show "the consent of a majority of the legal electors" to a change of the county-seat. The order of the county board, upon which the defendants rely, is void, and the relator is entitled to a peremptory mandamus commanding the defendants to return their offices and records to Pleasanton.

H. C. McComas, for defendants, and in reply, enlarged upon the points submitted by his associate, (Mr. Ely,) and, in addition, he contended:

The relator is concluded by the act of 1872, limiting all inquiry to the second election. The county-seat act in very terms provides for a "first election" and a "second election;" and it would be strange if the word had a different signification in another statute upon the same subject. "Election," in its popular sense, has reference to the receiving, counting, and returning of ballots on any given question, or for the filling of a public office, or public offices, on a particular day duly designated for that purpose. In this sense it is correct to say there were two elections; one held on the twenty-third of February, and the second on the ninth of March. And as the rights of the defendants here are grounded upon such second election, "the one last had," no inquiry can be made, if the statute of 1872 has any force at all in regard to the validity of such first election, nor concerning the petition upon which such election was ordered. See Bright. Elec. Cas.

The relator has mistaken his remedy. The action of the county board in ordering the election was not void, even though the petition therefor had in fact only 1,199 genuine signatures of electors attached. At most, their action was simply erroneous, and the relator, or any party who was aggrieved by such error, might have appealed from the decision or order of the county board to the district court. Section 30, c. 25, Gen. St. Failing to appeal within the time *524 *prescribed by said section 30, the relator's right to have such order and decision of the board reviewed is gone. He cannot do indirectly in this proceeding what he has now (by reason of his omission to appeal in time) no longer a right to do directly.

The alternative writ is fatally defective. It states no cause of action. It does not allege that the 1,199 names whose genuineness is not denied, but which is admitted, did not constitute three-fifths of all the legal electors in the county at the time the petition was presented to the county board. Counsel for relator argues that such is the import of the averments. But the naked allegations of the alternative writ fall short of stating such fact, and inferences are not sufficient to sustain the writ as against our motion to quash because of the omission to state facts showing the relator to be entitled to the relief which he seeks. All the averments in the writ in relation to, or which are to be supported by, the registration act of 1867, (chapter 86, Gen. St.,) are mere surplusage, as that act cuts no figure whatever in any county-seat election, nor in any county-seat contest. The legislature having provided no other certain or satisfactory mode for ascertaining and determining "the number of legal electors in the county" for the purposes of county-seat elections, and having provided that the question of changing county-seats shall be submitted to the people at elections called specially for that purpose, the number of votes cast must be taken and held as the whole number in the county; and a majority of those cast, in favor of a change, is sufficient proof that a majority of all the electors consent to such change.

BREWER, J. Two questions were presented and discussed by counsel in the argument of this case: First. Where a petition for the relocation of a county-seat has been presented to the county commissioners, and acted on by them, an election ordered, two elections had, the first not resulting in a majority for any place, the votes canvassed, and the place receiving the *majority of the votes at *525 the second election declared the county-seat, will the court inquire into the sufficiency of the petition, and hear testimony to show that some of the names thereon were improperly there, and that therefore it did not contain the requisite number of petitioners? Second. If a majority of the votes actually cast at a county-seat election are in favor of one place, and it is declared the county-seat, will the court under our statutes receive any other evidence to show that the number of legal voters in the county exceeded the number of votes cast, and inquire whether the place declared the chosen county-seat actually received the expressed consent of a majority of the electors? Both of these questions were argued with great ability by the respective counsel, and are of no little difficulty. But after a careful consideration we are constrained to answer both in the negative.

In reference to the first question it may be remarked that the manner of contesting county-seat elections, and the extent to which the courts may go in such contests, is regulated by statute. There is in the nature of things no absolute necessity for a petition of any kind. The legislature may authorize the commissioners, without any petition, and upon their own motion, to submit to the people the question of a change in the county-seat. Or, requiring a petition, it may specify the kind of petition, the number of signers, etc. It may leave the action of the commissioners open to investigation in the courts, or it may make their determination conclusive as to the sufficiency of the petition. Now, in the winter of 1871, in the case of State v. Stockwell, 7 Kan. *98, construing the statute of 1869, (Laws 1869, c. 27, p. 101,) we held that under the authority therein given we could inquire into any of the preliminary matters; that any matter of substance enjoined by law, and omitted, or improperly done, could be shown for the purpose of invalidating the election. There was no restriction in the statute, and the right was given to "contest the validity of the vote." And this, as we held, was broad *526 enough to include all prior *proceedings. The law of 1871, while making many changes, made in this respect only a verbal change. It provided that "the validity of the election * * * shall be tried and determined." Laws 1871, p. 193, § 7. But the subsequent legislature, that of 1872, amended by adding this proviso: "Provided, however, that in no case shall the validity of any election be inquired into beyond the one last had, and upon which the proceeding is based." Laws 1872, p. 271, § 1. Now, by this proviso the legislature plainly intended some restriction on the limits of inquiry in such contests. Coming at the session after the decision of this court construing the statute, it is not unreasonable to suppose that it was made with reference thereto, and was intended to cut off some portion of the broad field of inquiry to which that decision opened. It meant to say that, when a contest was made, some things should be considered final, and not open to attack. It says that only the validity of the last election, the one upon which the proceeding is based, shall be inquired into. Now, the only case in which the law contemplates two elections is in the relocation of county-seats. Does it not plainly follow that, when the two elections have been held, it means to forbid inquiry into the validity of the first; that the courts were bound to accept the prior election, and consequently the proceedings upon which it was based, as valid and regular, and could only inquire whether the last election was legally conducted, and the actual result of the voting legally ascertained and declared? Counsel, to obviate the force of this argument, contend that the term "election" does not properly apply to the separate day's voting; that there is no "election" till a result is reached, and some place has received the requisite majority; that in the word is involved the idea of choice and selection, and that there is no choice or selection until some place is chosen or selected. Counsel may be technically correct in his definition; but the legislature has in the very statute used the word in a different sense. It speaks of the first day's voting as an "election," and says that if, at that election, no place receives a majority, *a second "election" shall be had. And such is a common use of the term. Now, when the legislature has used a word in a statute in one sense, and with one meaning, when it subsequently uses the same word in legislation respecting the same subject-matter, it will be understood to have used it in the same sense, unless there be something in the context, or the nature of things, to indicate that it intended a different meaning thereby. The courts may not give it a different meaning to sustain their views of what the law ought to be. They must seek simply to ascertain the legislative intent, and then enforce it. We conclude, therefore, that we cannot now inquire into the sufficiency of the signatures to the petition. Light v. State, 14 Kan. *489, *493.

The second question is even more difficult. The constitution (article 9, § 1) reads: "No county-seat shall be changed without the consent of a majority of the electors of the county." If there are three thousand electors in a county, and only thirteen hundred vote in favor of the change, by what right can the legislature override the constitution, and say that the change may be made without the express consent of the majority? We do not doubt the restricting power of the constitutional provision; and whenever, by any of the ordinary or prescribed means of ascertaining the fact, it appears that a majority of the electors have not consented to the change, no change can be had. The question is not as to the effect of a fact, but the means of ascertaining it,—the evidence to be received. Within certain limits the legislature has power to prescribe what shall be evidence, prima facie or conclusive, of any fact. It may say that a tax deed shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of all the prior proceedings; that a judgment or an award shall be conclusive evidence of the amount due from the defendant. And when this evidence, which the legislature has prescribed, is produced, the courts must accept the fact as established. In this case, the legislature has said that the place receiving the majority of the votes cast, shall become the county-seat, thus making the number of votes cast the evidence of the number of electors. Doubtless the legislature might make other things evidence of this fact. It might require, as preliminary to every election, a registration, and make that registration the evidence. We do not mean that it may, by the mere machinery of rules of evidence, override or set at naught the restrictions of the constitution, or that it could arbitrarily make conclusive evidence of the number of voters any list or roll which, in the nature of things, has no connection with that fact, and does not reasonably tend to prove it. But when it adopts as conclusive evidence of the fact anything which, according to the ordinary rules of human experience, reasonably tends to prove the fact, the courts are not at liberty to ignore or go behind such evidence.

Now, it is not merely the privilege, but it is the duty, of every elector to vote. It is one of the obligations of citizenship. True, as a matter of fact, every elector may not vote. So, too, every elector may not be registered. Yet there is a reasonable connection between either the number of votes cast, or the registration list, and the number of electors, sufficient to justify the legislature in declaring that either of the former shall be deemed conclusive evidence of the latter. If it were not so, then that finality which, in the best interests of society, is often as important as mere certainty, might be fearfully endangered. If the legislature could not establish any such easily ascertainable and convenient evidence of the fact,—but the inquiry must always go to the actual number of persons in the county on the day of election having the legal qualification of electors, it is patent that, at least in the larger and more densely populated counties, an investigation might be opened, the cost and time of which would be simply immense. The injury which would result to the community from the suspense and delay of such an investigation far exceeds that which flows from the possibility that there were enough voters who did not vote, or were not registered, to have changed the result. While the constitution must be accepted as the binding law, yet it must be construed in the light of common customs and accepted facts. And the three ordinary and recognized modes of ascertaining the number of electors are the census, a registration, and the actual voting. Neither of them may, in any given case, be exactly correct.

Yet how little of testimony points with unerring certainty to the ultimate fact! Almost every kind of evidence is liable to come short of absolute exactness. Yet with these as the ordinary evidences of the number of electors, if the constitution sought to compel a resort to other and more difficult, if more accurate, evidence, it would seem as though such testimony ought to have been indicated. It provided for both a census and a registration. Const. art. 2, § 26; art. 5, § 4.

Is it unreasonable to suppose that it contemplated thereby all the uses to which they were ordinarily and might reasonably be put, and among them that of furnishing the evidence of the number of electors? True, the legislature has in this respect failed to avail itself of either of these two kinds of testimony. But is it thereby restricted from falling back upon that testimony which, in the absence of census and registration, is the ordinarily accepted evidence of the number of electors, to-wit, the number of votes cast? It is a general rule, in respect to elections, that where the number of the electoral body is fixed, as in case of the directors or members of a corporation, or a legislature, there a majority means a majority of the whole body. But where the electoral body is indefinite in numbers, as in ordinary popular elections, there a majority means a majority of the votes actually cast. But it is said that the framers of the constitution evidently had this general rule in mind, and made special provisions for the several elections. Thus, for the passage of any bill or joint resolution, "a majority of all the members elected to each house voting in the affirmative" is necessary. Const. art. 2, § 13. To authorize the contraction of certain indebtedness, the proposed law must "be ratified by a majority of all the votes cast at such general election." Article 11, § 6. To adopt amendments to the constitution requires only "a majority of the electors voting on said amendments." Article

14, § 1. Having been so precise in these matters, must it not *530 be held *that they intended to be equally precise in forbidding the change of a county-seat without the consent of a majority of the electors? There is doubtless great force in this argument. But the objection to it is that it simply brings us to the point of greatest difficulty, and that is the determination of what evidence shall be accepted as conclusive of the fact. It must be noticed that the vote of a majority is not necessary, nor even the formality of an election. The consent of a majority of the electors, in whatever form expressed, whether in election or by petition or otherwise, is sufficient. May it not be said, with great force, as it is often said in reference to ordinary popular elections, that those not voting consent to the action of those voting? Suppose that the matter was thrown open to full investigation, and an inquiry made as to the actual number of electors present in the county on the day of elections, would it be other than carrying out the strict letter of the constitution to inquire as to each elector not voting whether he consented to the change, and, if the same proportion ran through the non-voting as the voting electors, to uphold and enforce the already declared result? And yet the mere statement of such a range of inquiry carries its own refutation.

It seems to us, therefore, that where the legislature has provided an election as the means of ascertaining the wishes of the electors of a county in reference to a change of the county-seat, and has made no provision for a registration, and has designated no other list or roll as the evidence of the number of electors, it may, under the constitutional provision quoted, declare that the place receiving a majority of the votes cast shall be the county-seat. As these county-seat elections cannot be held on the days of general elections, these considerations do not apply to cases where two or more questions are submitted at the same election, and more votes are cast upon one question than upon another; for there the highest number of votes cast upon any one question is clear evidence of the number of voters, which may not, in view of any such constitutional restriction as above quoted, be disregarded in any contest arising as to the decision

where two elections are held so near together in time that the courts may fairly say that the difference between the number of votes cast upon the two elections cannot reasonably be accounted for upon the theory of a change in the number of electors. In the consideration of this question we have examined carefully the following cases, some suggested by counsel in this case, others cited by counsel in a case of contested county-seat election, from Osage county, and others not cited by either: Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107, (Gil. 81;); People v. Warfield, 20 Ill. 159; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davidson Co. Ct., 1 Sneed, 691; State v. Winkelmeier, 35 Mo. 103; State v. City of St. Joseph, 37 Mo. 270; State v. Binder, 38 Mo. 450; State v. Sutterfield, 54 Mo. 391; Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544; Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. v. County of Caldwell, 72 N. C. 486; Hawkins v. County of Carroll, 50 Miss. 735.

But it is said by counsel that, in the fourth section of the act relating to the removal of county-seats, (chapter 26, Gen. St. 247,) the legislature has provided that, "for the purpose of this act, the number of legal electors in the county shall be ascertained from the last assessment rolls of the several township assessors in the county;" and that this makes another list the evidence of the number of electors, and that, as alleged, according to such list, the requisite majority was not obtained. The only "assessment roll" prepared by township assessors required or authorized at the time of the passage of this county-seat act was that of personal property, on which the assessor was required to place a list of the persons, companies, or corporations in whose names the personal property was listed. Gen. St. 1040, § 61. Now, it was not claimed by counsel that according to this roll the number of votes cast was less than the number of voters; but the roll to which he refers was that required by chapter 86 of the General Statutes, "An act for the registration of adults." But the objection to that is that that registration list is in no particular within the description of the roll specified in said section 4. It is not, or at least was not at the time of the passage of the county-seat act, *532 *a roll prepared by the township assessors, but one prepared by the county assessor. It is in no sense an "assessment roll," but a registration list. It is not, therefore, within the letter of the statute; and there was at the time an assessment roll prepared by the township assessors, as above indicated, which was within the letter. Nor is it within the spirit; for this registration list is not of electors, but of "adults, over twenty-one years of age." It includes both sexes, aliens, convicts, and other non-electors, as well as the electors, and no discrimination or distinction is called for; so that there is no means of ascertaining from this list the exact number of electors, and no greater probability of exactness than is furnished by the returns of votes cast. And to make such registration list conclusive in the matter of the voting, as well as to the number of petitioners, is in plain disregard of the express direction of the legislature that a majority of the votes cast shall decide.

These questions arise on a motion to quash an alternative writ of mandamus, and the motion to quash must be sustained.

ISABEL JOHNSON v. E. D. CAIN.

July Term, 1875.

Equity: Claim for Improvements on Lands: Death of Debtor. Where A. employs C. to make improvements on land occupied by A. as a homestead, and gives to C. his promissory note therefor, and A. afterwards dies intestate, and an administrator is appointed, and C. presents his claim against the estate, which is allowed by the probate court, and there is no personal property with which to pay the debts, held, that a showing by the plaintiff, C., of the foregoing facts, is not sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action in the district court against the administrator and two out of five of the heirs for the purpose of obtaining judgment *538 against the said two heirs to sell their interest *in said land for the purpose of satisfying the plaintiff's claim. Whatever remedy the plaintiff may have in such a case, where he has no specific lien on the particular piece of land in question, where the estate is still unsettled, where the administrator is still acting, and where the probate court is still exercising jurisdiction over the estate, is in the probate court.<sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup>As to jurisdiction of probate court to order sale of homestead, see Fudge v. Fudge, 28 Kan. 419; as to jurisdiction of probate and district courts, respectively, see Klemp v. Winter, 28 Kan. 705, and cases there cited. Where probate court has jurisdiction, and is still acting, actions in other courts in reference to the same subject-matter should not be encouraged. Stratton v. McCandless, 27 Kan. 296.

Error from Neosho district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

C. O. French, for plaintiff in error.

Cain's action cannot be maintained. The petition does not show a final settlement of the estate of Daniel Campbell. An averment "that there is no personal property belonging to said estate" is not equivalent to an averment that the estate is insolvent. There must be an averment of final settlement and insolvency of the estate before Cain can proceed against the heirs in equity.

The petition shows a valid and subsisting cause of action against the estate of Campbell, which claim was duly allowed in the probate court. The petition demands no relief against the heirs named as defendants. It simply asks a judgment against the administrator. The judgment of the probate court gives Cain all that he asks in the district court.

The facts alleged in the petition do not entitle Cain to the relief granted by the district court. At the time of the making of the contract for digging the well, after settlement of the contract price by notes, and at the time of the death of Daniel Campbell, said Campbell had only a possessory right in the described real estate. His equity in the land was not a subject of lien,—was not a subject of execution. When the widow and the heirs took said land *534 they took it *free from any lien,—if such there could be. This is the proper construction of section 2, c. 33, Gen. St., when construed in connection with section 1, c. 38. The exemption from sale is only between the immediate parties to the contract. The lien for the erection of improvements (chapter 33) must be in the nature of an incumbrance, like a mechanic's lien. The taking of the individual notes of Campbell by Cain for the work, and the putting of them into judgment in a court of record, was a waiver of any lien upon the real estate. Cain could not have filed the notes for even a mechanic's lien. The legislature first conferred this right in 1871. The notes were executed in 1870. A judgment against an administrator, as such, cannot be a lien on the real estate of the decedent. This is too self-evident for argument. How, then, can the court declare it a lien, and incumber the homestead? It is manifestly inequitable to declare the judgment a lien on the real estate, dismiss the suit as to three of the five heirs, and order the right, title, and interest of two only of the heirs to be sold upon execution to pay the whole debt.

Plaintiff in error can only complain of the judgment against herself, and we urge that the petition, as to the administrator, was sufficient to sustain the judgment against him. Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. *658; Simpson v. Cochran, 23 Iowa, 81; Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11. The objection to the sufficiency of the petition is made for the first time in this court, and it is well settled that such objection will be regarded with disfavor. The interest of plaintiff in error in the lands described in the petition is only such as she derived by inheritance from Daniel Campbell. Said premises, in his life-time, were subject to the payment of the debt due Cain, the debt being an obligation contracted for the erection of improvements on said premises. Const. art. 15, § 9. It can make no difference, therefore, that the premises were a homestead, excepting for the purpose of determining whether plaintiff in error was *a proper party defendant, and whether it be a proper practice to make all parties defendants who are interested in the property sought to be subjected to the payment of the judgment, in a case like the present. The heirs of Campbell could take no greater estate, nor more superior right in the premises, than the party possessed from whom they inherit. 4 Kent, Comm. 419; Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 25. If Cain could enforce payment out of said premises while Campbell was alive, it will hardly be contended that his death worked an extinguishment of the right of lien, or to enforce payment out of the said premises, in the hands of the heirs as against innocent purchasers from Campbell; and it is immaterial to this case what the rights of plaintiff in error would be if she held title by purchase instead of by descent. But, claiming by descent, we conclude she received the estate subject to its liability to be sold to pay the debts of the defendant in error.

On the direct question of the power of the court to declare the judgment a lien on the premises, we submit that, if there be error in this, it is error without prejudice to plaintiff in error, and the judgment will not be reversed on that ground. Civil Code, §§ 140, 304; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Pointer, 9 Kan. *620. It cannot matter, in legal effect, if the premises are subject to sale to satisfy the money judgment against the administrator,—and the court has a right to determine that question in this action,—whether the land be simply declared subject to sale to satisfy the debt, or the debt be declared a lien on the premises, or that the premises be ordered sold, and the proceeds be applied to the payment of the money due on the judgment. Certainly, if the premises can be sold at all to satisfy the judgment, plaintiff in error ought not to complain that the judgment is too strong. If, without being declared a lien, the purchaser could obtain a good title, as to her, the only effect of this provision would seem to be to more fully assure the purchaser that his title will be perfect, and thus insure competition at the sale.

*536 *VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by Cain against the administrator and heirs of the estate of Daniel Campbell, deceased. The facts of the case seem to be about as follows: During the year 1870, Campbell, with his wife and family, resided upon and occupied said land, although the title thereto was in the United States. Campbell employed Cain to dig a well on the premises, which Cain did, and, in consideration therefor, Campbell gave to Cain his promissory notes. Afterwards, Campbell died intestate, and his widow, (Anna Campbell,) who had been appointed administratrix of his estate, then procured (by entry) the title to said land from the United States for said heirs. Afterwards, Cain presented his claim against the estate for the amount due on said notes, which claim was allowed by the probate court. Mrs. Campbell then died intestate. No administrator was appointed for her estate, but Thomas Leahy was afterwards appointed administrator de bonis non of said Daniel Campbell's estate. Cain then commenced this action in the district court against said Leahy, as administrator, and against all the heirs—five in number—of said Daniel Campbell and Mrs. Anna Campbell. The object of the action was to recover a money judgment against the administrator for the said amount allowed by the probate court, and to have said land sold to satisfy said judgment. Afterwards, Cain dismissed his action as against three of the heirs, and then took judgment by default against the administrator and the other two heirs, one of whom was the present plaintiff in error, Mrs. Isabel Johnson.

The judgment rendered against Mrs. Johnson was that her interest in said land should be sold to satisfy said money judgment rendered against the administrator. The only question for this court to consider is whether this judgment rendered against Mrs. Johnson is correct or not. No other person is complaining in this court. We hardly think such judgment is correct. It will be noticed *537 from the record that *the estate of Daniel Campbell had not been settled when this action was commenced. The administrator was still acting, and, of course, the probate court was still exercising jurisdiction over the estate. There may have been a vast number and amount of other debts against the estate yet unsettled and unpaid. And Mr. Cain had no specific lien upon this particular piece of land in controversy. That the district court has jurisdiction, as against heirs, to hear and determine all the rights of such heirs in and to any specific piece of land, in any suit appertaining to the title to such land, or to some specific lien or incumbrance thereon, although the land may belong to a decedent's unsettled estate, and although the probate court may still be exercising jurisdiction over such estate, we suppose will not be questioned. And that specific liens may generally be ascertained and foreclosed in the district court, although an administrator and heirs may be necessary parties to the action, we suppose will also be admitted. Shoemaker v. Brown, 10 Kan. *383. And we also suppose that it will be admitted that in many cases where an estate has already been settled, and the administrator discharged, courts of equity (such as the district courts are) will exercise jurisdiction over the heirs, and over any matter pertaining to such estate, so as to do justice to any person holding a claim against such estate. Shoemaker v. Brown, supra. And, generally, courts of equity will exercise jurisdiction over estates, and over heirs, executors, administrators, devisees, legatees, and creditors of such estates, whenever it is equitable and right that they should do so. Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. 619. But courts of equity never exercise jurisdiction where it would be inequitable to do so, and in many cases do not exercise jurisdiction where the plaintiff has another plain and adequate remedy by an ordinary legal proceeding, or where an adequate remedy is specifically given to him by statute. Before proceeding further, however, we would say that we shall decide this case upon the theory that Daniel Campbell owned said land when he died, (although this might be questioned as a fact,) and that he left it subject to the payment of all his debts, or, at *538 *least, to all debts contracted for improvements on the land.

And, upon this theory or assumption, may this action against Mrs. Johnson be maintained? We think not. It lacks equity in several particulars. Now, as we have before stated, there may be a vast number of other claims, equal, or even prior, in law and equity, to the plaintiff's claims, still outstanding against said estate. And there may or may not be a vast number of other pieces of land belonging to the estate with which such claims may be paid. Now, would it be equitable to allow each holder of a claim to select his own piece of land from which to pay his debt? If such were allowed, the rights of many innocent third parties might unnecessarily be disturbed; and there might, indeed, be numerous, unavoidable, and inextricable conflicts between even the claimholders themselves. But, even if everything else were fair and equitable, it would certainly seem to be unfair and inequitable to allow separate actions to be prosecuted, separate orders for the sale of the different pieces of land to be entered, separate advertisements of sales to be published, and separate sales to be made, when the probate court, which has a list of all claims presented against the estate, might, by one order, cause a sufficient amount of the lands belonging to the estate to be sold to satisfy all the debts, and when such land might all be advertised and sold at one time, and thereby save all the costs and great inconvenience of separate orders, separate advertisements, separate sales, and separate adjustments of the proceeds of such sales. But suppose that, instead of there being several pieces of land belonging to the estate, there were only one, would it be equitable in that case for one claimholder to have that land sold to pay his claim, when many of the other claims might be prior to or of a higher class than his? Suppose the estate were insolvent, must his claim be paid in full, or as far as the property will go, at the expense of all the others? And, taking the present case, is it equitable that the interest of two of the heirs in said land should be taken to pay the plaintiff's claim, when there are three other heirs,—five in all? Indeed, what *539 is *there equitable about the plaintiff's claim? The plaintiff originally had a claim against the estate on said notes; but such claim was purely of a legal character. He had it established in the probate court against the administrator, thereby converting it into a judgment. But that did not convert it into an equitable demand against either the heirs or the administrator; and nothing has since transpired to give it the character of an equitable demand.

For the purpose of this case, we shall assume that said land is still a homestead, (though this is not shown by the record,) and therefore that it is not subject to any of the ordinary debts against the estate, but that it is subject to such of the debts only as are specific liens upon the land, or to such as have been contracted for the purchase money, or for improvements made on the land, and that the plaintiff's debt is one of those contracted for improvements made on the land; and therefore that while this land is exempt, under the homestead exemption laws, from being applied in payment of any of the ordinary debts of the estate, yet that it is no more exempt from being applied in payment of the plaintiff's debt than any other lands belonging to the estate. And still we do not think that all these facts, taken together, but without the aid of other facts, are sufficient to authorize the plaintiff to seek the equitable jurisdiction of the district court for the purpose of collecting his claim. If Mr. Campbell were still living, the plaintiff could sue either in the district or in a justice's court, and, after obtaining judgment, (his claim being for improvements on lands,) could reach Mr. Campbell's homestead with an execution, without any aid from a court of equity. An execution for that purpose could be issued direct from a judgment in the district court, and could be issued from a transcript of a justice's judgment filed in the office of the clerk of the district court. In either case the judgment would be a legal judgment, in contradistinction to an equitable judgment. But, Mr. Campbell having died, the plaintiff properly obtained *540 a judgment on his claim in the probate court; and, having done so, he might then have obtained an order from *the probate court authorizing the administrator to sell this land, or any other land belonging to the estate, for the purpose of paying the plaintiff's debt. But of course the plaintiff would have no right to dictate as to which parcel of the lands belonging to the estate should be sold to satisfy his claim, for it would all be equally liable to be sold for that purpose; and it might be more to the interest of the estate to have some other piece of land sold. And the plaintiff would have no more right to have this land sold than any other creditor of the estate having a claim of equal dignity and rank in law and equity.

The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and cause remanded for further and proper proceedings.

ETTA JONES and others v. AMOS S. LAPHAM.

July Term, 1875.

1. Parties: Foreclosure of Mortgage: Decree. A mortgagor who, subsequently to the execution of the mortgage, has conveyed away all his interest in the mortgaged premises, is not a necessary party to the foreclosure of such mortgage; and, in such case, a decree may be entered which, after finding the amount due on the note, and without any personal judgment for the money, directs a sale of the mortgaged premises in satisfaction of the amount due.
2. Mortgage: By Equitable Owner. A party who holds real estate under a bond for a deed from the owner of the legal title, is in possession thereof, and has made valuable improvements thereon, has such an interest as he can convey by mortgage. [Seaman v. Huffaker, 21 Kan. 262; Laughlin v. Braley, 25 Kan. 147.]
3. ———: Foreclosure: Form of Decree: Sale: Interest Acquired. Where a mortgage appears upon its face to be a mortgage of the entire estate, the decree and order of sale may properly follow the mortgage, but the purchaser will take only the interest of the mortgagor in the premises. In such a case it is no ground for reversal that it appeared on the trial that the mortgagor had only an equitable interest instead *541 of the full legal title, and that the decree did not *direct that proceedings subsequent to the decree should be in accordance with the provisions of sections 481 and following of the Code of Civil Procedure.
4. Liens: Priority of Legal and Equitable. While, in a contest between a lien upon an equitable interest and one upon a full legal title, the latter, though subsequent in time, may be preferred to the former, if the holder thereof be an innocent and bona fide holder without notice, yet it will not be so preferred if he, at the time of obtaining his lien, had full knowledge of the outstanding equity and the prior lien.
5. Notice: Actual and Constructive. A party purchasing a legal estate, having knowledge of an outstanding equitable interest, is chargeable, under our registry statute, with notice of any recorded conveyance or mortgage of such equitable interest.

Error from Allen district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

H. W. Talcott, for plaintiff in error.

If Hull had only an equitable title, he could by his mortgage convey no greater interest. His mortgagee has no greater rights—certainly not as to the legal owner of the property sought to be appropriated—than would a judgment creditor; and yet a judgment creditor cannot subject his debtor's equitable interest to sale except in particular instances, as prescribed by sections 481 to 504 of the Code. See, also, Kiser v. Sawyer, 4 Kan. *503. As neither of the steps required by the statutes was complied with, the equitable interest of Hull could not be sold as prayed for by Lapham, or in the proceedings commenced by him.

Hull did not have a mortgageable interest. William C. Jones, the legal owner, never parted with his title to Hull. Hull had *542 no title, and could convey none, until he paid the *purchase money and got his deed. Stevens v. Chadwick, 10 Kan. *406. Jones had all the rights of a vendor, and could sell to whom he pleased. See Kirkwood v. Koester, 11 Kan. *471. This last case is certainly decisive. It is parallel with the one at bar. The only difference in fact is that Kirkwood's claim was through a judgment and execution lien, while Lapham's is through a mortgage from a man who had no title. If Kirkwood's was worthless as to Koester, so was Lapham's as to plaintiffs in error. If Hull did have an interest that could be mortgaged, he could not convey to Lapham more rights than he had himself. All that Lapham could do on such a mortgage would be to fulfill Hull's contract, and sue Jones for specific performance. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 501; Dressler v. Davis, 7 Wis. 449. But, if Hull had such an interest, it was not that interest that he mortgaged, or attempted to mortgage. There was no attempt to mortgage any particular interest in the property, but it was of the premises itself; it was of something he did not own, and was therefore void as to those who did own.

Allen & Allen and L. W. Keplinger, for defendant in error.

In general, any interest that is tangible may be mortgaged. A person holding land under a contract for a deed may mortgage his interest. Neligh v. Michenor, 11 N. J. Eq. 539; Alderson v. Ames, 6 Md. 52.

Was the record of Hull's mortgage notice thereof to subsequent purchasers having notice of Hull's interest? A purchaser of land in the actual possession of a third party is chargeable with notice of any equitable title of such party, whatever the same may prove to be. McKinzie v. Perrill, 15 Ohio St. 162; Williams v. Sprigg, 6 Ohio St. 594; Brice v. Brice, 5 Barb. 534; Lyons v. Bodenhamer, 7 Kan. *455. The registry of a mortgage is, of itself, notice in law to all subsequent purchasers. Alderson v. Ames, 6 Md. 52; Simpson v. Munde, 3 Kan. *185; Broun v. Simpson, 4 Kan. *76. And it seems the registry of a mere equitable mortgage or incumbrance is notice to the subsequent purchaser of the legal estate, so as to entitle such mortgage to a preference. 1 Johns. Ch. 394. That this is veyance to her, and that her husband, W. C. Jones, acting as her agent, who held part of the legal title, had full knowledge of the rights of Lapham and Hull.

BREWER, J. The facts in this case are as follows: On October 28, 1871, one W. H. Hull was in possession of two lots in the city of Iola, under a bond for a deed from the holders of the legal title. He had paid part of the purchase money, and the time for the payment of the residue had not yet expired. Upon these lots he had made improvements to the amount of $800. On that date he executed a note to defendant in error, and to secure the same gave a mortgage upon these lots. This was recorded November 8, 1871. Subsequently, the holders of the legal title conveyed the property to Maggie Murray, one of the plaintiffs in error, and she conveyed an interest to Etta Jones, the other plaintiff in error. These conveyances were subsequent to the expiration of the time for Hull to complete his payments. Maggie Murray paid $40 to the holders of the legal title for the conveyance, but Etta Jones paid nothing to Maggie Murray for her deed. They paid Hull, however, $220 for his improvements. Maggie Murray had knowledge at the time of her conveyance of Hull's interest and possession, but not of Lapham's mortgage. Etta Jones knew nothing of the conveyance to herself, or anything about the matter, until suit was commenced to foreclose the mortgage. *544 Her husband, however, who acted as her *agent in the matter, had full knowledge of Hull's interest and possession, and of Lapham's mortgage. In fact, he was one of the holders of the legal title who had executed to Hull the bond for a deed. The deeds to Maggie Murray, and from her to Etta Jones, and the payments of money, were a continuous and simple transaction. Upon these facts the district court rendered a decree of foreclosure and sale of the property. Two or three questions are presented for decision.

It is insisted that no decree of foreclosure could be entered because no legal service was made upon Hull, the mortgagor. Service was attempted by publication, but it is insisted that this was fatally defective. Conceding this to be so, (though we express no opinion as to whether it was so or not,) yet these plaintiffs in error are not in a position to take advantage of any such defect. The petition alleges the execution of the note and mortgage, and that so much remains due on the note. These plaintiffs in error in their answer make no denial of this. As between Lapham and them, it is an admitted fact. It also appears that they are the present holders of the legal title. Hence, though the mortgagor was never in court, was never even made a party to the action, the court might find the amount of the lien, and direct the sale of the property to satisfy that lien. It often happens that the title to property subject to a lien passes through several parties subsequent to the date of the lien. Now, if no personal judgment is sought, but only the subjection of the property to the payment of the incumbrance, it is enough to bring the present holders of the title into court, and, the amount of the lien being admitted or established, a valid decree of foreclosure may be entered, and the defendants cannot disturb the decree on the ground that the party who originally created the lien was not made a defendant.

Again, it is said that Hull had no mortgageable interest in the land. This is a mistake. True, he did not hold the legal title, but he had an interest in the property. A bond for a deed is often in equity declared to be equivalent to a conveyance of the property with *545 a mortgage *back. His was an interest which was the subject of sale, and would pass by a deed of the property. Gen. St. 999, § 1, cl. 8; page 185, § 2. It was an interest which he could use as security for a loan, and could pass for that purpose by an ordinary real-estate mortgage.

Again, it is insisted that as Hull only had an equitable interest in the property it could not be sold under an ordinary foreclosure proceeding, but could be reached only in the manner indicated in sections 481 to 504 of the Civil Code, providing for "proceedings in aid of execution." Here, too, we must differ from counsel. If the mortgage had been of a specific interest, the decree could have been to sell that interest; and, under the order of sale, the sheriff could have sold that interest. Being a mortgage of apparently the entire title, the decree properly followed the mortgage, and the officer must proceed to sell the entire estate; but the purchaser takes only "as good and as perfect an estate in the premises therein mentioned as was vested" in the mortgagor. It is unnecessary to decide whether, upon an ordinary execution, an equitable interest could be seized and sold. All we decide is that when a mortgage appears upon its face to convey the entire estate, the decree may follow the mortgage, and the purchaser at the sale will get whatever estate or interest the mortgagor had, and that it is no ground of error that the mortgagor had only an equitable interest in the land.

Finally, it is insisted that, notwithstanding the mortgage, the conveyances to the plaintiffs in error passed a good title, free from any incumbrance of the mortgage. Kirkwood v. Koester, 11 Kan. *471, is cited as authority upon this. There is this manifest difference between the cases: In that, the parties who claimed adversely to the lien upon the equitable interest were innocent and bona fide incumbrancers of the legal title, without any notice of either the equity or the lien thereon. Here, the purchasers of the legal title had full knowledge of the equitable interest,—in fact purchased it,—and one *546 of them, Etta *Jones, through her agent, had full knowledge of the mortgage upon such interest. Now, while it may be true that in a contest between a lien upon an equitable interest, and a lien upon the legal title, the latter, though subsequent in time, will be preferred to the former, if the holder thereof be an innocent and bona fide holder without notice, yet the reverse will be true, if he, at the time of obtaining his lien, had full knowledge of the outstanding equity, and the prior lien thereon. As to Etta Jones, it appears that she, through her agent, had, as stated, full knowledge of both the equitable interest and Lapham's mortgage thereon. As to Maggie Murray, it appears that she had knowledge of the equitable interest, but not of the mortgage. Hull, however, was in possession of the lots, and had made valuable improvements on them. These improvements she bought. Now, section 20 of the conveyance act (Gen. St. 187) provides that "every such instrument in writing [and this, by prior description, includes mortgages, and mortgages upon equitable interests] shall, from the time of filing the same with the register of deeds for record, impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof; and all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees shall be deemed to purchase with notice." While this general provision, as respects notice, may be limited, so far as relates to conveyances or mortgages of equitable interests, by the condition of the legal title, and the knowledge which the holders thereof have of the existence of the equity, as indicated in Kirkwood v. Koester, yet, aside from that limitation, it is of controlling force. Whoever buys a legal estate, having knowledge of an outstanding equitable interest, is chargeable with notice of any record of conveyance or incumbrance thereof. Whoever buys an equitable interest in land is also chargeable with like notice. In fact, knowledge of an equitable interest carries with it notice of the condition of such interest as is apparent from the public records.

We see no error in the record, and the judgment must be affirmed. (All the justices concurring.)

*MARY A. SHELLABARGER v. JOHN H. NAFUS.

July Term, 1875.

1. Married Woman: Separate Property: Real Party in Interest. Where the main question in a case is whether a wife (who is the plaintiff) or her husband is the owner of certain personal property, and the court instructs the jury that "if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff in this case is a married woman, and was at the time of bringing this suit, and for some time prior thereto, then the jury must be satisfied from the evidence that the property in controversy in this case was owned by her at the time of her marriage, or is the proceeds or fruit of property so owned, or has come to her by descent, devise, or bequest, from some person other than her husband, or was the fruit of her earnings from her separate trade or business;" and "if the jury should not be satisfied from the evidence of the existence of any of the foregoing propositions, then the jury should find for the defendant;" and, from the evidence in the case, said property may have been the proceeds from a gift to the plaintiff from some person other than her husband: held, that said instruction was erroneous.<sup>1</sup>

2. Witness: Credibility of. The court below instructed the jury as follows: "If you should be satisfied that any witness in this case has willfully and corruptly testified falsely to any material fact, then it is your duty to disregard the whole of the testimony of such witness." Held, that such instruction is erroneous. [Overruling Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. *488, and other cases following that case.]<sup>1</sup>
3. ———: Province of Jury. It is the province of the jury to determine the credibility of witnesses, and the weight of their testimony; and, where any witness has testified willfully, corruptly, and falsely to any material fact, it is the province of the jury to determine how much, or whether the whole, of his testimony should be disregarded. No inflexible rule of law should be interposed between the witness and the jury, commanding the jury to take all, or exclude all, of his testimony.

Error from Neosho district court.

Replevin for 2,120 feet of lumber, brought before a justice of the peace by Mary A. Shellabarger, a married woman. Nafus, defendant, as constable, had taken the property upon process against plaintiff's husband. The case was appealed to the district court, *548 and was there tried at the December *term, 1871. Verdict and judgment for defendant.

C. F. Hutchings, for plaintiff.

The paper produced by defendant, if it really was an execution, was not produced by the justice; nor was the justice produced as a witness; nor was the record of any judgment produced; nor was the signature of the justice proved; nor was any evidence whatever introduced to show that the husband of plaintiff had ever been indebted to any person; nor was any other foundation whatever laid. Counsel hand a paper to defendant, and ask him what it is, and he is allowed to pronounce it "an execution," and the court thereafter recognizes the paper in that character, and in its instructions calls it an "execution," and says it was issued by a justice of the peace; and without any further proof it is used in evidence, against our objection. Upon what theory could the defendant, in an action between himself and a third party, introduce in evidence his own indorsement, made on a writ as an officer, and made after the commencement of the action? The statement of the defendant in the certificate indorsed on that paper was no evidence to show whether this property belonged to the plaintiff or not, and was utterly incompetent to prove anything in this action. If a constable can seize property of A., and then, after suit brought by A. to recover it, write on a piece of paper that it is the property of B., and introduce his paper to prove it, there is very little security for private property. If the doctrine ruled by the district court be correct, then any person claiming to be a constable may confiscate property found in the possession of a married woman, unless she is the absolute owner, and his justification is complete by showing her coverture, though his writ may be forged, or based upon a void judgment, and she a stranger even to that. It is the settled rule that a plaintiff who attempts to justify the taking of goods *549 on an execution set in motion by him *must show a valid judgment. Allen v. Corlew, 10 Kan. *70; Kerr v. Mount, 28 N. Y.

If said pretended execution was competent evidence, still it certainly will not be contended that it was conclusive, nor did its introduction authorize the court to take any question of fact from the jury. It will be observed that the defendant offered no proof to rebut the plaintiff's claim of ownership except this paper, and indorsement thereon. The plaintiff certainly made a prima facie case, and the jury must have found for the plaintiff, unless the defendant had overcome her prima facie case. It was a question for the jury whether the execution and indorsement were genuine, and whether the defendant did in fact take the property by virtue of the same; yet the court in all of its instructions treats the defendant's defense as established, and tells the jury in the first instruction that the only question is whether the plaintiff has a certain ownership, and if she has not, then they must find for defendant; and the court reiterates the same thing in his general instructions. These instructions are glaringly fallacious. Suppose the jury believed that the property was not plaintiff's, but was her husband's, and was in her possession; and they further believed that the defendant did not take it by virtue of the execution, as he claims; that there was no judgment *550 against the husband; that the *husband owed no debts; that the pretended execution was fictitious; and that the defendant took the property forcibly, without any right so to do,—would not the plaintiff be entitled to a return of the property, though she had no title, except the possession, when it was taken from her? The court instructed the jury that the plaintiff could only recover by showing herself to be the owner of the property. Now, if the property was in the possession of the plaintiff when defendant took it, then she was entitled to a return of the property, unless the defendant had some lawful right to take it; and it is only necessary for the plaintiff in any case to show a right of possession. Code, subd. 2, §§ 177, 185.

The instruction that the jury must reject the whole testimony of a witness, if they should find the witness had willfully testified falsely and corruptly, may be warranted by former decisions of this court. But it is clearly wrong in principle. To say to a jury that they are the judges of all the facts, and in the same breath to say that under certain circumstances it is their duty to disregard the whole testimony of a witness, and not to use their judgment at all concerning it, and then to tell them (as was done in a subsequent instruction) that under their oaths they cannot ignore any testimony, but can only determine the measure of credit to be given it, is so grossly illogical and inconsistent that it is idle to say that courts which administer the science of law can tolerate it.

Stillwell & Baylies, for defendant.

So far as the judgment and execution mentioned in the answer of defendant are concerned, they stood admitted for want of a reply, and the only question to be determined was in regard to the ownership and right of possession of the property in controversy. We believe the instructions given to be correct, and they do not require any argument from us to uphold them.

The record shows that the property was not in the possession *551 of plaintiff at the time the defendant levied thereon, *but was in possession of the husband of plaintiff. That being the case, it was absolutely necessary for plaintiff to have *demand*ed of the defendant the return of the property before bringing suit. Killey v. Scannell, 12 Cal. 73. It nowhere appears from the record that such a demand was ever made, which omission in proof is certainly fatal.

The plaintiff being a married woman, and claiming to be owner of the property in her own right, and the evidence showing it was in a foreign jurisdiction that she became possessed (if at all) of the property by virtue of which she claimed to be the owner of the lumber sued for, did it not then devolve upon her to show that, by the laws of such foreign jurisdiction, she became the owner of said property there, freed from the claim of her husband? By the common law the husband, by virtue of the marriage, became the owner of the goods and chattels of the wife, and was entitled to the rents and profits of her realty. The married woman's act of our own state, of course, has no extraterritorial force, and unless the plaintiff became the owner by the laws of Michigan of the property she claimed to have purchased there, and which furnished the means by which she claimed to have acquired the lumber in dispute, then she could not have subsequently acquired a title, and thereby defeat the vested title of her husband by the mere act of removing to this state. It was therefore necessary for her to prove and establish as a fact the laws of the state of Michigan in force at the time of her alleged original acquisitions, and thereby show, if she could, that under said laws she acquired a valid title notwithstanding her coverture. 2 Kent, Comm. 93.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action of replevin, brought by Mary A. Shellabarger against John H. Nafus. It appears from the record that the defendant was a constable; that he held an execution against the property of the plaintiff's husband, one Solomon Shellabarger; that the constable levied said execution upon the property in *552 controversy as the prop*erty of the plaintiff's husband; that the plaintiff then replevied the property, claiming the same as hers, and claiming that it never did belong to her husband. When the constable levied on said property he found it on land occupied by the plaintiff and her husband as their homestead, the title to which land was in her husband. But the property was not in the actual possession of either. It had been in the actual custody of the husband, but it does not appear from the record that it was ever in the actual custody of the plaintiff. The whole case in the court below depended entirely upon who owned the property. All other questions were merely incidental or subsidiary to that. If the plaintiff owned the property, she had a right to recover, however good the execution may have been. But if her husband owned it, then she had no right to recover, however worthless the execution may have been. If her husband owned the property, and the constable, for any cause, obtained it wrongfully from him, then no person but her husband had any right to sue. A wife has never been recognized as the legal guardian of her husband to such an unlimited extent that she may protect his legal rights by herself becoming the plaintiff, and prosecuting the action for him in her own name. We mention this merely because it seems to be claimed that if the defendant failed to prove that the execution was founded on a valid judgment, by the introduction in evidence of the record of such judgment, that the plaintiff must then recover, although the property might at the time the execution was levied have belonged to her husband, and not to herself. A vast number of objections were made, and a vast number of exceptions taken, by the plaintiff in the court below, and a large number of questions have been raised and discussed in this court; but, with the exception of the errors hereinafter mentioned, we think the court below committed no substantial error.

As before stated, the main question in the case in the court below was, who owned the property in controversy? With reference to ownership, the court below instructed the jury as follows:

*553 *"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff in this case was a married woman, and was at the time of bringing this suit, and for some time prior thereto, then the jury must be satisfied from the evidence that the property in controversy in this case was owned by her at the time of her marriage, or is the proceeds or fruit of property so owned, or has come to her by descent, devise, or bequest from some person other than her husband, or was the fruit of her earnings from her separate trade or business. If the jury should not be satisfied from the evidence of the existence of any of the foregoing propositions, then you should find for the defendant."

Now, the foregoing instruction is not correct, as an abstract proposition of law, nor is it correct as applied to this case. If the property in controversy was a gift to the plaintiff from any person except her husband, or if it was the proceeds, issues, or profits of any such gift, or if it was the proceeds, issues, or profits of any property which had previously come to her by descent, devise, or bequest, it would certainly be her own separate property, and be exempt from any execution issued against her husband's property. Indeed, if she had stolen it, and then claimed it as her own, we think she would have been the owner thereof as against all the world except the real owner. According to the plaintiff's testimony, she has owned property, and been buying, selling, and trafficking in property, for several years. Some of her property came to her from her father's estate, some from her own earnings, some from the proceeds, issues, and profits of other property, and the source of some of it was not shown. The property in controversy was purchased, as the plaintiff testifies, with her own money; but where she got the money is not very definitely shown. From anything that appears in the record, the greater portion of it may have been a gift, or the proceeds of a gift, from some person other than her husband. But, however it may have come, she testifies positively that the money was hers. Whether it was hers or not was a fact for the jury; and, if the case had been submitted to the jury on *554 proper instructions, we think the verdict would have *been conclusive. But as the foregoing instruction was erroneous and prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff, and as the verdict and judgment were against the plaintiff, we think the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and a new trial granted.

There is another question raised in this case; and, as the case must be sent back to the court below for a new trial upon the grounds heretofore mentioned, we think this is as good a time as we shall ever have to present our views upon this other question. The court below also instructed the jury as follows: "If you should be satisfied that any witness in this case has willfully and corruptly testified falsely to any material fact, then it is your duty to disregard the whole of the testimony of such witness." Under this instruction the jury evidently disregarded the testimony of the plaintiff. This instruction is fully warranted by the decisions of this court. See Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. *488; Hale v. Rawallie, 8 Kan. *136; State v. Horne, 9 Kan. *131; Russell v. State, 11 Kan. *322, *323; Gannon v. Stevens, 13 Kan. *461. And yet we think the instruction is erroneous. Mead v. McGraw, 19 Ohio St. 55, 64; State v. Williams, 2 Jones, (N. C.) 257, 262; Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 568, 570; Knowles v. People, 15

Mich. 408; Fisher v. People, 20 Mich. 147; Lewis v. Hodgdon, 17 Me. 267, 273; Blanchard v. Pratt, 37 Ill. 243, 246; State v. Stout, 31 Mo. 406; Callahan v. Shaw, 24 Iowa, 441. Whether the jury should disregard the whole of the testimony of a witness in such a case is a matter resting entirely with them. They are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight of their testimony. They may wholly disregard the testimony of any witness if, from the evidence before them, they consider such witness as wholly unworthy of credit. Or they may disregard a portion of the testimony of any witness, and give to every other portion full faith, credit, and consideration. Or they may give to one portion of the testimony of any witness greater weight and credit than they may to some other portion of such testimony. The jury ought to be allowed to weigh every portion of the testimony of every witness, and to give to each portion of the testimony just such consideration as it is entitled to, considering all the facts and circumstances of the case. It is within the common experience of all men that the different portions of the testimony of the same witness may differ vastly in value. A witness may, under great temptations, and in some isolated case, swear falsely; and yet, where the temptation is removed, where there is nothing to operate on his hopes and fears, his passions and prejudices, where he has no interest in the matter except to tell the truth, his testimony may be of great value. And, this being so, no inflexible rule of law should be interposed between the witness and the jury, commanding the jury to take all, or to exclude all, of his testimony. So far as the decision made by this court in case of Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. *488, and the decisions in such other cases as follow that case, are in conflict with the foregoing views, said cases are overruled.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

EPHRAIM KENNEDY v. SAMUEL BECK.

July Term, 1875.

1. Præcipe: Form and Sufficiency. A præcipe filed with the petition in an action of replevin, directing that "the clerk of the district court will please issue process in the above-entitled action, returnable according to law," is sufficient to require the issuing of a summons, as well as the issuing of an order of delivery.
2. Replevin: Order of Delivery: Order to Vacate or Set Aside, Reviewable. In an action of replevin the order for the delivery of the property issued at the commencement of the action, together with the necessary incidental proceedings, is a provisional remedy; and therefore, under the statute which provides that the supreme court may reverse, vacate, or modify an order of the district court that "discharges, va-*556 cates, or modifies a provisional remedy," an order of *the district court that vacates and sets aside such an order of delivery, with all the incidental proceedings connected therewith, is immediately reviewable by the supreme court, and it is not necessary, in such a case, for the aggrieved party to wait until the final termination of the action in the district court before bringing the question to this court.

3. ———: Order Irregularly Issued: Waiver. It is a great irregularity for the clerk of the district court to issue an order of delivery in replevin several days before he issues the summons; but where the irregularity is purely the mistake of the clerk, and where the defendant, after the service of the order of delivery and the summons, answers to the merits of the action, without raising any question concerning such irregularity, he thereby so waives the irregularity that he cannot afterwards raise any question concerning it.

Replevin brought by Kennedy against A. W. Green, Nicholas Clemens, Judson McNall, Charles McNall, Samuel Beck, C. P. Newell, and Webster McNall, to recover possession of a portable steam saw-mill, valued at $2,000. An order of delivery was issued and executed, which was afterwards, at the May term, 1874, and on motion of defendant Beck, vacated and set aside on the ground that said order of delivery was issued, not at or after the commencement of the action, but some eighteen days previously to the issuing of the summons.

A. J. Banta and J. A. Linville, for plaintiff.

Section 176 of the Civil Code provides that in an action to recover possession of specific personal property the plaintiff may, at the commencement of the suit, or at any time before answer, claim the immediate delivery of such property. Section 57 provides that a civil action may be commenced in a court of record, by filing in the office of the clerk of the proper court a petition, and causing a summons to issue thereon. Defendant Beck says in his motion that "the plaintiff did not commence said action by causing a summons to be issued on the petition by him filed;" and claims that the
sued; that the order could not issue, under said section 176, until the suit was commenced; and that, the summons not having been issued before the order, the order of delivery is absolutely void, and all proceedings thereunder a nullity. No objection is made to the affidavit and undertaking, and the court was not asked to set aside the order because the affidavit and undertaking were void by reason of having been filed before the summons issued. We submit that the order of delivery cannot be set aside unless the affidavit and undertaking are void; for, if good, they support the order, and the defendant is safe. He will get the property, or its value, if the court adjudges that it be returned to him. No objection is made to the sufficiency of the sureties. But if the order of the district court is carried out, and the property delivered to Beck, what security has the plaintiff? The defendant making this motion has answered. An issue is made for trial. Under the said section 176 the plaintiff cannot now have an order of delivery, because defendants have answered. The result is that, if the district court is correct, the plaintiff must at once dismiss his suit, if that is possible, and then the defendant Beck, under his answer, would ask to have his right to the property inquired into. And all the while defendant Beck has possession of the property, and can dispose of it, and the plaintiff has no redress. The order vacating said order of delivery, therefore, practically defeats the action, for it would be folly to proceed with no security for the delivery of the property in case the court adjudges that the plaintiff is the owner of it. So it is evident that substantial rights of the plaintiff are affected by this order.

There is no doubt an irregularity, in this: that the summons should have gone out when the order did. But the plaintiff is not at fault. He did all the law required him to do. He filed his petition, præcipe, affidavit, and undertaking regularly. "The clerk shall issue a summons on a written præcipe." Code, § 59. This is nothing more than *558 an irregularity arising from the neglect of the clerk, and does not affect in the least the power of the clerk to issue the order of delivery. Because the clerk did not do all of his duty, does that take away his power to do a part? The theory that the clerk had no power to issue the order till he issued the summons is untenable. It is the constant practice to issue both together, and when the undertaking and affidavit are filed regularly, as in this case, the order is not void simply because the clerk failed to issue the summons with it. The action is commenced, for all the purposes of this controversy, when the petition is filed. There are no set series of acts that must all be performed before the suit is commenced. It is commenced when the first step is taken so as to allow the filing of the affidavit and undertaking, and the issuing of the order of delivery to follow immediately. The action is pending so as to charge third persons with notice of its pendency when the petition is filed. Code, § 81. Suppose a defective service is set aside: another summons issues on the same petition. It is evident that the filing of the petition is the initiatory step which gives foundation for what follows. If the issuing of the order in this case was a void act, so was the filing of the affidavit and undertaking. The truth is, to set aside the order of delivery in this case is an absurdity. If the bond and affidavit were void absolutely, then the clerk would have issued without authority, and the order could be set aside, and the reason would be plain enough. Code, § 189. But setting aside the order of delivery when the affidavit and undertaking are without question good, is incomprehensible. If the order was defective, or served defectively, those things would be amendable. But no questions of that kind are raised. The only objection is that the order is void because issued too soon. It seems to us that the irregularity complained of does not affect any rights of defendant Beck, or of any of the defendants; much less does it affect substantial rights. Besides, the defendant making this motion having answered, he is certainly not in position to complain for that reason.

The order complained of was not a final order, such as can be made the subject of review in this court by this proceeding. It did not involve the merits of the action, or prevent a judgment, or affect the substantial rights of either party. This court cannot, before the merits of the action have been reached in the district court, consider the alleged error.

The record shows that plaintiff filed his petition on the twenty-seventh of January, and on the same day caused an order of delivery to issue, returnable in ten days; that the property was taken on the following day, and delivered to plaintiff; that on the sixteenth of February the clerk issued summons. No written præcipe for summons was on file. Section 57 of the Code defines when an action is commenced. Said order of delivery was issued and returned eighteen days before plaintiff had any case in court. Section 176 of the Code defines when an order of delivery for property can be had. There is no provision in our statute whereby plaintiff can take property, or have an order of delivery therefor, before the commencement of an action or issuing summons. The property in question was taken from defendant, under cloak of legal process, by the issuing of an order of delivery, and his motion to set aside all the proceedings had prior to summons issued was properly sustained.

VALENTINE J. This was an action of replevin brought by Kennedy against Samuel Beck and six others. The only rulings of the court below of which the plaintiff now complains, are such as were made in favor of the defendant Beck, and against the plaintiff. The facts of the case necessary to be known, in order to have a correct understanding of said rulings, are as follows: On January 27, 1874, the plaintiff filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of Smith county his petition, affidavit, undertaking, præcipe, and some *560 *other papers, for the purpose of commencing this action of replevin. No question is now raised with regard to the sufficiency of any of the papers except the præcipe; and we may as well consider the question of its sufficiency here as in any other place. The defendant claims that there was "no written præcipe for summons on file." The body of the præcipe filed reads as follows: "The clerk of the district court will please issue process in the above-entitled action, returnable according to law." We suppose the only objection to this præcipe is that it says "process," and does not say "summons."

We think the præcipe was sufficient both for the summons and for the order of delivery.

The order of delivery was issued on the same day said papers were filed, and was duly served and returned within two days thereafter. The summons was not issued, however, until February 16th next following. It was served on all the defendants, and returned within nine days after it was issued. Afterwards, all the defendants answered. Beck answered on March 16th. He set forth in his answer that he was the owner of the property, and claimed a return thereof and damages. On May 5th "the said defendant Beck moves the court to set aside said order for the delivery of said property to the plaintiff, and declare all proceedings thereunder null and void, and to award to said defendant the right to the possession of said property." On May 7th the court below sustained this motion, and the plaintiff excepted; and this is the ruling of which the plaintiff now complains. On May 9th the case was continued by the court below until the next term of that court. Whether the case has yet been disposed of in the district court we have no knowledge. The defendant claims that this court cannot review said rulings of the district court until the case is finally disposed of in that court. We think, however, the defendant is mistaken. The statute provides that "the supreme court may also reverse, vacate, or modify any of the *561 following orders of the district *court, or a judge thereof:

First, a final order; second, an order that grants or refuses a continuance,—discharges, vacates, or modifies a provisional remedy," etc. Civil Code, § 542. Now, the action of replevin in this state is both provisional and final. The disposition of the property in controversy pending the litigation is provisional. The disposition of the property by judgment at the termination of the action is final. We suppose there can be no question about this. The order for the delivery of the property issued at the commencement of the action, together with the necessary incidental proceedings, is purely a provisional remedy; and hence, under our Code, an order of the district court that vacates and sets aside said order of delivery, and the incidental proceedings connected therewith, is immediately reviewable by this court; and it is not necessary, in such a case, for the aggrieved party to wait till the final termination of the action in the district court before bringing the question to this court. Besides, the action of replevin is peculiar. The provisional portion thereof is so intimately connected with the ultimate remedy of the litigating parties that the whole proceeding is generally classed among the provisional remedies. And, this being so, it would almost seem that, under another provision of the statute, an order of the district court involving the merits of the provisional portion of the action might be immediately reviewable by the supreme court as "an order that involves the merits of an action, or some part thereof," without waiting for the final termination of the action. Code, § 542, last clause.

We do not decide this question, however, now. But did the district court err in setting aside the order of replevin, with the proceedings connected therewith, and in giving the custody of the property to Beck? Now, if the plaintiff was not entitled to the custody of the property, perhaps he has no right to complain that the court erred in giving the property to Beck, instead of giving it to some one or more of the other defendants, or to a stranger; and hence we pass over this question without further consideration thereof. We shall consider Beck, however, for this purpose as representing *562 *the interests of each and all of the other defendants; and then, did the court below err? We think it did. It was undoubtedly a great irregularity in issuing the order of replevin before issuing the summons; and, if the defendant had made his motion in time, his motion should undoubtedly have been sustained. But, still, it was not the fault of the plaintiff that the irregularity occurred. It was merely the mistake of the clerk; and we do not think it was one of those fatal irregularities that cannot be cured or waived by subsequent proceedings. If the defendant had moved to set aside the order of replevin, and all the proceedings thereunder, before he answered, the motion should have been sustained. In that case the defendant would have got the possession of the property for the time being; and if the plaintiff had then desired to get possession of the property, or to prosecute his action further, he could have got another order of replevin. But the defendant did not make his motion before he answered. He answered first, and made his motion afterwards, and thereby put it beyond the power of the plaintiff to obtain another order of replevin. A plaintiff is entitled, under the statute, to obtain an order of replevin only "at the commencement of the suit, or at any time before answer." Code, § 176. Now, can it be possible that by the mistake of the clerk, and the defendant's answering before he made his motion, that the plaintiff can be virtually and substantially deprived of his action of replevin? We think not. We think the defendant waived the irregularity of issuing the order of replevin before the summons when he answered to the merits of the action. In the interest of justice this ought to be so. When a supposed action is commenced, the defendant, unless he desires to answer to the merits at once, should examine all the proceedings carefully, and see whether he cannot defeat the action for irregularities or defects in the proceedings, and upon motion. If he should think he could not defeat the action in that way, then he should see whether he could not defeat it by plea in abatement or by demurrer.

*568 But if he *thinks he cannot defeat it in any of these ways, then he should finally and lastly plead to the merits of the action; and, when he does so plead, it should generally be regarded that he waives all mere irregularities preceding his plea. Of course, this is not so where the statute provides otherwise; of course, it is not so where justice would be as well or better subserved by a different rule; and, of course, it need not necessarily be so where any of the provisional remedies, other than replevin, are resorted to in connection with the principal or main remedy; for any of the other provisional remedies may be had at any time before or after answer filed, and some of them even after judgment; and, hence, to dissolve or vacate any of the other provisional remedies after answer filed, can do the plaintiff but very little harm, for he can immediately commence again to get another such remedy. Besides, no other provisional remedy is so intimately connected with the main action as the provisional portion of replevin. The provisional remedy in replevin is in fact a part of the main remedy; and to defeat it, may substantially defeat the whole action.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

July Term, 1875.

1. Evidence: Competency to prove Joint Trespass. In an action brought by T. against S., W., and P., the petition alleged, among other things, that "the said defendants did unlawfully and with force assault the said plaintiff, and there shoot and wound with shot from and out of a shotgun held in the hands of the said defendant S." The answer was a general denial. W. and P. had a separate trial, and on such trial the plaintiff introduced evidence, over the objections of the defendants, but with the permission of the court, to prove that S., with the co-operation of *564 W. and P., was illegally, and in violation of a certain statute, hunting on the inclosed lands of another, without the consent of the owner, and that, while so hunting, S., in the absence of W. and P., and without their knowledge, shot with a shotgun at a prairie chicken, and in doing so accidentally shot the plaintiff, and injured him. Held, that the evidence was admissible, and that the court below did not err in allowing it to be introduced.
2. Verdicts not Warranted by the Evidence: Powers of Supreme Court. There was only slight evidence to prove that W. and P. co-operated with S. in his illegal hunting, and the supreme court thinks that the jury erred in finding such co-operation. But still, as there was some evidence to prove co-operation, and as the question of co-operation is one of fact, and comes clearly within the province of the jury to determine, and as the district court approved the verdict of the jury, and rendered judgment thereon, the supreme court cannot now, in contravention of the many decisions previously rendered by this court, reverse the judgment of the district court merely because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence.

3. ———: Powers and Duty of District Court. It is unquestionably the duty of the district court to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial whenever the jury have manifestly mistaken the evidence. And the district courts cannot shirk their responsibility by saying that the jury are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact; for, while this is true as long as the jury have the case under their consideration, yet, when the jury have rendered their verdict, then the judge himself becomes the exclusive judge of all questions of fact; and, while he cannot reform the verdict, nor modify it in any particular, nor set it aside if it is sustained by sufficient evidence, yet, if the verdict is manifestly erroneous, he should always set it aside, and grant a new trial; and he should be controlled by his own judgment in the case, and not by that of the jury.<sup>1</sup>

Townsend brought his action to recover damages sustained by him by reason of an alleged trespass to his person. The injury was actually committed by one of three, all of whom were sued jointly. A separate trial was had as to two, Williams and Parsons, plaintiffs in error. The transcript contains the following as the "special verdict" returned by the jury:

"(1) Defendants, Williams, Parsons, and Spahr, went hunting as one party, and hunted as one party upon the hunting-grounds.
*565 *"(2) Defendants Parsons and Williams were in Hecox's field, south-east from the wagon, at the time plaintiff was injured; and Spahr was in the field of Townsend, (plaintiff's father,) south-west from the wagon.

"(3) All the defendants, Parsons, Williams, and Spahr, were upon the premises of Townsend before the shooting, and at the time thereof Parsons and Williams were upon the premises of Hecox, while Spahr was upon the premises of Townsend.

"(4) Spahr was seventy yards from plaintiff; Williams and Parsons were between twenty-five and thirty yards from plaintiff.

"(5) Plaintiff was standing with one foot on the front wheel, and one on the slide of the wagon, and on the west side of said wagon.

"(6) There was no express authority given to the defendants by said plaintiff's father to hunt upon his premises.

"(7) The boys Thomas and Lawrence Townsend gave express orders to all three defendants not to hunt upon their father's premises or lands."

<sup>1</sup> But where the testimony is very conflicting, and presents a doubtful question of fact,—one upon which different minds, justly and carefully weighing the testimony, may be expected to arrive at different conclusions,—then the trial court should not disturb the verdict, although its judgment may incline to a different conclusion than that reached by the jury. Johnson v. Leggett, 28 Kan. 591. It is the duty of a trial court, whenever the verdict is clearly against the weight or preponderance of the evidence, to set it aside and grant a new trial. Where the evidence is all in parol, and where there is some evidence sustaining every fact necessarily included in the verdict,—not a bare scintilla, but enough evidence, if not contradicted, to prove every such fact,—and where the trial court has approved the verdict by refusing to set it aside, and by rendering a judgment thereon, the supreme court cannot disturb it, although a preponderance of the evidence may seem to be against it. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Diehl, 33 Kan. 422. S. C. 6 Pac. Rep. 566.

"(11) The defendants had no authority, either express or implied, to hunt upon the premises upon which they did hunt prior to and at the time the plaintiff was injured.

"(12) Defendants were not guilty of aggravated misconduct, but were guilty of being engaged in a lawless act at the time plaintiff sustained the injury.

"(13) The plaintiff lost the sight of the left eye, and is entitled to $1,500 damages.

"(14) Neither Williams nor Parsons assisted the principal party in the act of shooting the plaintiff, nor protected him after the act of shooting.

"(15) The immediate act of the shooting whereby plaintiff was injured, was by the joint conduct or co-operation of all the defendants.

"(16) The jury do not believe that the plaintiff is entitled to exemplary damages.

"(17) Parsons and Williams were forty rods from Spahr when the shooting took place that injured the plaintiff."

The district court, at the November term, 1873, overruled a motion for a new trial, and gave judgment in favor of Townsend, and W. and P. bring the case here on error.

The court erred in permitting plaintiff to introduce evidence to show defendants were hunting upon the premises of Townsend and Hecox without permission. The evidence offered did not tend to support the issues joined. The question before the court was not as to whether or not plaintiffs in error were liable for the injury sustained by the plaintiff below. The ultimate fact constituting Townsend's cause of action is set forth in the allegation that the "defendants shot the plaintiff." Parsons and Williams denied this allegation, and the evidence should have been confined to the issue thus joined. The only evidence admissible under this issue would have been evidence tending to show that P. and W. directly did the immediate act charged, or that they did it indirectly by doing some other act or acts from which the act charged resulted as an ordinary or natural consequence. Proof that, at the time plaintiff sustained the injury complained of, defendants were engaged in the performance of an illegal act, might establish the liability of the defendants for the act charged; but it would be proof of a fact wholly foreign to the issues joined, and which would not tend to establish the fact alleged in plaintiff's petition. Chalker v. Dickinson, 1 Conn. 515; Bolling v. Doneghy, 1 Duv. 220; Finley v. Quirk, 9 Minn. 194, (Gil. 179;) Eilert v. City of Oshkosh, 14 Wis. 586. The evidence does not tend to show that defendants were engaged in an illegal act, since it does not show they were hunting upon "inclosed lands." Laws 1872, p. 339.

The court erred in overruling the motion of defendants P. and W. for judgment in their favor upon the special verdict. The twelfth finding, that "defendants were engaged in a lawless act in hunting upon premises without the owner's permission," is untrue, because hunting upon "premises" is not unlawful. The "premises" must be "the inclosed grounds or lands of another," to be unlawful. Laws 1872, p. 839. This finding is based upon incompetent and irrelevant evidence, and is no part of the verdict, because it is not a finding of any fact involved in the issues joined, and because it is not *567 *a finding of any fact at all. It is a mere conclusion of law.

The fifteenth finding, that the immediate act of shooting whereby plaintiff was injured, was by the joint act or co-operation of all the defendants, is expressly contradicted by the fourteenth finding, that neither Williams nor Parsons assisted the principal party (Spahr) in the act of shooting. This fifteenth finding is shown to be impossible, from the relative situations of the parties at the time the shooting occurred, as shown by the fourth and seventeenth findings. The first finding, that defendants were all hunting "as one party," is not sufficient to render defendants Parsons and Williams liable. 2 Hil. Torts. The mere act of hunting is not illegal. There is nothing in the verdict to show the act of defendants to have been illegal, nor was evidence admissible under the pleadings to show such illegality. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed the act of the defendants was legal. When two or more persons are co-operating together, and acting in concert in the performance of a legal act, and one of such persons commits a trespass in furtherance of such purpose, the others are not liable. Richardson v. Emerson, 3 Wis. 319.

H. W. Talcott, for defendant in error.

The only question in the case is as to whether or not plaintiffs in error co-operated with Spahr in the trespass complained of. That there was such co-operation, attention is called to the evidence. All three defendants went together on a hunting excursion for pleasure and recreation, and not for profit. All went together in one wagon, with one driver. Parsons and Williams had one dog, owned by Parsons; Spahr had one dog owned by himself. The defendants got out of the wagon together, and commenced hunting. The scent of the dogs governed the hunting and the relative course pursued by the defendants; Spahr following his, and the other two following Parson's, dog. All continued hunting in that manner until they all reached the field of plaintiff's father. After all had reached that field, Spahr climbed over the fence, and, his dog having scented a covey of *568 chickens, "Parsons *and Williams followed up rapidly, their dog joining Spahr's, and they entered said field close to where Spahr crossed, and at nearly the same time, when all three moved forward towards the spot indicated by the dogs." The hunters separated; the dog of Parsons leading him and Williams to the Hecox field, and the dog of Spahr still leading him in the Townsend field. Parsons and Williams, while thus hunting, occasionally heard shooting in the direction where Spahr was hunting, and turned their heads in the direction of the sound, and on one occasion one or both of them fired at a chicken which came from that direction. After the shooting by Spahr, only a moment elapsed until P. and W. shot at the same chicken; and after hearing the first shot, and at about the moment of hearing the second shot, the plaintiff below received the injury. No other persons were hunting or shooting in that vicinity. All three defendants came to the wagon at time of injury, assisted in removing shot, and, at request of P. and W., Spahr took Townsend to his father's residence. The defendants threw their game all into one wagon promiscuously, without reference to who killed it. All rode home together. The testimony also shows that all three defendants were hunting on the "inclosed lands of another," the owner of which had "neither given, nor been asked for, leave to hunt thereon." All the testimony tends to show co-operation on the part of all the defendants. They were all engaged in one common pursuit, associated together for the same purpose, acting in concert, and each acting in the "pleasure and recreation" of all. They were, also, each engaged in an unlawful enterprise at the time of the injury,—they were hunting "upon the inclosed grounds or lands of another, without first obtaining leave of the owner so to do." Laws 1872, p. 339. The question of joint liability is for the jury. Where an immediate act is done by the co-operation or joint act of two or more, all are trespassers, may be sued jointly, and each is liable for the injury done by all. 2 Hil. Torts, 293, 294; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. 381; Vosburgh v. Moak, 1 Cush. 453. The jury found that the defendants below were jointly liable.

*569 *Where the jury has found a special verdict, and the court below refuses to set it aside, and renders judgment thereon, it is not sufficient, because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, to authorize the supreme court to reverse the judgment, when, upon some essential fact in the case, the weight of evidence may seem to be against the verdict. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Montelle, 10 Kan. *119, *126; St. Joseph & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Chase, 11 Kan. *47, *58. The petition alleges that "the said defendants did unlawfully and with force assault the said plaintiff." Any evidence that would tend to show that all the defendants were liable, was competent. All were hunting upon the "inclosed grounds or lands of another without first obtaining leave of the owner so to do." All were acting unlawfully,—were engaged in committing a crime,—for which they were liable to criminal prosecution. Laws 1872, p. 339. If they were engaged together in doing an unlawful act at the time of the injury, their joint liability is established.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action in the nature of an action of trespass, brought by Lawrence Townsend against Marion Spahr, S. J. Williams, and W. L. Parsons, for an alleged assault and battery. The petition alleged, among other things, that "the said defendants did unlawfully and with force assault the said plaintiff, and there shoot and wound with shot from and out of a shotgun held in the hands of the said defendant Marion Spahr." The answer was a general denial. Williams and Parsons had a separate trial, and on such trial the plaintiff introduced evidence, over the objections of the defendants, but with the permission of the court, to prove that Spahr, with the co-operation of Williams and Parsons, was illegally, and in violation of a certain statute, (Laws 1872, p. 339,) hunting on the inclosed lands of another, without the consent of the owner, and that, while so hunting, Spahr, in the absence of Williams and Parsons, and without their knowledge, shot, with a shotgun, at a prairie *570 chicken, and in doing so accidentally shot the *plaintiff and injured him. We think this evidence was admissible, and that the court below did not err in allowing it to be introduced.

The jury made special findings; and the findings of the jury and the judgment of the court were in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants. The defendants (plaintiffs in error) now claim that the findings of the jury are not sustained by sufficient evidence, and that the findings themselves are not sufficient to sustain the judgment of the court below. That the evidence sufficiently shows that Spahr is liable, we suppose will be admitted. But it is claimed that the evidence does not sufficiently show that Williams and Parsons co-operated with Spahr in his illegal hunting. It is true, the evidence is slight, and we think the jury erred in their findings. But still the question of co-operation is one of fact, and comes clearly within the province of the jury to determine; and, unless there was almost a total absence of evidence to prove co-operation, their verdict upon the question must, after its approval by the court below, be considered conclusive. This comes from an unbroken current of decisions previously rendered in this court upon the question whether this court will reverse the judgment of the district court because the verdict of the jury may seem to be against the evidence, or not sustained by sufficient evidence. We have sustained many judgments where the verdicts upon which they were founded were sustained by but very slight evidence, or were against the weight of the evidence. There was some evidence in this case to prove co-operation. It is unquestionably the duty of the district court to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial wherever the jury have manifestly mistaken the evidence. And the district courts cannot shirk their responsibility by saying that the jury are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact; for, while this is true as long as the jury have the case under their consideration, yet, when the jury have rendered their verdict, then the judge himself becomes the exclusive judge of all questions of fact; and, while he cannot reform the verdict, nor modify it in any *571 particular, *nor set it aside if it is sustained by sufficient evidence, and by a preponderance of the evidence, yet, if the verdict is manifestly erroneous, he should always set it aside, and grant a new trial. And he must be controlled by his own judgment in the case, and not by that of the jury. Now, the supreme court, under the decisions of this court, has no such authority. When the supreme court sets aside a verdict, it must also set aside the judgment. It must say that the judge of the district court, as well as the jury, committed an error. It must say that the judge of the district court manifestly abused his discretion by not setting aside the verdict of the jury. And the supreme court can seldom say this; and hence the supreme court can reverse a judgment because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence only where there is substantially a total lack of evidence to prove some material fact necessary to be found, and necessarily found by the verdict. The findings of the jury in the case at bar seem to sustain the judgment of the court below; but they have not all been brought to this court, and hence we cannot tell to a certainty. The eighth and ninth and tenth findings are not contained in the verdict.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurs.

BREWER, J. I am unable to concur with my brethren in the conclusion they have reached in this case. It does not seem to me that the testimony shows that the plaintiffs in error had such a common purpose with Spahr to do an illegal act, or such a co-operation with him, as to render them responsible for the unintentional and purely accidental injury resulting from the act of Spahr. I think the judgment ought to be reversed.

*572      *C. & G. COOPER v. C. H. CONDON and others.

July Term, 1875.

1. Default: Judgment upon Immaterial Error: Where an application of the plaintiff is pending in a district court of the state to remove the action into the United States circuit court, and the hearing of the application is set by the court for a particular day in the future, it is error for the court to allow the defendant, before that day arrives, and in the absence of the plaintiff and his attorneys, and without any notice to them, to take judgment against the plaintiff, although upon the pleadings the defendant is entitled to just such a judgment as he obtained. But where said application is defective and ought to be overruled, and is eventually overruled, and where the plaintiff, who is in default for want of a reply, afterwards moves the court to vacate said judgment, but does not offer to file a reply, and makes no such showing as would entitle him to file a reply, and where the judgment is correct upon the pleadings, in the absence of a reply, and the court overrules the motion to vacate the judgment, held, that the error of the court in rendering the judgment is now immaterial, and therefore the judgment will not be disturbed. [Lanoue v. McKinnon, 19 Kan. 411.]

2. Removal of Causes: Affidavit for Removal. Where an application, under the act of congress of May 2, 1867, is made by the plaintiff to remove an action from a district court of the state to the United States circuit court, and the plaintiff does not personally "make and file" any affidavit, nor is there any reason given why he does not do so, but his attorney and agent makes and files the affidavit to sustain said application, and states therein that the attorney and agent, and not the plaintiff, "has reason to and does believe" that the plaintiff cannot obtain justice in such state court, held, that the application is not founded upon a sufficient affidavit. The plaintiff himself should make the affidavit.
3. Liens, Priority of: Surrender of Secured Notes: Subsequent Mortgage. M. & K. own certain real estate, and give a trust deed therefor to D. to secure two notes held by C. & Co. against M. & K. Afterwards M. & K. sell and convey said premises to W., and C. & Co. then surrender said notes to W. and take in their stead three notes from W. & E. to themselves, and then take a mortgage on said premises from W. to themselves, to secure said last-mentioned notes. Held, that C. & Co.'s lien on said premises, held under said trust deed, was surrendered by them when they surrendered said notes, and took the new notes and mortgage, and that the lien of third persons, obtained on said premises after the execution of said trust deed, but before the execution of said mortgage, is prior to the lien of said C. & Co. on said premises.<sup>1</sup>

The district court, at the March term, 1874, rendered judgment in favor of Condon and others, defendants in error, in certain foreclosure proceedings involving the rights of plaintiffs in error and defendants in error, where the principal questions between the parties was as to the priority of their respective liens on the same real property. The lien of Cooper & Co. was adjudged to be subsequent to the liens of Condon and two others of the defendants in error, and from such decision Cooper & Co. appeal.

N. A. Bettis, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by C. & G. Cooper & Co., against C. M. Condon and various other persons, for the purpose of recovering a personal judgment against D. S. Wood and B. Edwards, for the amount of three promissory notes given by Wood and Edwards to the plaintiffs, and for the purpose of foreclosing a mortgage on certain real estate given by Wood and wife to the plaintiffs to secure the payment of said notes, and of having their (the plaintiffs') lien on said real estate declared prior to Condon's lien, and to the liens of all the other defendants. The action was commenced in the district court of Labette county on August 27, 1873. On November 7th following, the plaintiffs filed in said court a petition, affidavit, and a paper in the form of a bond, for the purpose of removing the case from the district court of Labette county to the United States circuit court. The application was informal and insufficient, for reasons not necessary now to state. Even the plaintiffs themselves seem to have treated the application as insufficient; for afterwards they filed a supplemental petition in the case, changing

*574 very *much their original cause of action, making two new parties, asked for and obtained a temporary injunction against one of these new parties, made motions in the case with regard to a certain fund which had just been created, filed a reply to an answer of one of said new parties, and on March 7, 1874, filed a new affidavit and a new bond for the removal of the case to the United States circuit court. The hearing of the application for said removal was then postponed until the twentieth of said March. Before that day, and on the ninth of said March, the defendant Condon took judgment against the plaintiffs in their absence, and without any notice to them or their attorneys. Of course, the court below erred in permitting Condon to do this; and it now remains to be seen whether the error was material and substantial. Said judgment in effect was that Condon's lien on said real estate was prior to that of the plaintiffs. On March 20th said application for removal was overruled, and we think rightly so. There were several irregularities in the application; for instance, the plaintiffs did not "make and file" the kind of affidavit required by law. They made the application under the act of congress of May 2, 1867, (14 U. S. St. at Large, 559.) That act authorizes the removal of a case by the plaintiff from a state court into the United States circuit court only where "he will make and file, in such state court, an affidavit stating that he has reason to and does believe that, from prejudice or local interest, he will not be able to obtain justice in such state court." In the present case the affidavit was made and filed by one L. W. K., who says in his affidavit that he is "the attorney and agent of the plaintiffs;" that he himself (not the plaintiffs, nor either of them) "has reason to and does believe that, from prejudice and local influence, the said plaintiffs will not be able to obtain justice in the state court." He does not state, nor is it anywhere shown, why the plaintiffs, or some one of them, did not make the affidavit; nor is it shown whether they have any reason to believe or do believe that they could not obtain justice in such state court. The affidavit shows that it is the attorney and

*575 agent *of the plaintiffs who has reason to and does believe this. There is no authority given in the statute for a plaintiff to swear by his attorney or agent; nor is there any authority given for his attorney or agent to "make and file" the affidavit; nor, under the statute, is the attorney's or agent's belief material. We do not know that there ever has been any direct adjudication upon this exact question now under consideration by any court of last resort. It was once, however, decided by Judges DILLON and DUNDY, of the United States circuit court, that the plaintiff's attorney could not make the affidavit. Sands v. Smith, 1 Dill. 298, note. See, also, Dodge v. Northwestern U. P. Co., 13 Minn. 458, (Gil. 427.) We do not think that the affidavit in this case was sufficient; and we do not think that the state courts are bound to resort to extraordinarily liberal construction for the purpose of ousting themselves of the jurisdiction of cases.

After said application for removal was overruled, the plaintiffs moved the court to vacate and set aside the judgment rendered on March 9th in favor of Condon. This motion was overruled on April 4th. Said judgment, as we have already stated, was merely that Condon's lien on the premises in controversy was prior to the plaintiffs' lien. No other or different judgment could have been rendered upon the pleadings in the case. Condon set up in his answer new matter, showing that his lien was prior to that of the plaintiffs; and the plaintiffs did not file any reply thereto, controverting the allegations of said answer. Hence the answer setting up new matter must be taken as true. Civil Code, § 128. And hence, if the plaintiffs' motion had been sustained, and the judgment set aside and vacated, the court would have been bound to again render the same judgment upon the pleadings, unless the plaintiffs could have got leave to file a reply. The plaintiffs were in default for want of a reply when the judgment was rendered, and they gave no reason to the court for their default, except that they had thought that they had filed a reply. They did not, when they made their motion, *576 nor at any other time, offer to file a *reply, or ask leave of the court to file a reply. They stated that they had a defense to Condon's answer, and that the answer was a sham; but they did not state what their defense was, nor why nor how Condon's answer was a sham. They did not deny the truth of the facts alleged in the answer; and a great many of them were unquestionably true. If said judgment had never been rendered, if the application of the plaintiffs had been made for leave to file a reply, instead of to vacate said judgment, and if they had made no further or better showing than they did on this application, the court would not have erred in refusing to grant them leave to file a reply; or at most it would not have committed an error sufficient to authorize a reversal of its rulings. When the plaintiffs moved to set aside said judgment, they should have shown what their defense to said answer was, what portions (if any) of the answer they controverted, why they were in default, and should have offered to file a reply upon the condition that the judgment was set aside. For, as the pleadings then were, if the court had granted their motion to vacate the judgment, the court would then immediately have rendered the same judgment upon the pleadings.

On the same day that this motion was overruled, (but whether before or after is not shown,) the action as between the plaintiffs and the other defendants was tried. And on this trial it was shown that, even if the plaintiffs had filed a reply, and tried their case as between themselves and Condon, the same judgment should have been rendered. In any manner in which we may view the case, we do not think that the error of the district court in rendering the Condon judgment at the time it did was, or is now, such a material error as will require a reversal of the judgment. On the said trial between the plaintiffs and the other defendants the plaintiffs obtained the personal judgment against Wood and Edwards which they prayed for in their petition. They also obtained judgment against all the defendants, except Condon, Doty, and Avise & Co., that their lien was the prior lien on the premises. They in fact obtained everything *577 they asked *for, except that the court rendered judgment that the liens of Condon, Doty, and Avise & Co., were prior to theirs, and of this last ruling they now complain.

The facts of the case were substantially as follows: Originally Macon, Krell, and Conwell owned Block No. 13 in Oswego, Labette county. On January 10, 1870, Macon and Krell gave to Cooper & Co. their two promissory notes, for $740.25 and $775.50, due in six and nine months, respectively. On March 1, 1870, Macon and Krell executed a trust deed for said premises to one C. F. Drake, for the purpose of securing the payment of said notes. The trust-deed does not purport to secure the debt evidenced by the notes. On January 10, 1871, Macon, Krell, and Conwell mortgaged said property to Condon to secure the payment of three promissory notes held by Condon against themselves for the aggregate amount of $1,809.41. On March 14, 1871, Macon and Krell mortgaged said property to Emert Doty to secure the payment of a certain note for $350 held by Doty against themselves. Afterwards, probably about December 26, 1871, Macon, Krell, and Conwell sold and conveyed said property to David S. Wood, and Cooper & Co. surrendered to Wood the said notes of Macon and Krell to themselves, and took in their stead three other notes executed by Wood and one B. Edwards to themselves, dated December 26, 1871, one for $300, and the other two each for $713.63, and due in substantially eight, twelve, and eighteen months; and Wood and wife executed a mortgage on said property to Cooper & Co., dated December 26, 1871, acknowledged April 27, 1872, and recorded August 27, 1873, "to secure the payment of the sum of $1,727.27, * * * according to the terms of" said three promissory notes. On February 3, 1872, Wood mortgaged said property to Avise & Co. to secure the payment of a debt evidenced by a certain note held by Avise & Co. against Wood. Said mortgage was recorded February 17, 1872. It is unnecessary for us to mention the claims of the other defendants, for, as against them, the court found *578 and rendered judgment in favor of Cooper & Co. We think that the judgment of the court below, that the liens of Condon, Doty, and Avise & Co. are prior to that of Cooper & Co., is correct.

The only ground upon which Cooper & Co. claim that their lien is prior to those of Condon, Doty, and Avise & Co. is that they have a right to date the origin of their lien back to the execution of the trust deed from Macon and Krell to Drake, which is prior to the existence of all the other liens. But, as we have said before, that trust deed was executed merely to secure the payment of two certain promissory notes, and Cooper & Co. had no possible interest in said notes when they commenced this suit. They had surrendered them long before the commencement of this action. The notes were probably canceled and extinguished when they were surrendered; but if not, still the plaintiffs had no interest in them. The trust deed was merely an incident to the notes, and followed them. Whoever at any time owned the notes, owned the trust deed; and if the notes were at any time extinguished, the trust deed was also and necessarily extinguished. We suppose that where a mortgage is given to secure the payment of a particular debt, the mortgage is not exhausted until the debt is paid or canceled, although the debt may in the mean time be evidenced by several different promissory notes. In fact, wherever a mortgage is given to secure the performance of any particular act, the mortgage will not be exhausted until that particular act is performed, or until the performance thereof is excused by some subsequent transaction. But that is not this case. It was not the debt, aside from the notes, that was secured by said trust deed; but it was merely the debt as evidenced by said promissory notes that was secured. The intention of the parties must always govern in transactions of this kind; and, evidently, the intention of the parties, from the language of the trust deed, was merely to secure those notes; and then, afterwards, it was clearly the intention of the parties to divest Cooper & Co. of all property or interest in the notes. And clearly, when *579 Cooper & Co. parted with their interest in the *notes, they parted with the auxiliary security connected with the notes. The lien of the trust deed followed the notes, and did not remain with Cooper & Co.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

JAMES M. YOUNG v. ELIHU WHITTENHALL.

July Term, 1875.

1. Limitations: Fraud, Action for. Section 18 of the Code, which provides, among other things, that "an action for relief on the ground of fraud" can only be brought within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, and that "the cause of action in such case shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud," applies to actions for damages founded upon fraud, as well as to actions for equitable relief founded upon fraud.
2. ———: What must be Alleged in Petition. Where the petition in such a case shows upon its face that the fraud upon which the cause of action is founded was consummated more than two years before the commencement of the action, the plaintiff must further set forth in his petition that he did not discover the fraud until within less than two years before the commencement of the action, or his petition will be held defective on demurrer.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Nemaha district court.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Nathan Price and W. D. Webb, for plaintiff.

W. W. Guthrie, for defendant.

VALENTINE, J. The plaintiff in error, who was also plaintiff *580 below, set forth in his petition below, in two separate *counts, two supposed causes of action: The defendant demurred to said petition, and to each count thereof, on the ground that neither of them stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court below sustained the demurrer. Said supposed causes of action are founded upon certain alleged false and fraudulent representations made by the defendant for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to purchase certain real estate from the defendant, and which did so induce the plaintiff so to purchase said real estate. The plaintiff still retains the land purchased, and now sues for the damages claimed to have resulted from said alleged false and fraudulent representations. Said alleged false and fraudulent representations were made, and the land purchased, on May 22, 1871. This suit was commenced September 5, 1873.

The first question raised and to be considered by this court is whether said supposed causes of action are not barred by the statute of limitations. Subdivision 3 of section 18 of the Civil Code provides, among other things, that "an action for relief on the ground of fraud" can only be brought within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, and "the cause of action in such case shall not be deemed to have accrued until after the discovery of the fraud." It is contended by plaintiff that this statute does not apply to the case at bar, because this statute applies only to actions for "relief," while the plaintiff claims that this action is not for "relief," but for damages. The claim of the plaintiff is not tenable. This is an action for relief, in the nature of damages, and for such relief as comes within such statute. If this action is not for relief, and such an action as may be barred by such statute of limitations, then there is no statute of limitations for this class of actions. The claim of the plaintiff is substantially this: An action for equitable relief founded on fraud comes within the statute, and is barred in two years; but an action for legal relief founded on fraud does not come within the statute, and is therefore never barred. In other words, all the entrances to a court of equity are closed in two years for all actions founded *581 on fraud; but *courts of law are kept open for such actions forever. This claim is not tenable.

The second count of the petition shows, beyond all doubt, that the cause of action set forth in that count is barred. The alleged fraud was consummated on May 22, 1871. The plaintiff knew of it at least as early as August 1, 1871; for on that day he bought in the adverse claims which he now contends the defendant fraudulently represented that he had obtained and conveyed to the plaintiff, and this suit was not commenced until September 5, 1873.

But with respect to the first count of the petition a much more difficult question arises. That count does not show affirmatively when the plaintiff first obtained knowledge of the fraud alleged to have been perpetrated upon him; and therefore it does not show affirmatively, unless by presumption or implication, when the statute of limitations commenced to run against the cause of action stated in such count. The cause of action stated therein was, of course, complete on the very day that the alleged fraudulent transaction was finally consummated; but, for the purpose of the statute of limitations, the cause of action is not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud by the party aggrieved. That is, in such actions, although the cause of action is perfect on the very day that the fraud is consummated, yet the statute of limitations does not begin to operate upon such cause of action until the fraud is discovered. Or, in other words, the want of a discovery or knowledge of the fraud constitutes one of the exceptions which take the case out of the operation of the statute. Now, whose duty is it to plead this exception? and in what pleading must it be stated? It has always been the duty of the plaintiff, both in courts of law and in courts of equity, to plead the exceptions, where the question of the statute of limitations has been properly raised by the defendant. And it never was the duty of the defendant in such a case to negative the exceptions. Zane v.

Zane, 5 Kan. *137. The most that has ever been required of *582 *a defendant has been to require him to plead the statute, and even then, as in all other cases, it devolved upon the plaintiff to plead the exceptions which he believed would take the case out of the operation of the statute. And in equity practice, and under the various codes, where the bill or petition shows that the claim of the plaintiff is barred by the statute, it always devolves upon the plaintiff to plead the exceptions in his bill or petition, or the same will be considered defective on demurrer. The exact question we are now discussing has been decided in California. Sublette v. Tinney, 9 Cal. 423; Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 20, 44; Carpentier v. City of Oakland, 30 Cal. 444. In the first case the court say: "The seventeenth section of the statute of limitations provides that certain actions must be commenced within three years, and, among others, an action for relief on the ground of fraud; the cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the fact constituting the fraud. The cause of action cannot be deemed to accrue upon the discovery of the fraud in any other sense than that the statute will not be deemed to commence running until such period. Fraud is the substantive cause of action. Upon its commission the right of action arises; not upon its discovery. The policy of the law is that actions on this ground should be commenced within three years, but, that innocent parties may not suffer while in ignorance of their rights, the statute excepts them from the limitation until a discovery of the fraud. The latter clause of the section must therefore be considered as an exception merely to the general provision, and be pleaded as such. In the present case, then, the cause of action accrued upon the execution of the contract. As this was more than three years previous to the commencement of the suit, the cause of action was barred, and the objection, being apparent upon the face of the complaint, could be taken advantage of by demurrer. If the plaintiff was within the exceptions of the statute, it was incumbent upon him to state it in his complaint." Sublette v. Tinney, supra.

*583 *We do not think the court below erred in sustaining said demurrer. The petition showed upon its face that the fraud upon which the cause of action is founded was consummated more than two years before the commencement of this action, and the pe-tion did not show that the plaintiff did not discover said fraud until within less than two years before the commencement of this action. The only allegation of the petition that has the slightest reference to such a showing is as hereafter stated. The alleged fraud was concerning the boundary lines of the land purchased by the plaintiff, and the said allegation is as follows: "On said day [when said land was purchased] the plaintiff was, always before had been, and for a long time thereafter remained, ignorant of the boundary lines of said land, except as hereinafter stated, to-wit, that all knowledge he had in regard to the boundary lines of said land, before the sale was negotiated, he obtained from the defendant at the time he purchased said land." This allegation does not pretend to show when the plaintiff discovered that the boundary lines were different from what he had previously believed them to be, and it does not pretend to show that such discovery was made within less than two years before the commencement of this action. We therefore think the petition is defective in stating a cause of action which appears to be barred by the statute of limitations.

The judgment of the court below must therefore be affirmed.

*A. L. STEVENS v. THOMAS ABLE.

July Term, 1875.

Counter-Claim and Set-Off: Unliquidated Demands. In this state any cause of action arising from contract, whether it be for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages, may constitute a set-off, and be pleaded as such in any action founded upon contract, whether such action be for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Jackson district court.

Action by Able to recover a balance of $100 due him upon the sale of certain cattle. Stevens filed a bill of particulars, alleging as a defense, by way of set-off, "that on or about the twenty-fourth of February, 1873, he purchased of Able a certain lot of hogs, to be not less than fifty nor more than fifty-five; that said contract was in writing.

signed by Able; that, at the same time, Stevens paid to Able upon that said contract and purchase $25; that the hogs were to be delivered by Able to Stevens in May, 1873, at such time as Stevens might deem proper to receive them, at the weighing-scales of A. G. Campbell, near Circleville; that Stevens was to pay Able for the said hogs, upon delivery, three cents per pound gross; that, on or about the twenty-seventh of said May, Stevens demanded the hogs of Able, and requested him to deliver them as per contract, which Able refused to do," for which Stevens claimed $150 damages. The district court, at the April term, 1874, refused to hear any testimony in support of this claim, and gave judgment in favor of Able.

J. H. Keller, for plaintiff in error.

The Code permits a cause of action arising on contract to be set off, without distinguishing between the kind or nature of such cause of action. It cannot be the intention of the Code to allow a plaintiff to set up two or more causes of action in his petition, and then confine a set-off to a limited class of contracts. Code, §§ 94, 96, 98. The language of the Code includes, as matters of set-off, every kind *585 of cause *of action, liquidated and unliquidated, which can arise upon contract; and there seems to be no good reason for limiting its operation to liquidated damages so long as the statute does not so provide. 1 Nash, Pl. & Pr. 720; Wagner v. Stocking, 22 Ohio St. 297. The manifest policy of the Code is to obviate such circuity of actions, for it provides, (section 96,) if the defendant omit to set up a counter-claim or set-off, he cannot recover costs against the plaintiff in any subsequent action therein. It is the only manner in which the spirit of the statute can be made available without another action. Morgan v. Spangler, 20 Ohio St. 38, 54.

W. H. Dodge, for defendant in error.

Plaintiff in error does not seem to discriminate between a counter-claim and a set-off. In his bill of particulars he calls the matters which he sets up as a defense a "set-off or counter-claim." A counter-claim is defined by section 95, and a set-off by section 98, of the Code. The mere calling of the facts set up as a defense one or the other, will not make them so. The pleading filed by Stevens was not a counter-claim, because it did not arise out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as a foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. If it had, it would have been good, whether the damages claimed were liquidated or unliquidated. But plaintiff in error now claims that it is purely a "set-off" which he pleads. A set-off is allowed only when the demand to be set off is liquidated, or capable of being ascertained by calculation. Sedg. Dam. 502; Wat. Set-off, 328, 333; Barb. Set-off, 76; Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill, 171.

Unliquidated damages claimed have never been permitted to be set off, unless expressly allowed by statute. Sedg. Dam. 488; Butts v. Collins, 13 Wend. 139, 156; McDonald v. Neilson, 2 Cow. 140; Cor- nell v. Green, 10 Serg. & R. 14; U. S. v. Robeson, 9 Pet. 319; Hepburn v. Hoag, 6 Cow. 618; Wat. Set-off, 147, 383. "It is now believed that set-off must be limited as heretofore, when the sum claimed constitutes a liquidated demand." 1 Nash, Pl. 721.

*586 *VALENTINE, J. This action was commenced originally in a justice's court by Able against Stevens. Each party filed a bill of particulars in the justice's court. Each set forth in his bill of particulars a cause of action in favor of himself, and against his adversary, and arising out of and founded upon contract. Able, however, claims that the cause of action set forth in his bill of particulars was for a liquidated demand, and that the cause of action set forth in Stevens' bill of particulars was for unliquidated damages. We shall decide the case upon the theory that this claim of Able is correct. Able further claims that, because Stevens' cause of action is for unliquidated damages, it is therefore not the subject of set-off in this action. The case was tried before the justice, judgment rendered therein, and then appealed to the district court. The case was again tried in the district court. There the court refused to permit the defendant, Stevens, to prove his cause of action, on the ground that it was not the subject of set-off. We think the court erred. In this state any cause of action arising from contract, whether it be for a liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages, may constitute a set-off, and may be pleaded as such in any action founded on contract, whether such action be for liquidated demand or for unliquidated damages. Civil Code, §§ 94, 98. While it is not clear beyond all possible doubt that this is the meaning of our statutes, yet we think that this is the clear import of the same. They provide that "the defendant may set forth, in his answer, as many grounds of defense, counter-claim, set-off, and for relief as he may have, whether they be such as have been heretofore denominated legal or equitable, or both," (Code, § 94;) and "a set-off can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract, and must be a cause of action arising upon contract, or ascertained by the decision of a court," (Code, § 98.) We suppose that there can be no question as to the applicability to this case of these provisions of the Code, although the action was *587 commenced in a justice's *court. Justices' Act, § 185. The construction that we have given these statutes is in accordance with the entire spirit of the Code, which attempts as far as possible to have all matters of controversy between the litigating parties determined in one action. A plaintiff may now join in one action as many causes of action as he may have, whether legal or equitable, or both, where they all arise out of contracts, either express or implied, and whether they are for liquidated claims or unliquidated damages, or for something else. Code, § 83. We suppose that every lawyer knows that there was no such thing as set-off at common law, and the whole subject is now governed by statute.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

MARSHALL BARRY v. MARY ELLEN BARRY.

July Term, 1875.

Descents and Distributions: Rights of Widow, where the Husband Dies without Issue. A widow whose husband died without issue will take the whole of her husband's estate in the following cases: First, where he died without making a will; second, where he made a will, but she elects to take under the law; third, where he made a will, and she fails to elect to take under the will.

Error from Davis district court.

Action by plaintiff for partition of certain real property. All the estate for which partition was asked was the property of one Abraham Barry at the time of his marriage with the defendant. Said Abraham died without issue, in October, 1873. By the last will and testament of said Abraham he devised all of his estate, real and personal, to the defendant, *(his widow,) and the plaintiff, (his nephew,) each to receive one-half, after payment of his debts. A part of the real property in question was a homestead, on which said testator and defendant resided at time of testator's death. The defendant duly appeared before the probate court of Davis county, and refused to accept under the provisions of the will, and elected to take the portion allowed her under the law of descents. The district court, at the May term, 1874, sustained the claim of defendant to the whole estate, and gave judgment accordingly.

McClure & Humphrey, for plaintiff.

N. C. McFarland, for defendant.

VALENTINE, J. The only question in this case is, who owns the land in controversy,—Marshall Barry or Mary Ellen Barry? Originally, Abraham Barry owned it, and while so owning it he married Mary Ellen Barry. Afterwards, and on March 7, 1873, Abraham Barry made a will, and by said will devised one-half of all his real estate to his nephew, Marshall Barry. His wife, said Mary Ellen, neither assented nor dissented as to this will. On October 11, 1873, said Abraham died without issue. Said will was duly probated. The widow, Mary Ellen, then refused to accept under the will, and elected to take under the statutes. She now claims to own all the land which belonged to her husband, Abraham Barry, at the date of his death, and Marshall Barry claims to own one-half of the same. . . The court below decided in favor of said Mary Ellen. We think the court below decided correctly. Marshall Barry has no interest in the land except what he gets under the will. Hence we must look to the law of wills to see what he does get. We would first say, however, that if Abraham Barry had died intestate, his widow would have taken (under the law of descents and distributions) the whole of his *589 estate not necessary *to pay debts, and no part of it would have gone to Marshall Barry, or to any one else, (Gen. St. 392, 394, §§ 4, 20;) and, if she does not now get the whole of said estate, it is because of said will. Section 17 of the law of descents and distributions (Gen. St. 394) reads as follows: "The widow's portion cannot be affected by any will of her husband, if she object thereto, and relinquishes all rights conferred upon her by the will."

Turning, now, to the law concerning wills, (Gen. St. 1107 et seq.) the first section of said act concerning wills provides that "any person of full age and sound mind and memory, having an interest in real or personal property of any description whatever, may give and devise the same to any person by last will and testament lawfully executed, subject, nevertheless, to the rights of creditors, and to the provisions of this act." Section 35 provides that "no man, while married, shall bequeath away from his wife more than one-half of his property, nor shall any woman, while married, bequeath away from her husband more than one-half of her property. But either may consent, in writing executed in the presence of two witnesses, that the other may bequeath more than one-half of his or her property from the one so consenting." Section 41 provides that, where the widow has not consented to the will, she shall be cited to appear before the probate court "and make her election, whether she will accept" under the will, "or take what she is entitled to under the provisions of the law concerning descents and distributions." Section 42 provides that "the election of the widow to take under the will shall be made by her in person in the probate court of the proper county, except as hereinafter provided; and, on the application by her to take under the will, it shall be the duty of the court to explain to her the provisions of the will, her rights under it, and also her rights under the law, in the event of her refusal to take under the will. The election of the widow to take under the will shall be entered upon the minutes of the court; and, if the widow shall fail to make such election, she shall retain her share of the real and personal estate *590 *of her husband as she would be entitled to by law in case her husband had died intestate."

It will be seen that the first section of the act concerning wills is comprehensive, giving to a man the power to devise and bequeath his whole estate, subject, however, to the other provisions of the act. The thirty-fifth section is a limitation of that power, putting one-half of his estate beyond his reach to bequeath, where he is a married man, except by the written consent of his wife. The word "bequeath" in that section probably means "devise and bequeath." But it is not necessary now to so decide. Sections 41 and 42 create a further limitation of the power granted by section 1. The first section can operate to its full extent where a man has no wife, or where he gets her written consent. The thirty-fifth section can operate where a man has a wife and children. In such a case he can bequeath one-half of his property absolutely, and the other half with the written consent of his wife. The forty-first and forty-second sections operate where a man has a wife and no child. In such a case he cannot devise or bequeath any portion of his estate except with the consent of his wife. The meaning of these two sections seems very plain. Under the provisions of the law of descents and distributions a widow, whose husband died without issue and intestate, is entitled to the whole of her deceased husband's estate. Gen. St. 292, 294, §§ 4, 20. If, instead of dying intestate, her husband had, previous to his death, made a will, then, under said section 41, the widow may elect whether she will take under the will "or take what she is entitled to under the provisions of the law concerning descents and distributions;" which, as we have seen, is the whole of the estate. Under section 42 the probate court is required to explain to the widow her rights under the will, "and also her rights under the law;" which, in such a case, is to take the whole estate; and then, "if the widow shall fail to make such election, she shall retain her share of the real and personal estate of her husband as she would be entitled to by law in case her husband had died intestate." It will therefore be seen that a *591 widow, whose husband died without issue *will take the whole of his estate in the following cases: First, where he died without making a will; second, where he made a will, but she elects to take under the law; third, where he made a will, but she fails to elect to take under the will. We do not say that this law is right. We express no opinion upon the subject. We do not make the laws, and are not responsible for them, whether they are good or bad.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

THOMAS ROYAL and others v. ANNIE L. LINDSAY.

July Term, 1875.

1. Bills and Notes: Consideration: Extending Time of Payment.

When after the maturing of a note running one year, and bearing interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum until paid, the payee agrees to extend the note for another year upon the promise of the payor to pay interest at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum, payable monthly, held, that such promise was sufficient consideration to sustain the agreement.

2. ———: Insufficient Consideration. A payment of a part of an amount due is not sufficient consideration to sustain an agreement to extend the time of payment of the residue.<sup>1</sup>

Error from Sedgwick district court.

The district court, at the June term, 1874, gave judgment in favor of Lindsay against Royal and wife and another, defendants. The defendants bring the case here for review.

John Guthrie and Geo. S. Brown, for plaintiffs in error.

The answer clearly sets up a valid agreement for an extension *592 for one year of the time for the payment of the note in *suit.

A payment of interest in advance, or an agreement to pay interest in a manner different from that provided for in the contract, or, after a note becomes due, an agreement to pay interest for a definite time not provided for in the original contract, constitutes a sufficient consideration for an extension of time. Rose v. Williams, 5 Kan. *483; Jarvis v. Hyatt, 43 Ind. 163; Hamilton v. Winterrowd, Id. 393; Bailey v. Adams, 10 N. H. 162; Crosby v. Wyatt, Id. 318; Wheat v. Kendall, 6 N. H. 504. The court below certainly erred in refusing to admit the evidence offered by plaintiffs in error in support of their answer.

J. M. Balderston, for defendant in error.

The alleged oral agreement to forbear was a nudum pactum. In paying the $150, Royal did no more than he was legally bound to do. The debt was due and undisputed. The promise of Lindsay was without any benefit to her, and occasioned no loss to Royal. 2 Pars. Notes & Bills, 528, and note h; Kellogg v. Olmsted, 28 Barb. 96. Payment of part of a debt is not a consideration which will support a promise to forbear to sue or press the collection of the balance. State v. City of Davenport, 12 Iowa, 336; Pabodie v. King, 12 Johns. 426.

It is difficult to determine which clause of his second defense plaintiff in error relies upon to show payment of interest in advance. In neither does he claim that interest was in fact paid in advance, as it appears by the modified agreement they treat the payment of the $150 as a payment on the note; and on the twenty-fourth of February he claims to pay $18, the interest on $1,000 for one month to that date at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum. This amount was paid as interest already earned, not for the use of money for a future time, as they now claim.

BREWER, J. This was an action brought by defendant in error to foreclose a note and mortgage. The answer alleged an agreement to extend the time of payment of the note, and that under such agreement the note was not yet due. Upon the trial the district *593 court excluded all testimony under the answer, so the only question now is whether the answer set up a valid agreement for the extension of time of payment. It unquestionably alleges an agreement on the part of the payee to extend. Does it disclose a consideration for such agreement, or does it appear as a mere nudum pactum? The note sued upon was dated January 20, 1873, was for $1,030, and drew interest from date until paid at 12 per cent. per annum. The answer, after alleging that the agreement on the part of the payee to extend was made on the twenty-third of January, 1874, the day of the maturity of the note, alleges the payment in pursuance of the agreement of $150, "which was indorsed on said note, and that said sum was paid as the consideration for the forbearance and extending the time of payment of said note." The copy of the note attached to the petition shows this indorsement: "Rec'd on the within, $150, interest to date. January 23, 1874." It seems clear that all that is intended by this allegation is that a payment of $150 was made, which was understood by both parties as a payment on the note, and so indorsed, and that as such payment it was claimed as sufficient consideration for the promise to extend. That this is not the law is abundantly established. A payment of that which is already due is no consideration for a new promise by the payee. But the answer goes further, and alleges that this agreement for extension "was modified on the twenty-fourth of February, 1874, by the said Thomas Royal agreeing to pay the interest on said sum of money each month to the said plaintiff at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum; that, as a part performance of said modified agreement, said Royal paid the said plaintiff the sum of $18." As, under the law then in force respecting interest, (Laws 1872, p. 284,) only 12 per cent. could be recovered, and any payment in excess of that per cent. was to be taken as a payment of the principal, and as by its terms this note drew interest until paid at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, it does not seem that the promise to pay 15 per cent. presented any new consideration; though it was said by the court in Bank v.
 *594 Woodward, 5 N. H. 99, that "a promise to give day of payment, founded upon a usurious consideration, is certainly not void." To the same effect are Kelley v. Gillespie, 12 Iowa, 55; Cor- ielle v. Allen, 13 Iowa, 289. But contra, see Payne v. Powell, 14 Tex. 600. There remains, therefore, the single fact that the payor, in consideration of the extension, promised to pay interest, and promised to pay it in a manner different from that prescribed in the note; i. e., monthly instead of annually. That a promise to pay interest for a definite period of time is a sufficient consideration for an agreement to extend for a like period the day of payment, is affirmed by these authorities: Wheat v. Kendall, 6 N. H. 504; Bailey v. Adams, 10 N. H. 162; Chute v. Pattee, 37 Me. 102; McComb v. Kittridge, 14 Ohio, 348; 2 Amer. Lead. Cas. (5th Ed.) 469. It is denied in Reynolds v. Ward, 5 Wend. 502; Kellogg v. Olmsted, 25 N. Y. 189; Parmalle v. Thompson, 45 N. Y. 58; Gibson v. Irby, 17 Tex. 173; 2 Pars. Notes & Bills, 528.

It is perhaps not necessary that this question shall in this case be definitely decided, though we may say that the suggestions made in favor of the proposition by the court in the case from 14 Ohio seem to us of great force. We prefer to rest our decision upon what seems less doubtful ground, viz., the promise to pay interest in a different manner from that prescribed in the note. The note calls for interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. True, it bears this rate after maturity and until payment. And after maturity, in the absence of any new agreement, the note is due each day, with the accumulation of interest to that day. But, in the absence of such new agreement, there is no rest in the computation of interest except at the end of each year, while by the agreement there would be such rest every month. A promise to pay a greater interest, not usurious, would unquestionably be a sufficient consideration, and this for the reason that a higher and different obligation was assumed by the promisor. Upon the same principle, though perhaps not presenting so clear a case, we think the promise before us can be sustained as a sufficient consideration. This is the assumption of a new, different, and slightly more onerous obligation. We think, therefore, the district court erred in its ruling, and the judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

FRANK J. ROBINSON and another v. HERRO T. WILSON.

July Term, 1875.

1. Bankruptcy: Effect of Discharge: Judgments in State Courts.

While section 8 of chapter 12 of the General Statutes is general in its terms, and directs the court, on production of a certificate of discharge in bankruptcy, to enter a discharge upon the record of any judgment against such bankrupt, it cannot and does not apply to any other judgments than such as are legally discharged by the proceedings in bankruptcy.<sup>1</sup>

2. Homestead: When Subject to Attachment Lien. When premises which have been seized under a valid order of attachment become thereafter the homestead of the defendant in the attachment, the homestead right is subject and subordinate to the attachment lien.<sup>2</sup>3. Bankruptcy: Exempt Property does not Pass to Assignee. Property exempt by the laws of the state from seizure on attachment or execution does not pass by the assignment to the assignee in bankruptcy, but remains the absolute property of the bankrupt, unaffected by the bankrupt proceedings, and subject to any specific liens created by the voluntary act of the bankrupt, or through legal proceedings.4. Courts: Jurisdiction. The state courts have jurisdiction to enforce any specific lien upon such exempt property.5. Bankruptcy: Operation of Assignment in: Attachment Liens: Exempt Property. The assignment in bankruptcy operates to dissolve only such attachments as were made within four months prior to the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, and only such as were levied upon property passing to the assignee, and does not dissolve attachments levied upon property remaining the bankrupt's.*596 *Error from Bourbon district court.

At the June term, 1874, of the district court, W. C. S., judge pro tem., presiding, defendants, Frank J. and William R. Robinson, applied for an order that a certain judgment theretofore recovered in said court against them, in favor of Wilson, be discharged, and satisfied of record. This application was refused, and the Robinsons bring the case here for review.

Hulett & McCleverty, for plaintiffs in error.

<sup>1</sup>Application of said section, Tefft v. Ferry, 23 Kan. 753. See, also, Herman v. Lynch, 26 Kan. 435; Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825; Noyes v. Dobson, 30 Kan. 861; S. C. 2 Pac. Rep. 515; Widner v. Yeast, 32 Kan. 400; S. C. 4 Pac. Rep. 838.

<sup>2</sup>The commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy does not divest the state courts of jurisdiction to enforce an attachment lien on realty created more than four months next preceding the commencement of such proceedings; nor does a discharge in bankruptcy release an attachment lien not created within four months before the filing of the petition. The lien, however, cannot be enforced against the person of the defendant, or any other than the attached property. Gillett v. McCarthy, 23 Kan. 671.

BREWER, J. This is a proceeding to review the action of the district court overruling a motion of plaintiffs in error (defendants below) to have satisfaction of a judgment entered of record because of the fact that, after the rendition of the judgment, they had each received a discharge in bankruptcy. The motion was made under section 3 of chapter 12 of the General Statutes. Looking simply at the letter of that section, and it would seem as though the motion ought to have been sustained; for the language is general, and provides that "in any case in which any person has been or may hereafter be discharged, * * * and shall produce a certificate of discharge * * * to the court in which any judgment is of record, it shall be the duty of any such court to enter a discharge; * * * and thereafter any such judgment shall be deemed fully discharged and satisfied." But this whole statute is based upon and in recognition of the United States bankrupt law. It does not intend, even if it were possible so to do, to release parties from debts not discharged under that law. It aims simply to enable a party to obtain in the state courts the benefit of the rights granted to him by the federal law. So, though it declares that "in any case," upon the production of the discharge, it is the duty of the court, etc., it applies only to those cases *597 in which the bankrupt's discharge does, as a matter of fact, under the federal law, operate to release and discharge the judgment debt. Any other construction would expose the statute to grave constitutional objections. The question, therefore, is whether this judgment was one which, by the proceedings in bankruptcy, was released and discharged. If it was, the motion ought to have been sustained; if not, the motion was properly overruled.

What are the facts concerning the judgment, and the debt upon which it was based? The action in the state court was upon a promissory note, was commenced June 11, 1873, and was accompanied by the issue of an attachment. On the same day this attachment was levied upon three lots in Fort Scott. A motion was subsequently made to discharge the levy of the attachment, on the ground that the property attached was the homestead of one of the defendants, and therefore not subject to seizure under either an attachment or execution. But, as it appeared upon the hearing that the property did not become a homestead until about the first of July, and after the levy of the attachment, the motion was properly overruled. Bullene v. Hiatt, 12 Kan. *98. On the ninth of January, 1874, judgment was rendered, and an order made for the sale of the attached property. On the twenty-fifth of August, 1873, after the commencement of the action in the state court, and after the property had become a homestead, a creditors' petition in bankruptcy was filed against the plaintiffs in error, and on June 2, 1874, discharges in bankruptcy were granted. During the pendency of the action in the state court, no application was made for a stay of proceedings on account of the proceedings in the bankrupt court. The plaintiff below never proved his debt in the bankrupt court. Was the attachment dissolved, and the judgment debt discharged, by the proceedings in bankruptcy? The property attached being the homestead, and exempt under the state law at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, did not pass to the assignee in bankruptcy. It remained the property of the bankrupt, free from any control or interference on the part of the assignee. Nor does it seem to us, notwithstanding some decisions in the federal courts to that effect, that the bankrupt took the property as a purchaser from the assignee. The property never passed away from the bankrupt. It remained his, to all intents and purposes, the same as though no bankrupt proceedings had been instituted. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 5044, 5045; Rix v. Capital Bank, 2 Dill. 367; Bump, Bankr. (7th Ed.) 144. We think, too, that, as this property remains with the bankrupt, jurisdiction to enforce any liens thereon remains with the state court. Whether the bankrupt court has jurisdiction also, and whether it can stay any proceedings in the state court, we are not to inquire, for those questions are not in the case. Rix v. Capital Bank, supra; In re Everitt, 9 N. B. R. 90; Bump, Bankr. 146, 461, and cases cited.

But it is said that the only lien the plaintiff had was one of attachment, created less than four months prior to the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, and that the assignment to the assignee dissolved all such attachments, and consequently destroyed any lien. The language of the act is, "and such assignment shall relate back to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and by operation of law shall vest the title to all such property and estate, both real and personal, in the assignee, although the same is then attached on mesne process as the property of the debtor, and shall dissolve any such attachment made within four months next preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings." Section 5044. The subsequent section describes the kinds of property exempt from this assignment. The two sections are, of course, to be construed together, and the section quoted, therefore, should be construed as though it said expressly, "shall vest the title to all such property and estate, both real and personal," as is not exempt from the operation of the bankrupt act, "although the same" (that is, the unexempt property,—the property conveyed) "is then attached, * * * and shall dissolve any such attachment;" that is, any attachment on the property not exempt,—the property transferred by the assignment to the assignee. We are aware of decisions in the federal courts contrary to these views, and holding that the assignment dissolves all attachments within four months, whether upon exempt property or otherwise. In re Ellis, 1 N. B. R. 555; In re Hambright, 2 N. B. R. 498; In re Stevens, 5 N. B. R. 298. We think, however, that the just and fair construction of the act is as we have given it. As the bankrupt court gets no jurisdiction of the exempt property, it would seem that it should take none over any specific liens upon such property. It may be remarked that the exempt property in this case is exempt, not as among the articles named in the bankrupt act, but as exempt from seizure under attachment and execution by the state law, and therefore permitted by the bankrupt act to be exempt from its operation. Bump, Bankr, (7th Ed.) 142-147. That which makes this case one sui generis is the fact that at the date of the attachment the property was not exempt from seizure, but was at the time of the commencement of the bankrupt proceedings. The attachment, therefore, was good, and created a specific lien upon the property attached. Bullene v. Hiatt, 12 Kan. *98. It remained the property of the bankrupt; and the bankrupt court not taking the property did not disturb the specific lien. Whether, if after the sale of the attached property there should remain a balance on the judgment, this balance would be beyond the reach of the bankrupt's discharge, is a matter we need not now inquire into. The question may never arise. As the case now stands, we think there was no error in overruling the motion to enter a discharge of the judgment.

The decision of the district court will be affirmed.

Replevin for an "American organ," brought by Sumner. Trial, and verdict and judgment for defendant, McFarlan, at the April term, 1874.

C. W. McDonald, for plaintiff.

The sale by Sumner to McNulty was a conditional sale only, or a contract of lease. The notes were given for use of the organ, and their payment was a condition precedent to the transfer of the title. Until the title had passed to McNulty he could not sell and convey any title; he could convey no greater title than he had himself. By the contract itself it was expressly agreed that the title should not pass until full payment was made. This contract is not a mortgage, because the mortgagor must have title before he can execute a mortgage. Sumner has the right to retake the organ when payment fails, even out of the hands of a third party who has innocently and in good faith come in possession of the property. Herring v. Hoppock, 15 N. Y. 409; Price v. Jones, 3 Head, 84; Bradshaw v. Thomas, 7 Yerg. 497; Baker v. Hall, 15 Iowa, 277; Fawcett v. Adams, 32 Ill. 411; Ballard v. Burgett, 40 N. Y. 314; Coggill v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 3 Gray, 545; Dunbar v. Rawles, 28 Ind. 225.

In this state the policy of the law is to protect bona fide purchasers in the possession of personal property purchased from a party who had the possession thereof. Gen. St. 583, art. 2; Id. 504, §§ 3, 4; Martin v. Mathiot, 14 Serg. & R. 214; Rose v. Story, 1 Pa. St. 190; Davis v. Bradley, 24 Vt. 55; Smith v. Lynes, 5 N. Y. 41.

*601 *BREWER, J. This was an action of replevin to recover possession of an organ, and the principal question was as to the title to the property. The testimony of the plaintiff showed that the organ had belonged to him, and had been placed in the possession of one McNulty under and by virtue of a conditional sale. The terms of this contract were as follows: McNulty paid $25 down, and gave seven notes of $25 each. On the margin of each note was written an agreement as follows: "It is hereby agreed between the maker of this note and A. Sumner that the organ, No. 42,914, for the use of which to the maturity thereof this note is given, is and shall remain the property of A. Sumner, and that in default of payment thereof said organ shall be returned to said Sumner, his agent or attorney." It appeared that the $25 cash was paid upon the same agreement, and that none of the notes had been paid. Demand was duly proved. On the part of the defendant it was shown that he bought the organ of McNulty, and knew nothing of the agreement between McNulty and plaintiff. All the testimony is preserved in the bill of exceptions.

Upon this testimony the court charged as follows: "The question for you to decide is whether McFarlan knew of the contract between McNulty and Sumner. If you believe that McFarlan did know of such contract, you must find for the plaintiff. If he did not, you must find for the defendant." In this instruction the court erred. The contract between Sumner and McNulty was a valid one, and by it no title passed to the latter until the payment of these notes. Having no title, he could convey none; and the mere fact of his possession gave him no power to pass title as against plaintiff. See 1 Pars. Cont. 449, and cases cited in notes. The fact that McFarlan was ignorant of Sumner's title will not defeat it; for possession, though prima facie evidence of title, is only prima facie, and subject to *602 be overthrown by *other testimony; and, to acquire title, purchase must be made from the owner, or one authorized to sell.

Neither the statute of frauds, (Gen. St. 504, §§ 3, 4,) nor the chattel mortgage act, (Gen. St. 584, § 9,) helps the defendant; for section 3 refers to a sale unaccompanied by possession, and section 4 to a loan with possession continued for five years; and there was no transfer of title, with chattel mortgage to secure the price, but simply a conditional sale, with the condition unperformed.

The judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to grant a new trial.

JAMES A. HEADLEY and others v. LUTHER C. CHALLISS.

July Term, 1875.

1. Supreme Court: Motion for Rehearing: Questions Considered. Where a case has once been submitted and decided, this court will not, as a rule, upon a motion for a rehearing, consider any question not presented upon the original hearing.
2. Stare Decisis: Extent of Rule. Where a case is brought a second time on error to this court, the first decision will be deemed the settled law of the case, and will not be made a subject of re-examination.<sup>1</sup>
3. ———. This rule extends, not merely to all questions actually presented by counsel, but to all questions existing in the record, and necessarily involved in the decision.

4. ———. Hence where a defendant in a judgment, upon whom the only service had been by publication, made a motion to set aside the judgment as void, because rendered without any legal service or any jurisdiction over the defendant, and upon the hearing of such motion the plaintiff asked leave to correct the notice and proof of publication, which leave was refused, and the motion of the defendant to set aside the judgment sustained, and thereupon the plaintiff prosecuted a proceeding in error to reverse such ruling, upon consideration whereof this court decided that *603 leave ought to have been *given, and remanded the case, with instructions to grant leave to the plaintiff as asked, and thereafter the defendant moved for a rehearing, on the ground, then first presented to this court, that the affidavit for publication was totally defective, and hence that the ruling of the district court was correct and should be sustained, whether the notice and proof of publication were corrected or not, and such motion was overruled for the reason given in the first paragraph of this syllabus, held, that the defendant was, as to the matter of the affidavit, concluded by such decision, and the question is not open to re-examination in a second proceeding in error upon the same record, with the corrected notice and proof of publication.

This case was here before, and is reported in 9 Kan. *684. It was brought here then by Challiss, who complained of the order of the district court overruling his motion for leave to correct a record by supplying a certain "proof of publication," which should have been filed in 1862. This court reversed the order and decision of the district court, and sent the case back, with instructions to the district court "to permit the amendments to be made; the motions [of Headley and others to set aside the original judgment] afterwards to be decided according to the principles" laid down in such decision in 9 Kan. *686, *687. The case being remanded, the district court, at the June term, 1873, allowed the record to be amended in accordance with Challiss' motion; and thereafter, at the June term, 1874, the motions of Headley and others to set aside said judgment of September 27, 1862, again came on for hearing, and were overruled and denied. From this last decision Headley and others now appeal, and bring the case here for review.

A. H. Horton and B. P. Waggener, for plaintiffs in error.

We now bring said proceedings of the court below here for review, and ask this court to reverse the action and decision of the district court, and to instruct the said court to vacate and set aside the said judgment of September 27, 1862, as the same is void. Said *604 judgment was obtained *without any affidavit being filed before service was commenced or had by publication, stating "that service of summons cannot be made within this state on the defendants to be served." Code 1859, § 79; Code 1868, § 73. The defect in the affidavit is fatal. The law is explicit and peremptory, and there is no way of evading it. Without the affidavit, the attempted service by publication is a nullity. Shields v. Miller, 9 Kan. *390, *398.

When the case was in this court at the January term, 1872, it was here at the instance of Challiss only, and the court merely passed upon the error of the district court in refusing to permit the said Challiss to file proper notice in the foreclosure suit, and to supply proof of publication in same case. At the July term, 1873, we made a motion to reargue the cause, but this court then refused, and such refusal did not go to the merits of the motion. We then understood that, as the motions could be heard de novo in the district court on the remanding of the case to that court, and the filing of the amendments and corrections of the record, that we would have full opportunity to present to the district court the matters now suggested; and, if then overruled, we could bring the case to this court for review. This we have done. We never have had a decision of this court upon the matters and record now presented, and we do not think we are to be denied a hearing now. This is the first opportunity we have had to present the fatal defects in the affidavit for publication to this court, and we have a right to a decision thereon.

Again, we also claim that the district court erred in permitting the pretended amendments and corrections to the original record in this case. Instead of filing the right notice in the suit, and of supplying the proper notice with proof of its publication, the court permitted the affidavits of Mr. Glick and Mr. Cochran to take the place of the "publication notice" and of the proof of its publication. These affidavits are made ten years after the original papers and affidavits (if any there were) were made and filed; and *is it possible that service by publication is to be upheld and sustained in this way? The record shows that only publication and proof thereof was had in the attachment case of Challiss v. Headley & Carr, and now the record is contradicted by affidavits made ten years after the entry of the case. A void judgment may be vacated and set aside at any time on motion of the defendant. Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kan. *674.

We insist that no question is presented in this record not previously decided in some stage of this case by this court adversely to reversal of this last decision.

It is now claimed that the affidavit for publication of July 24, 1862, in the original record, is fatally defective. So counsel complained in his original case, and again made this objection the special ground for reconsideration on his motion for reargument in July, 1873. This affidavit stands now as it stood then, and has been twice sustained in this court. For, certainly, if this affidavit is a nullity, and as such makes the judgment and proceedings void, then the decision of the district court in 1871, in deciding the judgment void, was clearly right; and the proceedings thereon held erroneous, being subsequent in order to this affidavit, could not be erroneous if the entire proceeding was a nullity for want of jurisdiction. Hence, when the district court overruled this motion at June term, 1874, it did just what this court had advised. The case at bar is unlike that of Shields v. Miller. Here there was jurisdiction by the commencement of the action, and the service of a summons on three of the six defendants, before attempted service by publication. An action was then duly pending. Code 1859, § 62. In Shields v. Miller the action rested alone on the proceeding for constructive service.

BREWER, J. This is a proceeding in error to review the decision of the district court overruling a motion to set aside a judgment. *606 The judgment was rendered in an action to *foreclose a mortgage, and upon service only by publication. This case has been once before to this court. Challiss v. Headley, 9 Kan. *684. Upon abundant authority and well-settled principles the decision at that time has become the established law of the case. Phelan v. City of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 40; Polack v. McGrath, 38 Cal. 666; Yates v. Smith, 40 Cal. 662; McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 570; Washington B. Co. v. Stewart, 3 How. 413; Booth v. Com., 7 Metc. 286; Hosack's Ex'rs v. Rogers, 25 Wend. 313; Mason v. Mason, 5 Bush, 187. Whatever, therefore, was at that time decided, is not now a matter for re-examination. Nor is this limited to the mere questions noticed in the opinion, nor, indeed, to the actual matters presented by the respective counsel, and considered by the court. It extends to all matters actually existing in the record, and necessarily involved in the decision. Thus, in the case from 3 How., cited above, a question was raised as to the jurisdiction of the court; but as the case had once before been taken to the court, and a decision rendered upon the merits, the question of the jurisdiction was held to be also settled, although, as a matter of fact, it had not been considered; and this, because jurisdiction is involved and assumed in an inquiry into and a decision upon the merits. See, also, the cases above cited from 7 Metc., 25 Wend., 5 Bush., and 38 Cal.

The motion in the district court was to set aside the judgment for want of service. The question presented to the court, and passed upon when the record was brought here before, was as to the right to amend the record by supplying the correct notice and proof of publication. There had been two cases between the same parties, and in the record of this case had been introduced the notice and proof belonging to the other. The district court held that this amendment could not be made. This court reversed such ruling, and decided that the amendment ought to be permitted. Now, while the motion filed was broad enough to include and did specifically mention the insufficiency of the affidavit,—the principal matter now pre- *607 sented,—yet the attention of this court was not called *to it, and the case was decided upon the points just noticed. Subsequently the learned counsel for the Headleys moved for a rehearing upon the ground specifically that the affidavit was fatally defective, and that hence the decision of the district court ought to be sustained, whether there was error or not in refusing leave to amend; for, though the notice and proof of publication were beyond exception, if the affidavit therefor was fatally defective the service was bad, jurisdiction was not acquired, and the motion to set aside ought to have been sustained. This motion was overruled upon the ground, as counsel correctly suppose, that the question raised was a new question, not presented by brief or argument of counsel at the first hearing; for while this court may in its discretion, and in furtherance of justice, upon a motion for a rehearing, examine into new questions, and upon them modify or revise its rulings, yet it is purely a matter of discretion, and not of legal right; and the court will seldom examine beyond the questions already presented. A party may not settle the law of his case by piecemeal before this court, any more than he may settle the facts in that way before the district court. When the case is tried, he must be prepared to present his entire claim, or his entire defense. Now, the sufficiency of the affidavit was a question actually existing, and apparent upon the record, and really involved in the decision; for an error in refusing leave to amend a record works no substantial injury to a party when the record as amended would be equally void. Upon these considerations, and upon these alone, we hold that the record of the case and judgment, as presented, must be sustained, and the ruling of the district court affirmed. As to the nature of the amendments made, and proof offered in support of the record, we think it unnecessary to more than refer to the opinions in this case when here before, and the similar case of Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kan. *674.

The judgment will be affirmed.

*A. BALLINGER v. LIZZIE LANTIER.

July Term, 1875.

1. Attachment: Order of: When Bond must be Given. In all cases where an order of attachment is issued, except where the defendant is a non-resident of the state, or a foreign corporation, an attachment bond must be given by the plaintiff. And where the defendant is not a non-resident of the state, nor a foreign corporation, and no such bond is given, the attachment should be dissolved on motion of the defendant.<sup>1</sup>

- 2. Residence: Removal from State: Non-Resident. A resident of the state of Kansas can become a non-resident only by leaving the state with the intention of becoming a non-resident; hence where a person leaves his former home in this state, and starts for another state, with the intention of becoming a non-resident of this state, and a resident of said other state, he does not become a non-resident of this state until he gets outside of the state.<sup>1</sup>
- 8. Pleading: Petition: Answer: When Reply Necessary. Where a plaintiff sets forth in his petition a cause of action for goods sold and delivered, and does not mention that any promissory note or notes were given for the price of the goods, and the defendant afterwards sets forth in his answer that the goods were sold on credit, and that three promissory notes were given for the price thereof, and that neither of said notes is yet due, held, that this answer of the defendant sets forth new matter constituting a defense to the plaintiff's action, and that it requires a reply from the plaintiff to put it in issue.

Lantier recovered a judgment against Ballinger, at the April term, 1874, of the district court, for $837, and costs, and Ballinger brings the record here for review.

Ruggles & Sterry, for plaintiff in error.

The court erred in overruling the motion of the plaintiff in error to dissolve the attachment. Under every ground of attachment stated in the affidavit upon which said order was issued except one, viz., "that the defendant below was, at the time of the commencement of the action, a non-resident of this state," it was absolutely necessary that the plaintiff below should file a bond or undertaking before the issuance of the order. Code, § 192; Laws 1870, p. 172, § 5. No undertaking having been filed, and the defendant below having moved to dissolve said attachment on the ground that he was not a non-resident at the commencement of the action, and having denied under oath that he was such non-resident, said motion should have been sustained, unless, upon the issue thus found, the charge made is satisfactorily sustained by the evidence introduced on the hearing of this motion. Chauncey v. Paige, 9 Ohio St. 397; Fulton v. Mehrenfield, 1 Cin. Rep. 154. The evidence discloses, beyond a doubt, that up to the tenth of November (the day before the affidavit for attachment was filed) said defendant had been a resident of and doing business in Eureka, in said state, and that he was still in the state at the time of the filing of this affidavit for the order of attachment and the issuing of said order. This evidence shows that Ballinger was then, as he had been, a resident of the state. Story, Conf. Laws, § 41; Fulton v. Mehrenfield, 1 Cin. Rep. 154; Jennison v. Hapgood, 10 Pick. 97; Kugler v. Shreve, 28 N. J. Law, 129.

<sup>1</sup>In order to effect a change of residence, there must exist both the intention to change and the fact of removal. Adams v. Evans, 19 Kan. 174. See, in this connection, Amsbaugh v. Exchange Bank, 38 Kan. 100; S. C. 5 Pac. Rep. 884.

Said district court erred in overruling the motion made by plaintiff in error for judgment on the pleadings. That this motion should have been granted seems clearly manifest from a mere inspection of the pleadings and issues before the court at the time the motion was made. The answer contained new matter showing a perfect defense, and no reply had been filed.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by Lizzie Lantier, administratrix of the estate of H. Lantier, deceased, for goods sold and delivered. An order of attachment was issued in the case at the commencement of the action. The final judgment of the court below was that the plaintiff recover of the defendant for the goods sold and delivered, and that the goods attached be sold to satisfy such judgment. The defendant below now complains in this court.

On November 10, 1873, and previous thereto, the defendant *610 was a resident of Eureka, Greenwood county. On the *night of that day he left Eureka, intending to become a non-resident of the state of Kansas, and a resident of the state of Iowa. On the next day the plaintiff commenced this action. She also at the same time obtained an order of attachment, which was served on the same day. The affidavit upon which the attachment was issued set forth as grounds therefor the first, second, third, and eighth statutory grounds for attachment. Code, § 190; Laws 1870, pp. 171, 172. The affidavit was sufficient. But no bond or undertaking in attachment was ever executed or filed. Afterwards the defendant moved the court to dissolve the attachment on various grounds, among which was that "the defendant was not, at the time said order of attachment was issued and served, 'a non-resident of the state of Kansas,' as the plaintiff alleged in her affidavit, nor was any attachment bond ever filed in the case." On the hearing of the motion both of these grounds were shown to be true, and yet the court overruled the defendant's motion. The court probably believed that, in law, the defendant was a non-resident. In this we think the court erred. In all cases of attachment, except where the defendant is a non-resident, or a foreign corporation, an attachment bond must be given by the plaintiff, (Code, § 192; Laws 1870, p. 172, § 5;) and the defendant in this case was neither. It is true, he had determined to become a non-resident of the state; but still he was still in the state when the order of attachment was issued and served, and was therefore not a non-resident. A resident of the state can become a non-resident only by leaving the state with the intention of becoming a non-resident. In the present case the defendant had not left the state when the order of attachment was issued and served. In one more day he probably would have been out of the state, and therefore a non-resident. But that one day is as important as though it had been a year. The order of attachment should have been dissolved.

The petition of the plaintiff was not very formal, but still, we think, it stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It probably would have been better if the petition *had stated all the facts of the case, and left nothing for the defendant to do but deny generally. It stated that the plaintiff "sold to the said A. Ballinger a stock of drugs, oils, paints, lamps, stationery, and furniture pertaining to a drug-store, for the sum of $800;" and "that the said sum of $800 has never been paid, nor any part thereof, but that the same yet remains due and unpaid." The petition did not mention, as the fact really was, that three promissory notes, not due when the action was commenced, were given for said $800.

The answer of the defendant, we think, was also sufficient; and, as it alleged some new matter constituting a defense to the plaintiff's petition, we think it needed a reply from the plaintiff. The first defense stated in the answer was merely a general denial, and put in issue the truth of the allegations of the plaintiff's petition. The second defense was but little more than a general denial. If, however, the defendant had, under this defense, shown upon the trial that any of the "drugs, oils, paints, lamps, stationery, and furniture pertaining to a drug store" were in fact, as he alleged, "spirituous, vinous, or intoxicating liquors," within the meaning of the dram-shop act, (Gen. St. 399 et seq..) then, as the plaintiff had filed no reply, it is possible that she could not have shown that she had a license to sell that kind of goods. But upon this question we express no opinion.

The third and last defense stated in the answer substantially admits the plaintiff's cause of action, except that it denies that the amount for which the goods were sold was due at the commencement of the action; and by such admission; and to that extent, it substantially overrules the first and second defenses. Butler v. Kaulback, 8 Kan. *668, *671 et seq. But the defendant, after substantially admitting the plaintiff's cause of action, then set forth as new matter, in avoidance thereof, that a higher security was given, to-wit, that three promissory notes were given for the debt, describing the notes, and showing and alleging that neither of these notes was due when this action was commenced. Now, we think this stated a good defense to the plaintiff's action; and as it was new matter it *needed a reply to put it in issue, and as no reply was ever filed it must be taken as true. Code, § 128. Hence the court below erred in trying the cause, making findings, and rendering judgment over the objections of the defendant. According to the evidence, and the findings of the court below, the plaintiff had a good defense to the defendant's answer, and she ought to have set it up in a reply. Or probably it would have been better if she had set forth all the facts of the case in her original petition. It would seem from the evidence and the findings of the court below that said goods were sold to the defendant for $800, to be paid for in cash down, or in three equal promissory notes, with approved security, due in three, six, and nine months, respectively. The defendant elected to pay with the notes, and furnished them, and they were accepted by the plaintiff; but the name of the surety agreed upon by the parties was forged to the notes.

The judgment of the court below will have to be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings. We think that such proceedings may be had in the case that substantial justice may finally be done between the parties. It was evidently the strong desire of the trial court to do justice between the parties that caused it to err in the above-named particulars. Judgment reversed.

F. C. MARTSOLF v. ROBERT BARNWELL.

July Term, 1875.

1. Referee: Conclusiveness of Report. Where a case is tried before a referee who reports his findings of fact and conclusions of law, and no motion is made to set aside the report, the findings of fact become conclusive as to the facts of the case.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———: Conclusions of Law for the Court. The conclusions of law, however, drawn from these facts, remain for consideration by the court, and if it is satisfied that the referee erred in such conclusions, it is *618 its duty to apply the law correctly, and render such judgment as is appropriate to the facts.
3. Liens: Priority of: Mortgagee and Mechanic. Under the lien law of 1871, where a mortgage was executed and recorded on August 21st, and a contract to erect a hotel was executed and the work thereon commenced on August 23d, the lien of the mortgagee is prior to the mechanic's lien of the contractor.
4. ———. Where such mortgage did not upon its face provide for future advances, yet as a matter of fact the money was paid over at different times to the mortgagor, and only a small portion before the commencement of the work, but it did not appear that any part of the work done or materials furnished, which were not paid for and for which a lien was claimed, were so due and furnished before the last advancement of money by the mortgagee upon said mortgage, the lien of the mortgagee was properly adjudged the prior lien.

An action to foreclose a mortgage was brought by Charles McDougall, as plaintiff, against Egbert J. Blood and wife, as mortgagees. Martsolf and Barnwell were joined as co-defendants. They answered separately, Martsolf claiming a mechanic's lien on the mortgaged premises under a contract dated August 23, 1871, and Barnwell claiming under a mortgage executed and recorded two days earlier. The case was referred to C. C. N., who reported the facts as to each claim, but found as conclusions of law that Martsolf's lien was first, Barnwell's second, and McDougall's third, in order of priority. The district court, at the September term, 1873, upon the facts as reported, held that the referee erred in respect to the liens of Martsolf and Barnwell, and gave judgment in favor of the several lienholders, and in the order of priority as follows: In favor of Barnwell, $5,000; in favor of Martsolf, $1,754.50; in favor of McDougall, $1,551. Martsolf brings the case here on error for review.

Sluss & Dyer, for plaintiff in error.

The findings of fact by the referee, being undisturbed by the court, are conclusive as to the determination of the questions of fact. The referee finds that the Barnwell note and mortgage were made *614 August 21, 1871; that prior to that *time Martsolf and Blood had agreed upon the terms of their contract, and it had been reduced to writing by Barnwell, and there was then an understanding had between Blood, Barnwell, and Martsolf that Barnwell was to furnish the money to pay Martsolf, and to furnish it as the work progressed. Martsolf then had the right to suppose, when he began work, on the 23d, that no money had been advanced, or would be advanced, by Barnwell to Blood, until after the work should be commenced. He had the right to suppose that Barnwell would not have any lien upon the premises until money was actually advanced, and then only to the extent of the advancement. Clayton v. Drake, 17 Ohio, 371. He had the right to suppose that he would be entitled to a lien from the date of the commencement of the work. Laws 1872, c. 141, § 1. And although the mortgage was of record, in the absence of any proof of actual knowledge of it, and in the absence of proof of any knowledge that $400 had been advanced by Barnwell under the mortgage, he had the right to rely upon the arrangement made previously as to the time when the advances were to be made. This arrangement which existed between the three was evidently entered into in view of the terms of payment as expressed in Martsolf's contract with Blood.

The referee further finds that Barnwell, from first to last, recognized Martsolf as having the prior lien. But in any event, under the authorities cited, Barnwell could not claim a first lien for more than $400. But there are two things which should not be overlooked in determining even that: Barnwell, by his conduct and agreement with Martsolf and Blood, represented to Martsolf that $6,000 would be advanced to pay him for the work; that this money should be advanced as the work progressed, in accordance with the terms of the engagements of Blood to himself. In violation of this engagement Barnwell advanced Blood $400 before the work commenced, and before

Blood was under any obligation to pay Martsolf anything, and finally failed and refused to advance the whole sum as he had agreed; *615 and it is reason*able to suppose Martsolf would have been paid in full if Barnwell had kept his agreement. These facts estop Barnwell from claiming even the $400 as a prior lien.

A. L. Williams and Ross Burns, for defendant in error.

Notwithstanding the fact that Barnwell's mortgage was made and recorded before Martsolf made his contract, or commenced work, the referee found that Martsolf's lien was prior to the mortgage, and gave as his reasons for this conclusion of law the following: "(1) The contract for the building was written out by Barnwell before the twenty-first of August, 1871, and was executed August 23d, in presence of Barnwell; therefore Barnwell is estopped to deny the priority of Martsolf's lien. (2) When the mortgage was made to Barnwell, (August 21st,) and the contract with Martsolf, (August 23d,) Blood only owned one-half of the lots. He afterwards, (December 18, 1871,) and before the filing of Martsolf's lien, (January 29, 1872,) perfected his title to the whole property; therefore such subsequently acquired title inured, by operation of law, to the benefit of the junior lien, to the exclusion of the senior."

It is needless to say that no rules of law or equity were even incidentally mentioned as tending to support such propositions. The lien under which plaintiff in error claims is purely the creature of statute law. Its terms, its force, its effect, and its priority must be determined by that law. The lien law of 1871 is broad enough as it is, and the referee was not justified in interpolating new provisions by way of experiment. There might have been some shadow of excuse if it had been shown, or even asserted, that Barnwell had concealed the existence of his mortgage. On the contrary, it is shown, and the fact dwelt on by the referee, that Martsolf knew all about the mortgage, and that Barnwell was to furnish the money to build the house. Under such circumstances the following, in the mechanic's lien law of 1871, p. 252, will be found to not inaptly express the true rule of priority between the parties:

"Section 1. * * * Such lien shall be preferred to all other *616 *liens and incumbrances which may attach to or upon such lands * * * subsequent to the commencement of such building."

It seems too plain for argument that the whole proceedings before the referee were based either upon the deliberate intention to ignore the rights of a non-resident, or in gross ignorance of what those rights were. It may be a valid presumption of fact that all persons who agree to erect houses will be compelled to file a lien to secure their pay, but the referee in this case makes it a presumption of law. The law presumes that every man will pay his debts, but, with prudent foresight, secures to the creditor a remedy in any case where the presumption fails. Thus, the presumption of law in this case was that

Blood would voluntarily pay Martsolf what he owed him. But, in case he did not, the law contracted for him that Martsolf should have a lien upon the premises improved, to date from the commencement of the improvements. All persons acquiring an interest after work is begun, do so warned by the law of a contingency which, if it arises, postpones their interest or claim to the lien of Martsolf. But the law does not, and cannot, say that a lien legally acquired upon property which is in no other way incumbered, can afterwards, by operation of law, be postponed to the lien of a party who, at the time of making the first lien, had no lien, and no right to a lien.

The second conclusion of law is equally objectionable. It may be conceded that the subsequently acquired title of the mortgagor inured to the benefit of his mortgagee and other lienholders; but how it would have the effect to make the last lien better than the first is not so plain. If such after-acquired title does inure to the benefit of prior grantees, (and it is admitted that it does,) it has the effect to make perfect the grantor's title, and dates that perfected title back to the time of the first conveyance. In other words, the sheriff's deed of December 18, 1871, made Blood's title good on the twenty-*617 first of the preceding August, and left the mortgagee and lienholder's questions of priority in the same situation they *would have been had Blood's title been originally perfect. On the eighteenth of December, 1871, then, Blood's title became perfect. How, under such circumstances, can it be held that an inchoate lien—a lien not yet in existence, a lien which may never exist, and which, in truth, does not become a lien until January 29, 1872—can relate back and take precedence of a mortgage duly recorded before the commencement of the work upon which the lien is founded?

BREWER, J. The question in this case is as to the priority of certain liens. The matter was tried before a referee, who filed his report, with findings of fact and conclusions of law. He gave plaintiff in error priority over Barnwell, defendant in error. The district court, however, upon the facts as reported by the referee, awarded priority to Barnwell. No objection was made by plaintiff in error to the referee's report, and no motion made by him to set it aside. The facts, therefore, as found by the referee, are beyond question, and the only matter for consideration is the judgment required upon such facts. The district court was not bound by the conclusions of law of the referee any more than this court is bound by the conclusions of the district court. It was the duty of that court, upon examination of the facts found, to see that the proper judgment was entered upon them, whatever might have been the conclusions of the referee, as it is the duty of this court, upon a re-examination, to see if there has been any error in the conclusions and judgment of that court, and, if so, to direct the entry of the proper judgment.

Which lien was prior? Barnwell claimed a mortgage; Martsolf, a mechanic's lien. Barnwell's mortgage was executed and recorded August 21, 1871. Martsolf's contract for work was executed, and his work commenced, August 23, 1871. Upon this alone Barnwell would have unquestioned priority. As against this, it is claimed that, prior to the execution of the mortgage, there was an understanding between the mortgagee, the lot-owner, and Martsolf, by which Martsolf was to erect a building, and the mortgagee was to advance to the lot-owner the money needed to pay for the work as it progressed, and that the mortgagee had actually drawn up the contract for the work between the lot-owner and Martsolf; and that from that understanding Martsolf had a right to suppose, on the 23d, when he executed his contract and commenced work, that no money had actually been advanced or mortgage executed. We fail to appreciate the force of this argument. It does not seem reasonable that a lot-owner would sign a contract for the construction of a large building (in this case a hotel) before he either had the money to pay for it, or had perfected arrangements to obtain it. Martsolf, then, ought to have presumed, if he was acting upon presumptions, that, if money was to be borrowed, the security therefor would be perfected before the building contract was signed. But the rights of these parties do not rest upon presumptions. The mortgage was on record, and Martsolf was chargeable with notice of its existence. He could acquire no rights against it, or in precedence of it. If doubtful about payment, or unwilling to risk the security of a second lien, he could decline the proposed contract.

Again, it was said that the money was to be advanced as the work progressed, and that in fact only a small portion was advanced prior to the commencement of the work, and that, therefore, to the extent of such prior advancement alone, could Barnwell's mortgage be preferred to the mechanic's lien. In this we think counsel are mistaken. The mortgage was for a single, fixed amount, and contained no provision for future advances. Now, if it be true that equity will look behind the face of the mortgage, and date the liens from the times of the several advances of money by the mortgagee, (and upon this question we express no opinion,) it will also, upon the same principle, date the mechanics' liens from the times of furnishing material and doing work. If the one can claim a lien only from the time of paying over his money, surely the other can claim his only from the time of supplying material and doing work. At such times only does either mortgagee or mechanic part with, or mortgagor and lot-owner receive, value. And, if this is the test of a lien, it must be so for both alike. Now, it does not appear that Martsolf supplied any material, or did any work, for which he did not receive pay, or for which he claimed a lien, prior to the last advance of money by the mortgagee. Under those circumstances he is in no position to claim that his entire lien should be referred back to the date of the commencement of his work, and the mortgagee's be distributed along the dates of the several advances of money. Whether, therefore, we regard the dates of the liens of the two parties from either a legal or an equitable standpoint, the mortgagee must be preferred to the mechanic. It seems to us, therefore, that there was no error in the rulings of the district court, and the judgment must be affirmed.

SHELLABARGER & LEIDIGH v. ISAAC THAYER and others.

July Term, 1875.

1. Mechanic's Lien: Lien of Subcontractor. Under the lien law of 1872 the lien of the subcontractor is limited only by the amount contracted to be paid the contractor; and all payments made to the contractor prior to the expiration of sixty days after the completion of the building are at the risk of the owner, and cannot be taken in reduction of the lien of the subcontractor.<sup>1</sup>
2. ———. Thus, where T. entered into a contract with L., by which the latter agreed to build a house upon the lot of the former for $1,300, $800 of which was paid on the execution of the contract, and the balance was to be paid after the completion of the building, and thereupon L. proceeded to perform his contract, and build the house, and in so doing bought lumber and material of S., to the amount of about $900, for which he did not pay, held, that S. was entitled to a lien for the full amount of his bill.
3. Attorney's Fee not Taxable. An attorney's fee is not taxable on the foreclosure of any lien, unless in pursuance of a contract therefor.

*620 *Error from Sedgwick district court.

Shellabarger & Leidigh, plaintiffs, claimed a subcontractors' lien upon lot No. 68, on Main street, in the city of Wichita, owned by Isaac Thayer and George Skipton, two of the defendants, for lumber sold to one H. H. Lindsay, to be used in the constructions of a building which Lindsay had contracted with said Thayer & Skipton to erect on said lot. Lindsay died after the completion of the building, and his administrator was made a co-defendant. The district court, at the September term, 1874, found due plaintiffs, from Lindsay's estate, on account of said lumber, $918.74, and interest thereon, and $75 attorney's fees, but held that their right to a lien, as against the owners of the lot, Thayer & Skipton, was limited to the amount which T. & S. owed Lindsay, to-wit, $500 and interest. Plaintiffs bring the case here.

Sluss & Dyer, for plaintiffs.

Does a payment made by the owner to the original contractor, at the time of the making of the contract, and before the commencement of the building, operate to defeat, to that extent, the lien of a subcontractor? Are subcontractors entitled to a lien upon the building and real estate to a sum equal to the original contract price, or only to a sum equal to what was owing to the original contractor by the owner at the time the subcontractor commenced furnishing the material? We think the only reasonable construction that can be placed upon section 2 of chapter 141 of the Laws of 1872 is that subcontractors are entitled to a lien for the full amount of their claim not exceeding the amount for which the original contractor agreed to perform the labor and furnish the material; and that it makes no difference whether the owner paid a part or the whole of the contract price at the time of the execution of the contract. Otherwise the owner and contractor would have it in their power to wholly *621 defeat any and all liens of *subcontractors, and thus avoid the statute. We cannot express it in any stronger language than that of the statute: "But the risk of all payments made to the original contractor shall be upon the owner until the expiration of the 60 days hereinbefore specified." Nor is this unjust, for the same section provides that no owner shall be liable to an action by the contractor until the expiration of 60 days from the "completion of the building." See, also, Code 1868, §§ 632, 633; Laws 1870, c. 87, §§ 23, 24; Laws 1871, c. 97, § 2. As to constitutional questions raised by defendant in error, see Cooley, Const. Lim. 151, 168, 171; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 497; Turnpike Co. v. State, 21 Mich. 236; Jones v. Land-office Com'r, 28 Ind. 382.

Wm. Baldwin, for defendants in error.

Where the immediate contract between the owner and builder provides for a different security, (as in this case, where a note and mortgage were given,) it is entirely inconsistent with the idea of a mechanic's lien on the same land to secure the debt contracted for the building. See Burrough v. Baughman, 9 Mich. 218. In such case the original contractor could not have a mechanic's lien; and as section 2 of chapter 141 of the Laws of 1872 merely extends the rights of the contractor to the subcontractor, the subcontractor could have none. But, suppose a mechanic's lien could legally attach in this case, then, by the provisions of said section 2, the subcontractor is to have a lien for the amount due him on the property of the "owner" "from the same time and to the same extent, and in the same manner and to the same extent," as his original contractor would have. Now, by section 1 of the same statute, a lien only to the extent of the amount due from the "owner" to the original contractor, on eleventh of July, 1872, (the day on which the plaintiffs first had any connection with the transactions in relation to said building,) could have been created or obtained, viz., for the sum of $500, and no more;

consequently the lien of the subcontractors would, by the *622 *plain terms of the statute, be restricted to that amount.

That part of the statute providing that payments made by the owner to the contractor shall be "at the risk of the owner," and that part providing that "contractor shall not sue owner until," etc., cannot, it would seem, be made to apply in this case to any part of the contract price of the building except the $500 remaining unpaid on said eleventh of July, 1872. Any other construction of the language of the statute would place it in the power of the contractor, by mere silent collusion with a "stranger," to incumber the property of the owner, without his knowledge, and in fraud of his rights. The legislature cannot be presumed to have intended said statute to have any such effect. The record does not show that the defendant in error ever knew of any claim of plaintiffs against said real estate as the subcontractor of Lindsay, until the twenty-third day of August, 1872, after said building was completed. As said section 2 of chapter 141 of the Laws of 1872 provides that the owner may pay the demand of the subcontractor, and have it held a payment of such amount to the contractor, it would seem that the legislature contemplated that the right of lien of the subcontractor could not be for a greater amount than was owing from the owner to the principal contractor under their contract, and that a subcontractor's lien should not attach until the "owner" had notice of his relation to the principal contractor.

If the construction of said section 2 contended for in behalf of the plaintiffs is the correct construction, then it is an infraction of section 16 of article 2 of the constitution, as giving the statute a broader effect than that indicated by its title, and, in so far as it does this, it is void. See Cooley, Const. Lim. c. 6, § 5, p. 148. And, if that be "the only reasonable construction," then it is manifestly inequitable and unjust, in that it renders it necessary that all building contracts shall be made on time, and for a money consideration only,—thus tending to prevent the improvement of real estate, the encouragement of which is the origin and object of the mechan-*623 ic's lien laws,—and as *being unequal legislation, for the benefit of one class, and to the detriment of another equally entitled to the protection of the laws.

BREWER, J. The facts in this case are, briefly, these: On June 28, 1872, the defendants in error contracted with one H. H. Lindsay for the building of a house on a lot belonging to them in the town of Wichita. The contract price was $1,300,—$800 of which was paid at the execution of the contract, and before the commencement of the work. Lindsay completed his contract. The plaintiffs in error sold Lindsay lumber for the building to the amount of about $900. Having taken the proper steps to perfect their lien, the question is whether it extends to the full amount of their bill, or simply to the amount due the contractor. It is not pretended that Lindsay received any money from the defendants after the plaintiffs had commenced furnishing lumber, or, indeed, after the commencement of the building,—the only payment being the $800. The law in force at the time of this building, (Laws 1872, c. 141, p. 294, § 2,) giving to subcontractors their lien, requires the filing of the statement within sixty days after the completion of the building, etc., and then reads: "And, if the contractor does not pay such person or subcontractor for the same, such subcontractor or person shall have a lien, for the amount due for such labor or material, on such lot or lots, from the same time and to the same extent, and in the same manner and to the same extent, as such original contractor: provided, that the owner shall not be liable to such subcontractor for any greater amount than he contracted to pay the original contractor; but the risk of all payments made to the original contractor shall be upon the owner until the expiration of the sixty days hereinbefore specified; and no owner shall be liable to an action by the contractor until the expiration of said sixty days," etc.

Three things are clear from this: First, that the subcontractor has a lien for his work or material; second, that the limit of *624 such lien is the amount contracted to be paid to the *original contractor; and, third, that the risk of all payments up to a certain date is upon the owner. Now, the money contracted to be paid in this case was $1,300. That, then, is the limit of the subcontractor's lien,—not the amount due at the time of notice, or delivery of material, but the amount contracted to be paid. True, the owners had paid $800 of that amount, but the risk of such payment was upon them. The very purpose of this clause in the statute was to prevent the cutting off of the liens of subcontractors by early payments to the contractor; and this is a clause, the exact counterpart of which we have not found in the statutes of any other state. In most, the lien applies only to the amount due at the time of notice. Such, also, until 1872, was our own law. Laws 1871, p. 253, § 2; Gen. St. p. 756, § 632.

It must be borne in mind that this is not an attempt to compel payment by the lot-owners before the time fixed by the contract therefor; for, though the contract called for note and mortgage for the five hundred dollars, yet the answer admits that amount to be due; nor to compel payment in money, when payment in some other commodity was stipulated for. Payment was contracted for in money; and the only question is whether, by advance payment, the lien of the subcontractor can be out off. The plain letter of the statute forbids it. We do not think the law obnoxious to the constitutional objections raised against it.

We do not understand that the attorney's fees can be taxed in a case like this. Stover v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. *369.

The judgment of the district court will be modified, and the case remanded, with instructions to adjudge the entire amount found due the plaintiffs in error (less the attorney's fees) a lien upon the premises.

*625   *HENRY ALLEN and others v. JOSEPH HANNUM and others.

July Term, 1875.

Will: Refusal of Widow to Accept: Effect as to Others. Where a widow fails and refuses to accept under the will of the deceased husband, but elects to take under the law of descents and distributions, such failure and refusal does not render the will inoperative further than as between herself and others claiming portions of the estate. As between other persons, the will will be enforced as near in accordance with the intention of the testator as it can be so enforced.

Error from Nemaha district court.

Action for partition, brought by Olive Allen, as plaintiff, against Joseph Hannum, as executor, etc., and Henry Allen, Isaac W. Howe, Thomas Keller, Francis Hannum, Florence Hannum, Josephine Hannum, Julia Hannum, and Marietta Hannum, as defendants. The questions involved arose under the last will and testament of Samuel Allen, deceased, the father of said Henry Allen. The district court, at the April term, 1874, gave judgment, directing partition to be made, assigning one-half the lands in controversy to the plaintiff, Olive Allen, (widow of said Samuel,) and the remaining one-half in equal parts to said Francis, Florence, Josephine, Julia, and Marietta Hannum, minor children of the testator's sister. Henry Allen brings the case here for review.

Joseph Sharpe, for plaintiff in error, contended that the district court erred in deciding that the children of Huldah A. Hannum were owners in fee of one-half part of the real estate of which Samuel Allen died seized. Said judgment is not only erroneous, but irregular, as the answer of Henry Allen, the son and heir of said Samuel, was on file in said court, and was admitted to be true. Said Henry had rights that were overlooked and ignored, and said district court should have modified its judgment in accordance with the facts.

*626   *VALENTINE, J. This was an action for partition of real estate, brought by Olive Allen against Joseph Hannum, Henry Allen, and seven others. Olive Allen got all she asked for in the court below, and, of course, she has no right to now complain in this court. But has Henry Allen, the other plaintiff in error, any right to complain? The facts of the case seem to be about as follows: The property in controversy originally belonged to Samuel Allen. He made a will, devising and bequeathing all his estate (after payment of debts and funeral expenses) to his wife, said Olive Allen, during her natural life, and, after her death, (after paying her debts, funeral expenses, and certain legacies,) then equally to all the minor children of his daughter, Huldah A. Hannum. One of the above-mentioned legacies was a legacy of fifty dollars to his son, said Henry Allen. Afterwards said Samuel Allen died, leaving surviving him his wife, said Olive, one son, said Henry, and one daughter, said Huldah A. Hannum. His widow refused to accept under the provisions of the will, but elected to take under the provisions of the law of descents and distributions; and hence she takes absolutely (instead of for life) one-half of all the estate of said Samuel Allen, deceased. The other half of the estate, we think, should be distributed in accordance with the will, or as near in accordance therewith as may be possible under the circumstances of the case. Of course, the whole estate is first chargeable with the payment of the debts of the estate, then the widow takes one-half thereof, then the legacies are to be paid out of the other half, and then the remainder goes equally to the minor children of Huldah A. Hannum. Henry Allen is entitled to nothing but his legacy of fifty dollars; and that portion of his father's estate which goes to his sister Huldah's children will be subject to the payment of such legacy. There is nothing in the judgment of the district court which will interfere with this order of the distribution of said estate, and hence we do not think the *627 *district court erred. The refusal of the widow to take under the will did not render the will inoperative any further than as between the widow and others claiming portions of the estate. It did not render the will inoperative as between the issue of said Samuel Allen and the devisees, legatees, and executor.

July Term, 1875.

1. Municipal Corporations: Cities of First Class: Power of Council, by Ordinance, to Levy and Collect License Taxes from Insurance Companies and Insurance Agents. The act of the legislature of Kansas of 1870 incorporating cities of the first class, which provides that the mayor and council of such cities shall have power to enact ordinances, "to levy and collect a license tax on fire or life insurance companies or agencies, and to impose fines, forfeitures, and penalties for the breach of any ordinances," does, by its terms, give to the mayor and council of a city of the first class the power to enact an ordinance which shall provide that every fire or life insurance company intending to do business in such city shall first obtain a license from the city to do such business; that the price of each license shall be $50 for a fire insurance company, and $100 for a life insurance company; and that any person who shall violate such ordinance shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $200, etc.
2. Insurance Department: Act Creating, not in Conflict with Act of 1870. Where a city of the first class did, in 1870, in pursuance of such statute, enact such an ordinance as that above mentioned, held, that the act of the legislature of 1871 creating the insurance department did not repeal or modify said statute of 1870, or said ordinance, so as to exempt from the operation of said ordinance that class of foreign corporations doing business in Kansas and in said city which pays to the superintendent of insurance, under section 17 of the Laws of 1871, on account of the laws of their own state, an amount greater than that ordinarily paid by other insurance companies.
- *628 *8. ———. Neither said statute of 1870, nor said ordinance, so far as either has any application to this case, is in violation of section 1 of article 11 of the constitution, which requires that "the legislature shall provide for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation."
4. ———. Neither said statute of 1870, nor said ordinance, so far as either has any application to this case, is in violation of section 4 of article 11 of the constitution, which provides that "no tax shall be levied except in pursuance of a law which shall distinctly state the object of the same," although said ordinance may not distinctly state what shall be done with the money paid by the insurance companies for licenses.

Appeal from Leavenworth criminal court.

Booth, an agent of a foreign life insurance company, was prosecuted before the police court for a violation of an ordinance of the city of Leavenworth requiring foreign insurance companies to pay certain license taxes for the privilege of doing business in said city. The action was removed by appeal to the criminal court,<sup>2</sup> where a trial was had at the December term, 1874. It was a test case for the purpose of determining the validity of said city ordinance. The criminal court held the ordinance valid. Booth was thereupon found guilty, and fined $50, and costs.

Clough & Wheat, for appellant.

When the Wisconsin insurance company, for which Booth was agent, paid to the state superintendent of insurance, in accordance with the requirements of the statute creating the insurance department, the sum of $325 for the same purpose as required by the Wisconsin laws, (that is, for fines, penalties, licenses, fees, etc.,) such company might, for the year thus paid for, do business in this *629 state without being sub*jected to any fine for so doing. If it could not, then the amount thus paid is not, in practical effect, for fines, penalties, etc. The city cannot, of course, impose any fine except by virtue of a law of the state authorizing it so to do, and therefore, when, as by section 17 of the insurance law, (Laws 1871, p. 221,) certain payments are in certain special cases, as in this, made for fines, penalties, licenses, fees, etc., such payment is made in lieu of fines, penalties, licenses and fees, and the city is not authorized in such special case to require a license to be paid for, or to fine, etc. When a city passes or enacts an ordinance which imposes a fine by virtue of power conferred on it by a state law, it does so by virtue of delegated power, and does so as a part of the law-making power of the state. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 245, and notes.

The ordinance mentioned in the agreed statement of facts is void, because of article 11 of the constitution of this state, in so far as thereby any tax is attempted to be levied; as the object of the tax is not specified either in the statutes of the state under which said city derives whatever power it has, nor in said ordinance, as required by section 4 of article 11 of the constitution. And said ordinance violates the rules of uniformity and equality specified in section 1 of said article 11. And, further, the power to levy and collect a license tax on fire and life insurance companies or agencies, mentioned in the sixth subdivision, on page 99 of the Laws of 1870, and in the second subdivision on page 58 of the Laws of 1874, even if valid, does not authorize a tax, properly so called, but only a tax or fee reasonable in amount, as a compensation for the trouble of issuing a license. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 291-293, and notes.

H. Miles Moore, City Atty., for the City.

The counsel of the city, under and by virtue of the provisions of its charter, which is a general law of the state, has authority to levy and collect a license tax on fire or life insurance companies or agencies, etc. In pursuance of that authority the city council did, *630 for the purpose of raising a *revenue to pay the debts of the city for the support of common schools in the city, and under and by virtue of the police regulations of said city, enact the ordinance set forth in the record. The fact that the said company, of which the defendant was agent, had paid to the superintendent of insurance the sum of $325, or any other sum, as license to do business in this state, or even that said sum was in full for license, fines, etc., to the state of Kansas, has nothing to do with the authority given by the same legislature to cities of the first class to pass ordinances levying a license tax for them to do business within the limits of said city. Under the provisions of the state law of 1871, such insurance companies can do business anywhere in the state, if they comply with that law, outside of the city of Leavenworth; but, if they desire to do business in that city, the state law and city ordinance says they must conform to the local regulations of the city. The provisions of the ordinance are not in conflict with section 4 of article 11 of the constitution. That provision has reference to state taxes, and not municipal taxes. The ordinance does not violate any provision of the constitution. The provisions in the charter of 1870 and 1874, conferring the authority to levy and collect a license tax on certain avocations and employments, are constitutional. 1 Dill. § 291, and note.

VALENTINE, J. On March 2, 1870, an act of the legislature of Kansas amending "An act to incorporate cities of the second class" was passed, which provides, among other things, as follows: "The mayor and council of each city created or controlled by this act shall have the care, management, and control of the city, and its property and finances, and shall have power to enact and ordain any ordinances not repugnant to the constitution and laws of this state, and such ordinances to alter, modify, or repeal; and shall have power * * * to levy and collect a license tax on * * * fire or life insurance companies or agencies, * * * and to impose fines, forfeitures, and penalties for the breach of any ordinances," etc. Laws 1870, p. 97 et seq.

On May 21, 1870, the mayor and council of the city of Leavenworth—it being a city of the first class—passed an ordinance which provides, among other things, as follows:

"Section 1. No person or persons shall engage in the business of fire or life insurance, nor shall any company do business as a fire or life insurance company, in this city, after the fifteenth day of June, 1870, without first having obtained a license therefor. The price of such license for each and every fire insurance company doing business in this city shall be fifty dollars per annum; and the price for such license for each and every life insurance company doing business in this city shall be one hundred dollars per annum."

"Sec. 4. Each and every person or agent who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, on conviction before the police judge, be fined not less than fifty dollars, nor more than two hundred dollars, for the first offense, and shall be fined the further sum of fifty dollars for each and every day he shall continue to violate the same."

There is no provision in the ordinance, or elsewhere, prescribing what shall be done with the money received for licenses. On March 1, 1871, an act of the legislature was passed, creating an insurance department, (Laws 1871, p. 214,) and providing for the appointment of a "superintendent of insurance," (section 2;) and also providing that "the said superintendent shall have the sole and exclusive charge of and control over said insurance department, under the laws relating thereto," (section 3.) Said act also provides that certain things shall be done, and certain moneys shall be paid, by each and every insurance company, before it shall have any authority whatever to do business in Kansas. And said act further provides that "whenever the existing or future laws of any other state or government shall require insurance companies organized under the laws of this state, applying to do business by agencies in such other state or government, or of the agents thereof, any deposit of security in such state for the protection of policy-holders therein, or otherwise, or any payment *632 for taxes, fines, penalties, certificates of authority, licenses, fees, or otherwise, greater than the amount required for such purposes from insurance companies of other states by the then existing laws of this state, then, and in every such case, all companies of such states or governments establishing agencies in this state shall make the same deposit, for a like purpose, with the superintendent of insurance of this state, and pay to said superintendent, for taxes, fines, penalties, certificates of authority, licenses, fees, or otherwise, an amount equal to the amount of such charges and payments imposed by the laws of such other state or government upon the companies of this state, and the agents thereof." Section 17.

In February, 1874, the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of the state of Wisconsin applied to the superintendent of insurance of this state for permission to do business in Kansas. The agreed statement of facts upon which this case was tried in the court below shows, among other things, as follows:

"The laws of said state of Wisconsin, in force therein ever since and before the first day of January, 1874, require insurance companies organized under the laws of this state, (of Kansas,) or of any state other than said state of Wisconsin, applying to do business by agencies in said state of Wisconsin, payment of the sum of $325 in amount, per annum, for taxes, fines, penalties, certificates of authority, licenses, fees for the privilege of doing business therein, and because thereof; and under and by virtue of section 17 of the act of the legislature of the state of Kansas, entitled 'An act to establish an insurance department in the state of Kansas, and to regulate the companies doing business therein,' approved March 1, 1871, the superintendent of insurance of this state of Kansas did, in the month of February, 1874, demand and require of and from the company first aforesaid that it pay to him said sum of $325 before he would grant authority thereto to transact business in the state of Kansas; and the company first aforesaid then, in February, 1874, paid to said superintendent of insurance of this state of Kansas $325 for taxes, fines, penalties, certificates of authority, licenses, and fees, for the privilege of doing business in this state of Kansas for the term and period of one year from the twenty-eighth of February, 1874. And thereupon said superintendent of insurance of this state of Kansas authorized and licensed the company first aforesaid to engage in, do, and transact business as such life insurance *633 ance *company in this state of Kansas for the term and period of one year from and after the time last aforesaid, and to establish agencies in this state, and to engage in and do and transact such business in this state by an agent or agents of said company."

On March 6, 1874, the legislature re-enacted in substance the provisions of the act of 1870 first quoted in this opinion, without attempting to repeal said provisions either directly or by implication. Laws 1874, p. 58, § 13. The defendant, William Booth, is the duly-authorized agent of said Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company for Kansas; and the company, through him, did business as an insurance company in the city of Leavenworth on the twenty-second of April, 1874, without having obtained from said city any license to do such business. On the twenty-fourth of said April the defendant was arrested on the charge of violating said city ordinance, by doing life insurance business as aforesaid for said company, in said city, without having any city license therefor. The case was tried before the police judge of said city. The defendant was found guilty, and fined fifty dollars. He then appealed to the criminal court of Leavenworth county, where he was again tried, found guilty, and fined fifty dollars; and he now appeals to this court.

The only question involved in this case is whether said city ordinance is valid, as applied to this class of insurance companies. But involved in this question are several others: First. Do the provisions of the statute first quoted in this opinion, by its terms, authorize the passage of such an ordinance as was passed? That is, does it authorize the passage of an ordinance requiring more to be paid for the insurance license than the mere cost of issuing the license? Second. If said provision does, by its terms, authorize the passage of such an ordinance, then was not it, and any ordinance passed under it, so modified by the act of 1871, creating the insurance department, that such provision will no longer apply to this class of insurance companies which pays to the superintendent of insurance, on *634 account of the laws of their own state, a sum *greater than the amount ordinarily paid by the insurance companies in lieu (as is claimed) of all "taxes, fines, penalties, certificates of authority, licenses, fees," etc.? Third. Is said provision itself valid? Involved in this last question are these other questions: Is said provision in contravention of section 1 of article 11 of the constitution, which requires that "the legislature shall provide for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation?" Is it in contravention of section 4 of article 11 of the constitution, which provides that "no tax shall be levied except in pursuance of a law, which shall distinctly state the object of the same?"

We think the said ordinance is valid, so far as it has any application to this case. There are many kinds of business, like that of selling intoxicating liquors, for instance, which may, under our constitution, be absolutely prohibited by the legislature, or be licensed, restrained, and regulated; and we know of no good reason why the business of insurance may not come within this category. Many good people believe that the world would be better off without insurance than with it, and all believe that it may be restrained, regulated, and allowed to exist only under a license. And of the different kinds of business which may be allowed to exist only under a license there are many whose license tax may be vastly more than the mere cost or value of issuing the license; and again we could instance the business of selling intoxicating liquors. In granting licenses the items which may be taken into consideration as elements in fixing the costs of the same would seem to be about as follows: First, the value of the labor and material in merely allowing and issuing the license; second, the value of the benefit of the license to the person obtaining the same; third, the value of the inconvenience and cost to the public in protecting such business, and in permitting it to be carried on in the community; fourth, and in some cases an additional amount imposed as a restraint upon the number of persons who might otherwise engage in the business. None of these items con-

*635 templates, except incidentally, the raising of revenue for general purposes. In many cases a license which, if issued for proper purposes, would be valid, would not be valid if issued merely for the purpose of obtaining or increasing the general revenue fund. A proper license tax is not a tax at all within the meaning of the constitution, or even within the ordinary signification of the word "tax." City of East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 46 Ill. 393; Addison v. Saulnier, 19 Cal. 83; Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 318; State v. Herod, 29 Iowa, 123, 125; Mitchell v. Williams, 27 Ind. 62. This is so even where the license tax is much greater than the mere cost of issuing the license, and even where the surplus fund incidentally arising from the issuing of the license goes into the treasury to swell the general revenue fund. Charity Hospital v. Stickney, 2 La. Ann. 550; Tenney v. Lenz, 16 Wis. 566, 567; Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 43; Ash v. People, Id. 347; Baker v. City of Cincinnati, 11 Ohio St. 534, 543, 544; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. St. 445, 450; Henry v. State, 26 Ark. 523, 525; Orton v. Brown, 35 Miss. 426. And there are still other decisions holding that the constitutional provisions with reference to taxation have no reference to the collection of license taxes, among which are the following: Anderson v. Kerns Draining Co., 14 Ind. 201; Thomasson v. State, 15 Ind. 449, 451; Bright v. McCullough, 27 Ind. 228, 232; People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46. The imposition of a license tax is in the nature of a sale of a benefit or privilege to a party who would not otherwise be entitled to the same. The imposition of an ordinary tax is in the nature of requisition of a contribution from that which the party taxed already rightfully possesses in the state.

But whether the foregoing views are right or wrong, still we think the same conclusion must necessarily be reached from other considerations. It must be remembered that the insurance company involved in this controversy is a foreign insurance company, having no rights in this state except such as the state may see fit to confer upon it. It has no power to do business in Kansas by virtue of its organization in Wisconsin. It has no power to do business *636 in Kansas by *virtue of the laws of Wisconsin, or by virtue of the constitution or laws of the United States, or by virtue of all combined. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168; Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410; Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, Id. 556. It can do business in Kansas only under the laws of Kansas, and by permission from the state of Kansas. This state might absolutely exclude it, or might require that it do business only under a license, and might require that it not only get a license from the state, but also that it get a license from every city, county, or village in which it should attempt to do business. The state may permit such insurance company to come into the state under just such restraints and regulations as the state may choose. Hence the state is not bound to permit said insurance company to come to this state, (as individual citizens of other states have a right to do,) and then, for the purpose of raising revenue, resort only to the ordinary modes of taxation. On the contrary, the state, without resorting to taxation at all, may require that such insurance company shall pay for the privilege of coming into the state, and of doing business therein, and may require that it shall not only pay a sum to the state for the privilege of doing business therein, but that it shall also pay a sum to every municipal corporation in the state in which it shall attempt to do business. And all this the state may do without violating any provision of its own constitution. The provisions of the constitution with reference to taxation have no application whatever to this class of cases; and it would make no difference if these sums, required from foreign insurance companies, were required solely for the purpose of swelling the general revenue fund. That these views are correct, we would refer to the following decisions: Fire Department of Milwaukee v. Helfenstein, 16 Wis. 186; People v. Thurber, 13 Ill. 554; Ducat v. City of Chicago, 48 Ill. 172; Slaughter v. Com., 13 Gratt. 767, 774 et seq. We might refer to other authorities, but do not think that it is necessary.

*637 The said statute of 1870 (Laws 1870, p. 97 et seq.) *unquestionably authorized the city of Leavenworth to pass said ordinance; and we do not think that either the statute or the ordinance was subsequently repealed or modified by the act of 1871 creating the insurance department. The act of 1871 does not purport to repeal or modify that of 1870, or anything done under it; and the two acts are not necessarily in conflict. Both may stand together. It is a well-settled principle of law that repeals by implication are not to be favored. The intention of the act of 1871 was that foreign insurance companies might, by paying a certain sum, be authorized to come into the state for the purpose of doing business therein. The intention of the act of 1870 was that all insurance companies, domestic as well as foreign, already rightfully in the state, and ready to do business therein, as far as the state is concerned, should, if they desired to do business in any particular city, pay to such city a license tax. In this there is no conflict.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

GEORGE G. HAYNES v. W. R. COWEN.

July Term, 1875.

1. Evidence: Foreign Judgment: Portion Only of Original Record.

A duly-authenticated copy of a judgment entry, from a court of record possessing general original jurisdiction, may, in some cases, be introduced in evidence without introducing the rest of the record.<sup>1</sup>

2. ———: Where such judgment entry shows that a judgment sufficiently correct in form was rendered by the court, and shows that the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction of all the necessary parties, it must be held that such judgment entry shows, prima facie at least, a valid judgment.<sup>2</sup>

3. ———: Attestation by Clerk: Judge's Certificate. Where a judicial record comes from a court of another state to this state, and is attested by the clerk of said court, with the seal thereof annexed, all that is *638 *further necessary to make the attestation sufficient is that the presiding judge of the court rendering the judgment shall certify that the "attestation is in due form." And hence, in such case, when the presiding judge of a district court of Texas certifies to this much, and a great deal more, and says in his certificate, which is dated about five months after the clerk's certificate is dated, that the person who attests the record "is the clerk of said district court," without saying that such person was such clerk at the time of the attestation of the record, held, that such attestation and certificate are sufficient.<sup>3</sup>

4. ———: Authentication by Presiding Judge. Where such record is the record of a judgment rendered by the district court of Caldwell county, Texas, and the clerk in his attestation designates himself as the clerk of the district court of Caldwell county, Texas, and the judge commences his certificate by saying, "State of Texas, county of Caldwell," and designates himself as "presiding judge of the 22d judicial district in said state of Texas," and certifies that the person who attests as clerk "is clerk of said district court of the 22d judicial district within and for the said county of Caldwell," etc., held, that this sufficiently shows that the said judge is the presiding judge of the court that rendered the judgment.
5. Pleading: Allegations of Time: Clerical Error. Where a plaintiff who sues on a judgment states in his petition that the judgment was rendered April 15, 1872, at a term of the court begun and held April 18, 1872, but in these allegation does not attempt to recite the record, the allegations of time are immaterial, and the plaintiff may, under such allegations, show that the judgment was rendered April 18, 1872.

Cowen brought suit upon a foreign judgment, and recovered judgment thereon, at the September term, 1873, for $161.07, and costs. Haynes, defendant, brings the case here on error.

H. G. Barner and Williams & Burns, for plaintiff in error.

Green & Hessen, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought by Cowen against *639 Haynes, upon a judgment rendered by the district court of Caldwell county, Texas. Said judgment was rendered in an action wherein said Cowen was plaintiff and one John N. Whittington was defendant. That portion of the judgment more particularly applicable to this case reads as follows: "And it appearing to the court, from the answer of George G. Haynes filed in this suit, that the said Haynes is indebted to the defendant, Whittington, in the sum of $146.54, coin, it is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff, W. R. Cowen, do have and recover of and from George G. Haynes, as garnishee, the sum of $146.54 in coin."

The record of the judgment was attested by the certificates of the clerk and judge, as follows:

"State of Texas, Caldwell County: I, James A. Wiley, clerk of the district court of said county, certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a judgment rendered by the district court of said county on the eighteenth day of April, 1872, in the case of W. R. Cowen, plaintiff. v. John N. Whittington, T. J. Lee, and R. A. Brown, and Alvin assume to exercise, and that the modes of procedure pursued by them, though different from those established by the laws of this state, are authorized by the laws of the state in which they act. Ward v. Baker, 16 Kan. 81.

Haynes and George G. Haynes, garnishees. Given under my hand, and the seal of the court, this December 2, 1872.

[Seal.]

"JAS. A. WILEY, Clerk D. C., C. Co.

"State of Texas, County of Caldwell: I, Henry Manny, presiding judge of the 22d judicial district in said state of Texas, do hereby certify that James A. Wiley, whose signature appears to the foregoing certificate of authentication, is the clerk of said district court of the 22d judicial district, within and for the said county of Caldwell; that he has the custody of the records of said court; that said certificate of authentication is in due form of law; and that the signature of the said James A. Wiley to said certificate is his genuine signature, and entitled to full faith and credit. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and the seal of said court, this fifth of May, 1873.

"HENRY MANNY,

[Seal.]

"Judge of the 22d Judicial District of Texas."

At the trial of this case—which was before the court below without a jury—the foregoing attested copy of the record of said judgment was read in evidence, over the objection of the defendant below, and upon this evidence the court below found in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, and rendered judgment accordingly; and the defendant below, as plaintiff in error, now brings the case to this court. In considering this case we shall follow the brief of plaintiff in error.

1. The plaintiff in error says in his brief: "The paper read in evidence by defendant in error, in the court below, to which plaintiff in error excepted, is only a copy of a judgment entry, and does not purport to be and is not a record of the proceedings of any court." It is true that "the paper read in evidence" "is only a copy of a judgment entry;" but it is not true that it does not purport to be the record of the proceedings of any court. It does purport to be a record of proceedings of the district court of Caldwell county, Texas. It commences as follows:

"State of Texas, Caldwell County: Be it remembered that on the eighteenth day of April, 1872, the following proceedings were had in the district court of Caldwell county, Texas, viz.: W. R. Cowen v. John N. Whittington. (No. 1,317.) In this cause came the plaintiff, by attorney, and announced himself ready for trial," etc.

Then follows a proceeding with reference to Martha Whittington, intervenor, who appears and withdraws her plea of intervention. Then follows a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Cowen, and against John N. Whittington, T. J. Lee, and R. A. Brown, on an instrument in writing which is set out in the record. And the record shows that they all had "been legally cited to appear and answer this suit." Then follows a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Cowen, and against Alvin Haynes, garnishee. Then follows a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Cowen, and against George G. Haynes, garnishee, a copy of which judgment we have already given. And then follows a proceeding with reference to some attached property.

The proper objection to the introduction of this record in evidence would probably have been that it is not a full and complete record of all the proceedings in the case. But even this objection would not be tenable. As we understand the law, a part of the record *641 of a case may *sometimes be introduced in evidence. A record of a case is often divisible into many distinct parts, and each part is substantially a record of itself. And, when the record is so divisible, any distinct portion thereof may be introduced in evidence, if relevant, without introducing the other portions of the record. Chinn v. Caldwell, 4 Bibb, 543; McGuire v. Kouns, 7 T. B. Mon. 386; Lee v. Lee, 21 Mo. 531, 534; Locke v. Winston, 10 Ala. 849; Smith v. McGehee, 14 Ala. 404; Henderson v. Cargill, 31 Miss. 367, 413, 414. Indeed, it would seem useless and unnecessary, or even worse than useless and unnecessary, to introduce in evidence such portions of the record as may be entirely irrelevant to the case. Of course, where the record is indivisible, one portion of the same cannot be introduced without introducing the whole of it. And probably, as a rule, no portion of a record should be allowed to be introduced for the purpose of proving a particular fact, without requiring that all of the record which tends to prove or disprove this particular fact should also be introduced. But this, to a great extent, must rest in the sound judicial discretion of the court trying the cause. We think the court below did not err in allowing said judgment to be introduced in evidence.

But the next question arising is, what force and effect must be given to it? Now, we shall assume that the court rendering the judgment was and is a court of record, having general original jurisdiction. The name of the court, the seal thereof,—there being a clerk, a sheriff, and a presiding judge,—the body of the record, and the attestation, all indicate it; the constitution and laws of Texas, and the supreme court reports of that state, show it; and the plaintiff in error has made no point that it is not such a court, or that it has not such jurisdiction. For a discussion of substantially the same questions in another case, see Dodge v. Coffin, ante, *277, *280, *283. Now, for the purpose of determining the force and effect of this judgment, we must look to the record itself; and, as it constitutes only a portion of the record of the case in which it was rendered, we think it *642 cannot prove *more than it purports to prove. No liberal presumptions can be entertained or resorted to for the purpose of supplying omissions, aiding deficiencies, or extending the import of its language. It is only when the whole of the record is introduced in evidence that liberal presumptions can be invoked to aid the record. Hargis v. Morse, 7 Kan. *415; Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. *283. *292. But the record we are now considering has no need of aid from liberal presumptions. It of itself shows that a judgment, sufficiently correct in form, was rendered by the court. And it of itself shows that the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction of all the necessary parties. This shows the judgment to be at least prima facie valid. Freem. Judgm. § 130. The defendant, Haynes, gave to the court jurisdiction over himself by filing his answer as garnishee. If the record of the judgment had failed to show that the court had jurisdiction of the parties, then it would have been necessary for the plaintiff, Cowen, to have introduced some other portion of the record for the purpose of showing that fact, or the judgment would be held to be void. But as the record of the judgment itself showed jurisdiction of the parties, at least prima facie, it was unnecessary for the plaintiff, Cowen, to introduce other evidence tending to show the same fact until his prima facie showing should be controverted by other evidence. There was no evidence introduced tending to impeach the validity of said judgment, and therefore we must hold it to be valid.

2. In the second place, the plaintiff in error says "the clerk's attestation was made December 2, 1872, and the judge's certificate on May 5, 1873; and the certificate nowhere shows that the clerk was, on December 2, 1872,—the time of the clerk's attestation,—the clerk of said court. The certificate of the judge is therefore insufficient." Perhaps, from the whole of the judge's certificate it may be gathered that the clerk was clerk on December 2, 1872. But, even if it cannot,

it makes no difference. The act of congress does not require *643 or even authorize the judge to certify who is clerk. *Duncommon v. Hysinger, 14 Ill. 249; Thompson v. Manrow, 1 Cal. 428; Regan v. McCormick, 4 Har. (Del.) 435; Craig v. Brown, 1 Pet. C. C. 352; Gavit v. Snowhill, 26 N. J. Law, 76; Strode v. Churchill, 2 Litt. 75; Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cranch, 408. The act of congress provides that "the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with the certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken." 1 U. S. St. at Large, 122. Upon this subject the supreme court of Illinois says: "In this case the clerk has certified a transcript of the proceedings under the seal of the court, and the presiding judge of the court has certified that the attestation is in due form. This is a full compliance with the requirements of the law. The judge has only to certify that the attestation is in due form. He is not required to state that the person who certifies the record is the clerk of the court, or that the seal attached by him is the seal of the court. The seal speaks for itself, and is presumed to be affixed by the officer having the custody thereof, as well as competent authority to do the act. The phrase 'in due form' means the mode of attestation in use in the state from whence the record comes. The record must be attested according to that mode, and the certificate of the judge is made the evidence of that fact. This is the only object of his certificate. When a record is attested by the clerk, under the seal of the court, in conformity to the law or usage of the state where the proceedings are had, it is entitled to the same faith and credit in every other state." Duncommun v. Hysinger, 14 Ill. 250. It is not an un-

*644 common thing for the judge's certificate to be dated one or more days subsequent to the clerk's certificate, and yet we know of no case where the attestation has been held void for that reason. We think the attestation in this case is sufficient.

3. But it is claimed by plaintiff in error that "the certificate of the judge does not show him to have been the judge of the court rendering the judgment." Now, the judgment was rendered by the district court of Caldwell county, Texas. The clerk, in his attestation, designates himself as the clerk of the district court of Caldwell county, Texas. The judge commences his certificate by saying, "State of Texas, county of Caldwell." He designates himself as "presiding judge of the 22d judicial district in said state of Texas;" and he certifies that the person who attests as clerk "is the clerk of said district court of the 22d judicial district, within and for the said county of Caldwell," etc. This, we think, clearly shows that the judge is the presiding judge of the district court for Caldwell county. He is presiding judge for the whole of the Twenty-second judicial district, and it is shown that a clerk of said district is the clerk of the court "within and for" the whole of said county. Now, he could not be the clerk of the court of said district "for the said county" if the district does not embrace the whole of said county within its limits.

4. Plaintiff in error next complains that "the plaintiff in the court below declares on a judgment rendered on April 15, 1872, at a term of the court begun and held April 18, 1872." These averments in the petition of the plaintiff below do not purport to be recitals of the record. They are mere allegations of time; and while they show carelessness on the part of the pleader, still they are not such material allegations as require that they be proved as laid. Under them the true time may be shown, and it was shown that the judgment was rendered April 18, 1872.

5. Plaintiff in error further complains that "the paper purports to be in a case against Whittington only, by its caption, and is *645 therefore uncertain as to who were the parties to the suit."

The caption plainly enough shows that Cowen was plaintiff, and that Whittington was a defendant, and so does the body of the judgment; and the body of the judgment also shows that the plaintiff in error, Haynes, was a garnishee in the suit, owing Whittington $146.54. This we think is sufficient.

6. Plaintiff in error finally and lastly complains that "it nowhere appears that Haynes was made garnishee in the case, or what he answered." We think it does; and the substance of his answer is given.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurring.

BREWER, J. I concur fully in the decision in this case, and simply desire to add a few words to correct an error in the opinion in the case of Hargis v. Morse, 7 Kan. *415. The point upon which that case was decided was that "the presumption in favor of the proceedings of a court of general jurisdiction will not arise when it appears that only a part of the record is offered." Perhaps that, as a general proposition, is correct. But in the opinion it appears that the journal entry of the judgment contained an adjudication upon the sufficiency of the service. The court found that the defendants were "duly served by publication," etc. Now, in that opinion, this finding and adjudication were ignored, and held in fact no evidence or service, not even prima facie. In this there was error. That finding and adjudication were prima facie evidence of the fact of service. This seems to be settled by the great weight of authority, and is in harmony with the policy of the law to uphold the proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction. Indeed, in not a few states, such a finding and adjudication are deemed conclusive evidence, and can no more be attacked collaterally than the adjudication of the court upon the facts in dispute. We hold it to be prima facie evidence only, but whether it can be impeached by testimony outside of the record we leave for further consideration. I am authorized to say that *646 the other justices concur in this opinion. See, as among the many authorities bearing on this question, Morgan v. Burnet, 18 Ohio, 546; Fowler's Lessee v. Whiteman, 2 Ohio St. 270; Callan v. Ellison, 13 Ohio St. 456; Wetherill v. Stillman, 65 Pa. St. 105; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391; Reily v. Lancaster, 39 Cal. 354; Coit v. Haven, 30 Conn. 199; Freem. Judgm. 102, § 180.

CASES IN 15 KANSAS

15 KAN. 9, DUFFEY v. RAFFERTY

Title in ejectment.—Cited in Simpson v. Boring, 16 Kan. 248; Hollenback v. Ess, 31 Kan. 87, 1 Pac. 275; Horner v. Ellis, 75 Kan. 675, 90 Pac. 275, 121 Am. St. Rep. 446—holding that the question of who shall recover in ejectment depends entirely on the question of which party has the paramount right to the property; Mooney v. Olsen, 21 Kan. 691, on the sufficiency of title to recover in ejectment; Douglass v. Ruffin, 38 Kan. 530, 16 Pac. 783, holding that plaintiff may recover on a showing of claim to the property by color of title against a defendant in possession without claim or color of title; Christy v. Richolson, 48 Kan. 177, 29 Pac. 398; Redden v. Tefft, 48 Kan. 302, 29 Pac. 157—holding that priority of possession gives precedence, where no better title can be shown as belonging to either party; Jones v. Hollister, 51 Kan. 310, 32 Pac. 1115, holding that a purchaser, holding under a bond or contract for a deed, who has paid part of the purchase money and taken immediate possession, has a better title than one who has taken subsequent possession under a void tax deed; Pope v. Nichols, 61 Kan. 230, 59 Pac. 257; Laughlin v. Fariss, 7 Okl. 1, 50 Pac. 254; Shy v. Brockhause, 7 Okl. 35, 54 Pac. 306; Black v. Jackson, 177 U. S. 349, 20 Sup. Ct. 648, 44 L. Ed. 801—holding that an equitable title, if the paramount one, is sufficient to maintain ejectment against the holder of the legal title; Thomas v. Rauer, 62 Kan. 568, 64 Pac. 80; McBride v. Steinweden, 72 Kan. 508, 83 Pac. 822—holding that defendant cannot plead an outstanding superior title in a third person.

Cited in note in 18 L. R. A. 784, on what title or interest will support ejectment.

Parol partition.—Cited in McCullough v. Finley, 69 Kan. 705, 77 Pac. 696, holding that a parol partition, acted upon, would not be disturbed.

15 KAN. 14, WOOD v. MILLSPAUGH

Injunction—Discretion of court.—Cited in Johns v. Schmidt, 32 Kan. 383, 4 Pac. 872, holding that an order vacating a temporary injunction will not be reversed, unless the discretion of the court has been abused; Johnson v. Board of Com'rs of Wilson County, 34 Kan. 670, 9 Pac. 384, holding that the refusal to grant a temporary injunction will not be interfered with, unless an abuse of discretion is shown; Van Natta-Lynds Drug Co. v. Gerson, 43 Kan. 660, 23 Pac. 1071, holding that a temporary injunction rests with the sound discretion of the judge.

15 KAN. 15, KANSAS PAC. RY. CO. v. MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO., Affirmed in 97 U. S. 491, 24 L. Ed. 1095

Public lands—Conflicting claims.—Cited in Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 24 Kan. 725, on the priority of a patent to a homestead entryman over a deed from a railroad company of withdrawn land.

15 KAN. 26, WHEELER v. BRADY

Qualifications of electors.—Cited in State ex rel. Gibson v. Monahan, 72 Kan. 492, 84 Pac. 130, 115 Am. St. Rep. 224, 7 Ann. Cas. 661, holding that the Legislature has power to authorize the creation of a drainage district, the powers of which are to be exercised by directors to be elected by the resident taxpayers; Harris v. Burr, 32 Or. 348, 52 Pac. 17, 39 L. R. A. 768, holding that the Legislature has plenary power to determine who shall vote at school elections, and may permit women to vote.

Pleading—Inconsistent allegations.—Cited in Tweedell v. Warner, 43 Kan. 597, 23 Pac. 603, holding that where an answer in ejectment alleged the execution of tax deeds, and all proceedings prior thereto, and that they were all in due and proper form, and attached copies thereof as exhibits, which copies showed the deeds to be void on their face, the court could not render judgment for defendant on the pleadings, plaintiff having filed an unverified reply; Burke v. McDonald, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 339, 13 Pac. 351 (dissenting opinion), on the construction of inconsistent allegations in pleadings.

Same—Admission by failure to deny under oath.—Cited in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Imhoff, 3 Kan. App. 765, 45 Pac. 627, holding that where an answer alleged the execution of a written contract of settlement of the matters in dispute, and no denial thereof under oath was made by plaintiff, the execution of such contract was admitted, with all natural inferences to be made therefrom.

15 KAN. 43, SCHOOL DIST. NO. 13 v. STATE EX REL. SCHOOL DIST. NO. 63

Apportionment of property on division of school district.—Cited in School Dist. No. 49 of Pawnee County v. School Dist. No. 21 of Pawnee County, 32 Kan. 123, 4 Pac. 189; Robinet v. School Dist. No. 83, 63 Kan. 1, 64 Pac. 970—on the validity of the apportionment of property on the division of a school district.

Repeal of statute—Saving clause.—Cited in Douglass v. Loftus, 85 Kan. 720, 119 Pac. 74, holding that the general saving clause, providing that the repeal of a statute shall not affect any rights accrued, applies to rights accrued, although no proceeding has been commenced for their enforcement.

15 KAN. 49, CHALLISS v. BOARD OF ATCHISON COUNTY COM'RS

Taxes—Restraining collection.—Cited in Stebbins v. Challiss, 15 Kan. 55, holding that the rule that the collection of taxes will not be enjoined until the taxes justly due are paid or tendered is not changed by the fact that the tax sale certificates have been disposed of by the county; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Scammon, 45 Kan. 481, 25 Pac. 858; Kindley v. Rogers, 85 Kan. 645, 118 Pac. 1037; Sharpe v. Engle, 2 Okl. 624, 39 Pac. 384; Sweet v. Boyd, 6 Okl. 699, 52 Pac. 939—holding that the collection of taxes will not be restrained, where the property is subject to taxation, the tax legal, and the valuation not excessive, simply because of irregularities in the proceedings; Bank of Garnett v. Ferris, 55 Kan. 120, 39 Pac. 1042, holding that the collection of taxes, because of an intentional overvaluation, will not be restrained until so much of the taxes as ought to be paid have been paid or tendered.

Cited in note in 69 Am. Dec. 200, on injunction against collection of taxes and assessments; in 22 L. R. A. 701, 702, 703, on injunction against collection of illegal taxes.

Same—Restraining assignment of tax sale certificate.—Cited in Hagaman v. Commissioners of Cloud County, 19 Kan. 394, holding that equity will not restrain the assignment of tax sale certificates where the property is subject to taxation, because of irregularities in the assessment and levy, unless the applicant for relief pays or tenders the taxes admitted to be due or just, or which the court finds ought to be paid.

Same—Setting aside tax sale certificate.—Cited in Knox v. Dunn, 22 Kan. 683; Pritchard v. Madren, 24 Kan. 486; McKeen v. Haxtun, 25 Kan. 698—holding that a lot owner, whose property has been sold for taxes, and who has not paid or offered to pay the taxes, cannot, when the property was subject to taxation, the levy legal, and the valuation not excessive, maintain a suit to quiet title against the holder of the tax sale certificate; Miller v. Ziegler, 31 Kan. 417, 2 Pac. 601, holding that, before suit to set aside a tax sale certificate can be maintained, plaintiff must pay or tender all taxes embraced therein which the records show to be valid.

Same—Restraining issue of tax deed.—Cited in Dudley v. Gilmore, 35 Kan. 555, 11 Pac. 398, holding that the issue of a tax deed would not be enjoined, in the absence of the payment or tender of the taxes due.

Same—Replevy of property levied on for taxes.—Cited in Witschy v. Seaman, 83 Kan. 634, 112 Pac. 739, applying the rule of the payment or tender of taxes due to the right of a purchaser of goods subject to a lien for taxes to replevy a part thereof, levied on under a warrant for the collection of the taxes.

15 KAN. 55, STEBBINS v. CHALLISS

Restraining collection of taxes.—Cited in notes in 69 Am. Dec. 201; 22 L. R. A. 702, 707—on injunction against collection of taxes and assessments.

15 KAN. 62, McMILLEN v. BUTLER

Restraining canvass of vote of county seat election.—Cited in Sabin v. Sherman, 28 Kan. 289, holding that, where the validity of a county seat election has been decided on the merits adversely to a plaintiff attempting to enjoin the canvass of the votes, another plaintiff, representing the same interest, was not entitled as a matter of right to enjoin the canvass of the vote and the declaration of the result of the election.

15 KAN. 66, SWALLOW v. THOMAS

Situs of taxable property.—Cited in Commissioners of Ottawa County v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 234, 27 Am. Rep. 101; State v. Shaw, 21 Nev. 222, 29 Pac. 321—discussing the situs of property for taxation.

Cited in note in 56 Am. Dec. 584, on place for taxation of property; in 22 L. R. A. 477, on tax on partnership property.

15 KAN. 70, CITY OF INDEPENDENCE v. TROUVALLÉ

Judgments against political subdivisions.—Cited in Wilson v. School Dist. No. 2, 17 Kan. 104, construing the act prohibiting the issue of executions on judgments against school districts; Stevens v. Miller, 3 Kan. App. 192, 43 Pac. 439, holding that mandamus to a city to levy a tax to pay a judgment against it is in the nature of an execution to enforce such judgment, and does not require a bond for costs, one having been given in the original action; Ware v. Pleasant Grove Tp., Greenwood County, 9 Kan. App. 700, 59 Pac. 1089, holding that an execution may issue on a judgment against a township and property not used for public purposes sold thereunder.

Dogs.—Cited in State ex rel. Curtis v. City of Topeka, 36 Kan. 76, 12 Pac. 310, 59 Am. Rep. 529, discussing the nature of property in dogs.

Cited in notes in 40 L. R. A. 510; 67 Am. St. Rep. 289—on property in dogs and remedies for its enforcement.

Change of school district boundaries.—Cited in School Dist. No. 57 v. Board of Education of City of Emporia, 16 Kan. 586, on the power to change school district boundaries.

Statutes—Determination of validity.—Cited in Commissioners of Leavenworth County v. Higginbotham, 17 Kan. 62, holding that, unless a very clear showing of the invalidity of an act passed 11 years ago was made, it would be the duty of the courts to hold it valid; Commissioners of Leavenworth County v. Higginbotham, 17 Kan. 62; Saum v. Dewey, 84 Kan. 811, 115 Pac. 570—holding that the enrolled bills and the legislative journals are the principal evidence of the passage and validity of bills, and generally cannot be contradicted; Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 700, on the validity of the passage of a constitutional amendment, notwithstanding defects in the journal entries relating thereto; State ex rel. Attorney General v. Francis, 26 Kan. 724; Ex parte Vanderberg, 28 Kan. 243; Weyand v. Stover, 35 Kan. 545, 11 Pac. 355; Ex parte Gunn, 50 Kan. 155, 32 Pac. 470, 948, 19 L. R. St. Rep. 633—holding that an enrolled statute is conclusive of the regularity of its passage and validity, unless the legislative journals clearly, conclusively, and beyond all doubt show to the contrary; Ex parte Gunn, 50 Kan. 155, 32 Pac. 470, 948, 19 L. R. A. 519, on the verity of the house journals; City of Belleville v. Wells, 74 Kan. 823, 88 Pac. 47, holding that, where the legislative journals leave it doubtful whether the title to an act as it appears by the enrolled bill was the same as the title it had when it passed the House and Senate, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the enrolled bill; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Simons, 75 Kan. 130, 88 Pac. 551, holding that where an act has been approved, certified, and authenticated, as required by the Constitution, it cannot be overthrown by contradictory and doubtful journal entries; Saum v. Dewey, 84 Kan. 811, 15 Pac. 570; Stelling v. Kansas City, 85 Kan. 397, 116 Pac. 511—holding that the legislative journals are judicially noticed and examined by the court to determine whether a statute was constitutionally passed; Hughes v. Felton, 11 Colo. 489, 19 Pac. 444, holding that for the purpose of determining the validity of a legislative act the courts will not consider evidence outside the act itself, the enrolled bill, and the journals; Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279, 38 Pac. 326; State ex rel. City of Cheyenne v. Swan, 7 Wyo. 166, 51 Pac. 209, 40 L. R. A. 195, 75 Am. St. Rep. 889—holding that, in determining whether an act has been passed in accordance with the constitutional requirements, resort may be had to the legislative journals.

Same—Subjects and titles.—Cited in Woodruff v. Baldwin, 23 Kan. 491, holding that the breadth and comprehensiveness of the title of an act is a matter of legislative discretion; State v. Bankers' & Merchants' Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 23 Kan. 499, holding that, where the Legislature has selected a restrictive title for an act, the courts can neither enlarge nor amend it; Board of Education of City of Atchison v. State ex rel. Johnston, 26 Kan. 44, holding that section 5, c. 81, Laws 1879, was not invalid, as not being included in the title of the act; State v. Barrett, 27 Kan. 213, on the invalidity of an act the title to which is broad enough to cover two separate and independent subjects having no connection with each other; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. City of Wyandotte, 44 Kan. 32, 23 Pac. 950, on the validity of an ordinance the title to which is broad enough to cover two separate and independent subjects having no connection with each other; Star Grain & Lumber Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 85 Kan. 281, 116 Pac. 906, holding that the title of Laws 1905, c. 345, relating to demurrage, was sufficient to embrace all its provisions; Frost v. Pfeiffer, 26 Colo. 338, 58 Pac. 147, holding that "A bill for an act to establish the county of Teller," was valid; In re Commissioners of Counties Comprising Seventh Judicial Dist., 22 Okl. 435, 98 Pac. 557, holding that the constitutional requirement that every act "shall embrace but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title," is mandatory, but not to be exactly enforced; Marston v. Humes, 3 Wash. 267, 28 Pac. 520, discussing the construction of the constitutional provision that "no bill shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be embraced in its title."

Same—Special or local laws.—Cited in City of Pond Creek v. Haskell, 21 Okl. 711, 97 Pac. 338, holding that an act providing for special elections for the relocation or removal of county seats, applicable to all counties, was not a special or local law.

Discharge of attachment at chambers.—Cited in Shedd v. McConnell, 18 Kan. 594, holding that a judge of the district court has power at chambers to discharge an attachment.

Abolition of political subdivisions.—Cited in Ex parte Hinkle, 31 Kan. 712, 3 Pac. 531, holding that, where a township is abolished by the Legislature, the township offices go with it; State ex rel. Bradford v. Hamilton, 40 Kan. 323, 19 Pac. 723, holding that the Legislature has the power to abolish a county organization; Alkman v. Edwards, 55 Kan. 751, 42 Pac. 366, 30 L. R. A. 149, holding that the Legislature has power to transfer the counties in a judicial district to another district; People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, 3 Idaho (Hasb.) 72, 26 Pac. 983, holding act to divide a county and attach the part cut off to another county, without submitting the proposition to a vote of the people in the segregated part, unconstitutional.

Distinguished in McDonald v. Doust, 11 Idaho, 14, 81 Pac. 60, 69 L. R. A. 220, holding that an act abolishing a certain county and creating two new counties was void as attempting to abolish an organized county.

Original jurisdiction in mandamus.—Cited in note in 58 L. R. A. 843, on original jurisdiction of court of last resort in mandamus.

15 KAN. 216, JACKSON v. LATTA

Amendment of judicial proceedings.—Cited in Wilson v. Paxton, 7 Kan. App. 79, 52 Pac. 911, holding that it was not error, on appeal from a justice court to the district court, to allow the transcript to be amended so as to show the rendition and entry of the judgment that was in fact rendered; Clark v. Bank of Hennessey, 14 Okl. 572, 79 Pac. 217, 2 Ann. Cas. 219, holding that district courts have the power, while a case is pending and before final judgment, to amend the record, or any order or proceeding had in the cause, by a nunc pro tunc order.

Parol evidence of judgment.—Cited in Pulsifer v. Arbuthnot, 59 Kan. 380, 53 Pac. 70, holding that parol evidence is inadmissible in a collateral proceeding to prove the rendition of a judgment or the making of any order by a court of record.

Sanders*, 22 Kan. 1, on the right of a private individual to maintain an action to recover the statutory penalty for the failure to give crossing signals by a railroad train; City of Atchison v. State ex rel. Tufts, 34 Kan. 379, 8 Pac. 367, holding that the state could not enjoin a county treasurer from disbursing money received from the payment of an illegal tax levied to create a sinking fund to pay city bridge bonds; City of Argentine v. State ex rel. Pollock, 46 Kan. 430, 26 Pac. 751, holding that the state was not entitled to enjoin a city from expending the proceeds of the sale of a bond issue for the purpose of purchasing of lots for, and the erection thereon of, a city hall; Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home and Industrial School Ass'n, 66 Kan. 1, 71 Pac. 286, holding that charities which the Attorney General can sue to enforce or conserve must be charities of a character so public as to interest the whole community; United States ex rel. Search v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 3 Okl. 404, 41 Pac. 729, holding that, where relief is sought by injunction to protect private rights merely, relator must show some special interest in the matter in litigation; Territory ex rel. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. De Wolfe, 13 Okl. 454, 74 Pac. 98, on the right of one gas company to restrain another company from laying its pipes in the streets of a city; State ex rel. Taylor v. Lord, 28 Or. 498, 43 Pac. 471, 31 L. R. A. 473, holding that private individuals cannot enjoin public officers from using public funds, unless they themselves will be injuriously affected by the proposed expenditure.

Trial of title to office.—Cited in Neeland v. State ex rel. Bradford, 39 Kan. 154, 18 Pac. 165, holding that quo warranto, not injunction, is the proper remedy to try title to office.

Powers of municipalities.—Cited in note in 2 Am. St. Rep. 101, on powers of municipalities.

15 KAN. 236, GRANT v. PENDER

New or amended pleadings.—Cited in Wright v. Bacheller, 16 Kan. 259, on the facts that error was committed in refusing to allow plaintiff, during the trial, to amend his reply so as to put in issue the truth of certain portions of defendant's answer; Rice v. Hodge, 26 Kan. 164; German Ins. Co. v. Wright, 6 Kan. App. 611, 49 Pac. 704—holding that the court has the power to permit new pleadings or amended pleadings, and compel a trial at the same term, unless the interests of justice require a continuance.

Secondary evidence.—Cited in Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Walters, 24 Kan. 504, holding it error to permit proof of a demand for the value of stock killed, by the introduction of a copy of the written demand, without any foundation therefor having been laid.

Statute of frauds.—Cited in Plano Mfg. Co. v. Burrows, 40 Kan. 361, 19 Pac. 809, holding that an agreement by a purchaser of property to pay the purchase price to a third person in payment of a debt due from his vendor to such third person was not within the statute of frauds.

Use of deposition.—Cited in Bank of Orland v. Finnell, 133 Cal. 475, 65 Pac. 976, holding that a party cannot introduce in evidence selected portions of a deposition of his own witness, omitting the rest of the deposition.

15 KAN. 244, FT. SCOTT COAL & MIN. CO. v. SWEENEY

Pleading varying terms of written instrument.—Cited in Merrill v. Young, 5 Kan. App. 761, 47 Pac. 187, holding that it was not error to strike an answer setting up a defense contrary to the express terms of a written instrument sued on.

15 KAN. 249, BREWSTER v. MADDEN

Alienation of public lands by entryman.—Distinguished in Bell v. Parks, 18 Kan. 152, holding that where an actual settler on Sac and Fox lands, subject to pre-emption, who had made improvements thereon, quitclaimed all his rights in such land to a third person, and delivered possession, and received cash and a note therefor, the note was supported by a sufficient consideration, although the title to the land remained in the government; Stewart v. Powers, 98 Cal. 514, 33 Pac. 486, holding that a mortgage by a pre-emption claimant before entry was not void; Wilcox v. John, 21 Colo. 367, 40 Pac. 680, 52 Am. St. Rep. 246, holding that neither a mortgage nor a deed of trust by a pre-emptor of public lands, before final proof, were void; Runyan v. Snyder, 45 Colo. 156, 100 Pac. 420; Weber v. Laidler, 26 Wash. 144, 66 Pac. 400, 90 Am. St. Rep. 726—holding that the acts of Congress do not prevent one entering lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws from executing a mortgage thereon in advance of patent, or even entry, or the obtaining of a receiver's receipt, unless such mortgage was a device to transfer title in evasion of the statute; Norris v. Heald, 12 Mont.

282, 29 Pac. 1121, 33 Am. St. Rep. 581, holding that a mortgage by a pre-emptor of public lands, before final proof, was not a grant or conveyance prohibited by the Revised Statutes of the United States; Church v. Adams, 37 Or. 355, 61 Pac. 639, holding that a claimant under the timber culture claims act, who has made an entry in good faith, may contract to sell his claim before final proof.

Cited in Brake v. Ballou, 19 Kan. 397, holding that a contract, by which plaintiff, not an actual settler, procured defendant, an actual settler, to enter on public lands and purchase them in his own name from the United States, plaintiff furnishing the purchase money and defendant agreeing to convey to plaintiff, was void; Lucas v. Sturr, 21 Kan. 480, holding contracts with reference to government lands between parties, while the title is still in the government, illegal; Green v. Houston, 22 Kan. 35, as to circumstances under which a homestead entryman would be estopped to assert the invalidity of a mortgage thereof; Jarvis v. Campbell, 23 Kan. 370, holding that the sale of a claim to Osage ceded lands, before it was sold by the United States, and vacant and unoccupied, was void; Mellison v. Allen, 30 Kan. 382, 2 Pac. 97, holding that equity would not compel the specific performance of a contract to convey a part of a homestead entry, made before the expiration of five years from the date of his entry thereon; Biddle v. Adams, 5 Kan. App. 734, 46 Pac. 986, holding that a mortgage on land, given prior to the making of final proofs by an occupying homesteader, was void; Bass v. Buker, 6 Mont. 442, 12 Pac. 922, holding a mortgage by a pre-emptor of public lands before final receipt void; Hafemann v. Gross, 199 U. S. 342, 26 Sup. Ct. 80, 50 L. Ed. 220, holding that an agreement by a pre-emptor with a person advancing money to pay part of the expense of final proof to repay such party a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the land, if it could be sold at its proper value, was not void.

Overruled in Stark v. Morgan, 73 Kan. 453, 85 Pac. 567, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, 9 Ann. Cas. 930, holding that a mortgage of a homestead entry was not an alienation thereof prohibited by the Revised Statutes of the United States.

15 KAN. 252, BABBITT v. JOHNSON

Deeds—Time of taking effect.—Cited in Cain v. Robinson, 20 Kan. 456, holding that ordinarily the date of a deed is prima facie evidence of the time of its delivery, but that such presumption may be rebutted by evidence; Green v. Green, 34 Kan. 740, 10 Pac. 156, 55 Am. Rep. 256, holding that a deed takes effect only from the time of its delivery.

Same—Acknowledgment.—Cited in note in 41 Am. Dec. 169, on sufficiency of acknowledgment of deeds.

Taxes—Rights of holder of invalid tax deed.—Cited in Jeffries v. Clark, 23 Kan. 448, holding that where the holder of a tax deed is defeated in an action against him for the recovery of the land sold, and the successful claimant is adjudged to pay to such holder all taxes, interest, and costs before he shall be entitled to possession, it is not error to refuse an execution to the holder of the tax deed against the property of the successful claimant to collect the taxes against the goods and chattels and lands and tenements of such claimant; Millbank v. Ostertag, 24 Kan. 462, holding that the possessor of land under a void tax deed could not be ousted without compensation for taxes and improvements; Shinkle v. Meek, 69 Kan. 368, 76 Pac. 837, holding that a tender of the amount actually due is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action to set aside a tax deed.

Same—Sale to county.—Cited in Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 518; Rush v. Lewis and Clark County, 36 Mont. 566, 93 Pac. 943; Hanenkratt v. Hamil, 10

Suits affecting public interests, rights or duties.—Followed in Blain v. Riley County Agr. Society, 21 Kan. 558, on the facts that a petitioner did not show a sufficient interest to entitle him to maintain mandamus to compel a county treasurer to pay an order issued by the board of county commissioners.

Cited in Amusement Syndicate Company v. City of Topeka, 68 Kan. 801, 74 Pac. 606, holding that the owner of an opera house had no such interest as would entitle him to enjoin a city from permitting its auditorium being used for public entertainments for profit; Davenport v. Buffington, 97 Fed. 237, 38 C. C. A. 453, 46 L. R. A. 377, holding that a resident and taxpayer of a city could enjoin the diversion to private use by the original proprietor of a town site, which, when the town was laid out and platted, was dedicated as a public park, and had since been maintained as such.

Use of schoolhouse.—Cited in Lewis v. Bateman, 26 Utah, 434, 73 Pac. 509, holding that the trustees of a school district had no right to permit the schoolhouse to be used for public and private dances.

15 KAN. 263, RICE v. POYNTER

Judicial sales—Effect of confirmation.—Cited in Capital Bank of Topeka v. Huntoon, 35 Kan. 577, 11 Pac. 369, holding that mere irregularities in the proceedings connected with a sheriff's sale are cured by the order of the court confirming the sale, but that matters which are not mere irregularities, or which form no part of the proceedings connected with the sale, are not so cured; Mills v. Pettigrew, 45 Kan. 573, 26 Pac. 33, holding that the final decision of the district court, overruling a motion to set aside a judicial sale, is not conclusive as to the ultimate rights of the parties.

Same—Appraisement.—Cited in Shaffer v. Knox, 7 Kan. App. 182, 53 Pac. 785, holding that a sale of attached property, without any appraisement having been made, for more than two-thirds of the actual and appraised value of the property, was voidable only.

15 KAN. 269, DICKENSON v. COWLEY

Attachment—Intervenors.—Cited in Standard Implement Co. v. Lansing Wagon Works, 58 Kan. 125, 48 Pac. 638, holding that persons interpleading in attachment and claiming priority of liens cannot defeat the attachment by showing that the claim sued on was not due, or that the debt was evidenced by promissory notes; Ballew v. Young, 24 Okl. 182, 103 Pac. 623, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, holding that an intervening claimant in attachment can make only such objections to the irregularity of the proceedings as he could make in an independent collateral proceeding; Noyes v. Canada, 30 Fed. 665, holding that a third party, claiming to own goods attached, was entitled to set aside the attachment on the ground that no service thereof was made on defendant.

Same—Affidavit for.—Cited in Mentzer v. Ellison, 7 Colo. App. 315, 43 Pac. 464, holding that the affidavit for attachment must contain an allegation of indebtedness from defendant, and also the grounds upon which the statute authorizes the attachment.

Same—Irregularities.—Cited in note in 79 Am. Dec. 171, on irregularities and defects avoiding attachment.

Same—Judgments in rem.—Cited in note in 76 Am. St. Rep. 802, on judgments depending for validity on attachment of property.

15 KAN. 274, STARKWEATHER v. MORGAN.

Return of service of process.—Cited in Chambers Bros. & Co. v. King Wrought-Iron Bridge Co., 16 Kan. 270, holding that a sheriff's return of service of original process may be impeached so far as it states facts on which jurisdiction depends, where the facts stated do not come within the personal knowledge of the sheriff; Gapen v. Stephenson, 17 Kan. 613, as to when a sheriff could contradict his official return of a sale; Jones v. Marshall, 3 Kan. App. 529, 43 Pac. 840, holding that a sheriff's return of original process may be questioned as to facts upon which jurisdiction depends; Huntington v. Cronter, 33 Or. 408, 54 Pac. 208, 72 Am. St. Rep. 726, holding that an officer's return of service of process is prima facie evidence of the material matters therein stated, subject to contradiction; Abraham v. Miller, 52 Or. 8, 95 Pac. 814, holding that equity will not grant relief against a default judgment on a false return of service of process, except on clear, satisfactory, and convincing proof of want of service.

Distinguished in Goddard v. Harbour, 56 Kan. 744, 44 Pac. 1055, 54 Am. St. Rep. 608, holding that the return of a sheriff that he has served the summons on defendant personally is conclusive on the parties, and cannot be questioned in an action to enjoin a judgment based on such service.

Authentication of foreign records.—Cited in Haynes v. Cowen, 15 Kan. 637, on the sufficiency of the authentication of a record from a court of another state.

Presumptions as to jurisdiction of courts of other states.—Followed in Ward v. Baker, 16 Kan. 31; Westervelt v. Jones, 5 Kan. App. 35, 47 Pac. 322—holding that it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that courts of general jurisdiction of other states have the authority they assume to exercise, and that their modes of procedure are authorized by their laws; Comstock v. Adams, 23 Kan. 513, 33 Am. Rep. 191, holding that it would be presumed that a Michigan circuit court had authority to set aside a decree of divorce; Poll v. Hicks, 67 Kan. 191, 72 Pac. 847, holding that circuit courts of Ohio are presumed to be courts of general jurisdiction.

Presumptions as to laws of other states.—Cited in Speer v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 23 Kan. 571; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Sharitt, 43 Kan. 375, 23 Pac. 430, 8 L. R. A. 385, 19 Am. St. Rep. 143; First Nat. Bank of Galva, Ill. v. Nordstrom, 70 Kan. 485, 78 Pac. 804—holding that the Kansas courts will presume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the laws of other states are like those of Kansas.

Cited in note in 11 Am. Dec. 783, on presumption and judicial notice of laws.

Judicial notice of jurisdiction of courts of other states.—Cited in Friend v. Miller, 52 Kan. 139, 34 Pac. 397, 39 Am. St. Rep. 340, holding that the Supreme Court can take notice of the Constitutions of other states creating courts, and also of acts of Congress providing for the organization of territories and the creation of courts therein, so far as the jurisdiction of such courts is shown; Bleakley v. Barclay, 75 Kan. 462, 89 Pac. 906, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230, holding that the Supreme Court will take judicial notice that the circuit courts of Illinois are courts of general original jurisdiction; Hinman v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 83 Kan. 35, 110 Pac. 102, 21 Ann. Cas. 1152, holding that the Kansas courts will take judicial notice that the Missouri Constitution makes the circuit courts of that state courts of record and of general jurisdiction.

A. 934, holding that, although a tax deed is void on its face, a holder thereof, who had paid taxes, penalties, and costs, was entitled to hold possession until the tax charges were paid; Douglass v. Byers, 69 Kan. 59, 76 Pac. 432, holding that the fact that a tax deed was found to be invalid does not mean that the property was not taxable, or that the holder of the invalid tax deed could not recover the taxes which he had paid on the property; Pierce v. Adams, 77 Kan. 46, 93 Pac. 594, holding that a tax deed void on its face as a conveyance is sufficient to transfer the lien for taxes to the grantee therein; Lewis Academy v. Wilkinson, 79 Kan. 577, 100 Pac. 510, on the right of a tax deed holder to a lien for the amount of taxes paid by him; Humphrey v. Yost, 10 Kan. App. 324, 62 Pac. 550, holding that, where the holder of a tax deed does not have it recorded within the time required by statute, it is void, and he cannot have a lien for taxes paid on the land described therein by taking possession thereof.

Homicide—Indictment or information—Sufficiency.—Cited in State v. Stackhouse, 24 Kan. 445, holding that an indictment for murder alleging an assault, a killing and a deliberate and premeditated intent to kill was sufficient; State v. Harp, 31 Kan. 496, 3 Pac. 432, holding that an information for murder sufficiently charged an intent to kill or murder.

Instructions—Lesser offense—Harmless error.—Cited in State v. Yarborough, 39 Kan. 581, 18 Pac. 474, holding that any error in instructions as to a lesser offense than that of which accused was found guilty was harmless; State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 37 Pac. 174, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322; State v. McCarty, 54 Kan. 52, 36 Pac. 338—applying the same rule to a failure to charge as to a lesser offense; State v. Winters, 81 Kan. 414, 105 Pac. 516, holding that, where accused objected to the giving of instructions as to lesser offenses than that charged, their omission was not reversible error.

Verdict—Recommendation to mercy.—Cited in State v. Borchert, 68 Kan. 365, 74 Pac. 1108, holding that, while the court might reject a verdict containing a recommendation for mercy, it was not error to inform them, in the absence of accused and counsel, that it would be received; State v. Arata, 56 Wash. 185, 105 Pac. 227, 21 Ann. Cas. 242, holding that it was not error to receive a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree with a recommendation to mercy, although the recommendation could be given no effect.

Territory*, 1 Okl. Cr. 583, 98 Pac. 1023—holding that an oral statement to the jury, not constituting an instruction, was not error; Bird & Mickle Map Co. v. Jones, 27 Kan. 177, holding that an oral direction as to the manner of answering special findings was not reversible error, where no objection was made or exception taken; State v. Hobbs, 62 Kan. 612, 64 Pac. 73, holding that oral remarks of the judge could not have prejudiced accused, where he told the jury that he did not want to give any additional instructions and that they should be guided by the written instructions; State v. Schoenewald, 26 Kan. 288, as to oral modifications of written instructions.

Same—Failure to request additional instructions.—Cited in State v. Walke, 69 Kan. 183, 76 Pac. 408, holding that where the charge was sufficient to present the salient features of the case, and no additional instructions were requested, the court's failure to go into details was not error.

App. 690, 5 Pac. 136—holding that a judge pro tem. could not settle a case-made after the time allowed by him for making and serving it and suggesting amendments; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Preston, 63 Kan. 819, 66 Pac. 1050 (dissenting opinion), holding that a pro tem. judge may settle a case-made at any time that a regular judge whose term has not expired may; Weeks v. Medler, 18 Kan. 425, holding that a case-made, settled and signed the same day it was served on the opposite party, thus depriving him of the opportunity to suggest amendments, could not be considered; Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Co. v. Martin, 45 Kan. 765, 26 Pac. 424, as to the time within which the case-made may be signed and settled.

Same—Making, saving, settling and signing—Distinction.—Cited in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Guild, 8 Kan. App. 368, 55 Pac. 555, holding that making and serving the case are separate and distinct acts, and an order extending the time to make one did not extend the time to serve it; Butler v. Scott, 68 Kan. 512, 75 Pac. 496, holding that the making of the case and its settlement and signing are distinct acts, the making of the case being the act of the plaintiff in error.

Same—Disregarding certificate.—Cited in Salina Building, Saving & Trust Ass'n v. Beebe, 24 Kan. 363; Baker v. Sears, 2 Kan. App. 617, 42 Pac. 501—holding that the judge's certificate to the case-made, when not shown to be intentionally false or fraudulently prepared, was conclusive; Lamont v. Williams, 43 Kan. 558, 23 Pac. 592, holding that the judge's certificate to a case-made may be disregarded, if shown to be intentionally false.

Municipal corporations—Aiding construction of railroads.—Cited in Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Douglas County, 18 Kan. 169, holding that municipal corporations, when authorized by the Legislature, may issue bonds to aid in the construction of railroads.

Agency—Evidence—Declarations of agent.—Cited in French v. Wade, 35 Kan. 391, 11 Pac. 138; Ream v. McElhone, 50 Kan. 409, 31 Pac. 1075; Donaldson v. Everhart, 50 Kan. 718, 32 Pac. 405; National Fence-Mach. Co. v. Highleyman, 71 Kan. 347, 80 Pac. 568—holding that the existence of an agency cannot be proved as against the principal by the alleged agent's declarations.

Same—Testimony of agent.—Cited in Wales v. Mower, 44 Colo. 146, 96 Pac. 971; Cowles v. Burns, 28 Kan. 32; Aultman Thrashing & Engine Co. v. Knoll, 71 Kan. 109, 79 Pac. 1074; Wicktorwitz v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 31 Or. 569, 51 Pac. 75—holding that the testimony of the agent as to the fact of agency was competent.

Same—Brokers.—Cited in note in 93 Am. Dec. 172, on rights, duties, and liabilities of brokers.

Witnesses—Impeachment—Laying foundation.—Cited in State v. Bartley, 48 Kan. 421, 29 Pac. 701, holding that a witness cannot be impeached by proof of contradictory statements, where no foundation therefor has been laid.

15 KAN. 495, CARLIN v. DONEGAN

Equity—Jury trial.—Cited in G. C. Hixon & Co. v. George, 18 Kan. 253; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 844, 4 Pac. 262; Drinkwater v. Sauble, 46 Kan. 170, 26 Pac. 433; Maas v. Dunmeyer, 21 Okl. 434, 96 Pac. 591—holding that in an equity case the court may send any of the issues to a jury and try the others itself, or send them to a referee or another jury; City of Emporia v.

Soden, 25 Kan. 588, 37 Am. Rep. 265; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 30 Kan. 712, 2 Pac. 122, 46 Am. Rep. 108—holding that it is not error to refuse to call a jury in an equitable action; Hunt v. Spencer, 20 Kan. 126, holding that, where only certain questions in an equity case were submitted to a jury, the court did not err by making further findings of fact itself.

Verdict or findings—Defects—Waiver.—Cited in Kolleen v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 72 Kan. 426, 83 Pac. 990, holding that a verdict, although defective, would be held sufficient, where no objection thereto was made when it was returned; Briggs & Watson v. Eggan, 17 Kan. 589, holding that a failure to find on some particular matter or a defective finding is not material error, unless the trial court's attention is called thereto.

15 KAN. 500, COUNTY SEAT OF LINN COUNTY, IN RE

Cited in City of Belleville v. Wells, 74 Kan. 823, 88 Pac. 47.

Statutory construction—Meaning of words or phrases.—Cited in Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan. 700; Bailey v. Kelley, 70 Kan. 869, 79 Pac. 735—holding that, where succeeding Legislatures have used a word or phrase in a restricted or enlarged sense, such meaning will be judicially recognized.

Cited in note in 15 L. R. A. 107, on "election" of officers as distinguished from "appointment."

Legislative powers—Rules of evidence.—Cited in Sanders v. Greenstreet, 23 Kan. 425, holding that the Legislature could make executors' and administrators' deeds prima facie evidence of the regularity of prior proceedings; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Simonson, 64 Kan. 802, 68 Pac. 653, 57 L. R. A. 765, 91 Am. St. Rep. 248 (dissenting opinion), holding that the Legislature could make bills of lading conclusive evidence of the weights of shipments; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002, holding that the Legislature can make conviction of a felony evidence of bad character, depriving a person of the right to practice medicine; State v. Butts, 31 Kan. 537, 2 Pac. 618, holding that, while the Legislature cannot overthrow constitutional provisions by rules of evidence, it could make failure to register conclusive evidence of disqualification to vote.

Elections—Failure to vote—Presumption.—Cited in Board of Com'rs of Marion County v. Winkley, 29 Kan. 36; State ex rel. Crocker v. Echols, 41 Kan. 1, 20 Pac. 523; Philomath College v. Wyatt, 27 Or. 390, 31 Pac. 206, 37 Pac. 1022, 26 L. R. A. 68—holding that electors not voting on a proposition submitted to a popular vote were presumed to assent to the action of those voting.

Same—Majority—What constitutes.—Cited in Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 22 Okl. 507, 98 Pac. 565, holding that a majority of the votes cast at a county seat election means a majority of all legal ballots, including those so mutilated that they cannot be counted, but not including blanks and marked ballots; Knight v. Shelton (C. C.) 134 Fed. 423, holding that a majority of the votes on a question submitted was insufficient, unless this was also a majority of those voting at the election on any question; State ex rel. Durkheimer v. Grace, 20 Or. 154, 25 Pac. 382, holding that a majority of the votes cast on the location of a county seat was sufficient, although not a majority of the votes at the election on all questions; Philomath College v. Wyatt, 27 Or. 390, 31 Pac. 206, 37 Pac. 1022, 26 L. R. A. 68, holding that, under a church constitution requiring changes to be made by two-thirds of the whole society, the General Conference could provide that two-thirds of those voting should be deemed to be two-thirds of the whole society.

Same—County seat elections—"Assessment rolls."—Cited in State ex rel. McBride v. Board of Com'rs of Phillips County, 26 Kan. 419, holding that the lists prepared by the township assessors and delivered to the county clerk are the assessment rolls referred to in the act relative to the removal of county seats; State ex rel. Kellogg v. Board of Com'rs of Rawlins County, 44 Kan. 528, 24 Pac. 955, holding that under an amendment of the statute the real estate as well as personal property assessment rolls are to be considered in determining the sufficiency of the petition.

Same—Consent of electors—How ascertained.—Cited in State ex rel. Sears v. Burton, 47 Kan. 44, 27 Pac. 141, holding that an unauthorized election sufficiently showed electors' consent to change of county seat to justify its change by an act of the Legislature.

Same—Contests—Extent of inquiry.—Cited in Brown v. State ex rel. Ward, 44 Kan. 291, 24 Pac. 345, holding that the validity of a county seat election prior to the one last held could not be attacked; State ex rel. Anthony v. Barton, 58 Kan. 709, 51 Pac. 218, holding that in a statutory contest of a county seat election the sufficiency of the petition can be inquired into.

15 KAN. 532, JOHNSON v. CAIN

Courts—District and probate—Jurisdiction.—Cited in Fudge v. Fudge, 23 Kan. 416, holding that the probate court could order the sale of the homestead for the payment of debts chargeable thereon; Klemp v. Winter, 23 Kan. 699, holding that the district court had jurisdiction of a suit to vacate fraudulent settlements by a guardian in the probate court and a release fraudulently obtained from plaintiff, although part of the relief could have been had in the probate court; Stratton v. McCandless, 27 Kan. 296, holding that actions in the district court against an administrator, who is still acting, and his sureties, should not be encouraged; Gafford v. Dickinson, 37 Kan. 287, 15 Pac. 175, holding that a suit to set aside orders and judgments of the probate court procured by fraud was maintainable in the district court; McLean v. Webster, 45 Kan. 644, 26 Pac. 10, holding that a suit was maintainable in the district court to subject a decedent's land to the payment of a debt, where there had been no administration and there were no other debts; Andrews v. Morse, 51 Kan. 30, 32 Pac. 640, holding that a mortgage can be foreclosed in the district court without presentation of the claim to the mortgagor's administrator; Barker v. Battey, 62 Kan. 584, 64 Pac. 75, holding that a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance was maintainable in the district court, although the grantor's estate was in process of administration in the probate court; Hill Inv. Co. v. Honeywell, 65 Kan. 349, 69 Pac. 334, holding that the district court had no jurisdiction of a suit to subject property in the hands of a guardian of an insane person to the payment of his debts; Kothman v. Markson, 34 Kan. 542, 9 Pac. 218, holding that the district court would not enforce payment of a claim against a decedent, where no reason was disclosed why relief could not be had in the probate court; Carter v. Christie, 57 Kan. 492, 46 Pac. 964, holding that the district court had jurisdiction of a suit by an administratrix against a surviving partner of her intestate for an accounting; Mendenhall v. Burnette, 58 Kan. 355, 49 Pac. 93, holding that a judgment after revivor against the judgment debtor's executors may be enforced by execution without resort to the probate court.

Debtor and creditor—Liability of heir—Enforcement.—Cited in Clawson v. McCune's Adm'r, 20 Kan. 337, as to the right of action of a creditor against the heir of his debtor.

Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371; Greer v. Higgins, 20 Kan. 420—holding that it is error to instruct the jury to disregard the testimony of any witness testifying falsely to any material fact; Robert Burgess & Son v. Alcorn, 75 Kan. 735, 90 Pac. 239, holding that an instruction that the jury might disregard the testimony of such a witness was proper, although it made no exception as to testimony which was corroborated; Rea v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 269, 105 Pac. 381, holding that an instruction that the jury were justified in disregarding the testimony of such a witness, except so far as it was corroborated, required them to accept it as true if corroborated, and was improper.

Same—Province of court and jury.—Cited in Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Kunkel, 17 Kan. 145, holding that imperative instructions to believe or disbelieve particular witnesses are improper; Ball v. Hardesty, 38 Kan. 540, 16 Pac. 808, holding that an instruction, in effect requiring the jury to disregard expert testimony, was improper.

15 KAN. 555, KENNEDY v. BECK

Replevin—Order of delivery—Vacation.—Cited in Carr v. Huffman, 47 Kan. 188, 27 Pac. 827, holding that an order of delivery in replevin could not be vacated after answer, although defendant, for the purpose of moving to vacate, withdrew his answer.

Same—Appearance—Effect.—Cited in Kelly-Goodfellow Shoe Co. v. Todd, 5 Okl. 360, 49 Pac. 53, holding that a defendant in replevin, appearing generally and answering, submitted himself to the court's jurisdiction, although not a resident of the county.

Appeal and error—Review—Orders affecting provisional remedies.—Cited in Snively v. Abbott Buggy Co., 36 Kan. 106, 12 Pac. 522, holding that an order overruling a motion to discharge an attachment is not reviewable prior to final judgment.

Verdict—Conclusiveness—Review of evidence.—Cited in Allison v. Ahlers, 26 Kan. 582, holding that the findings of the jury on a disputed question of fact were conclusive; Johnson v. Leggett, 28 Kan. 590; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 58 Kan. 447, 49 Pac. 602—holding that it is the trial court's duty to set aside a verdict only when it is manifestly against the evidence and the jury have manifestly mistaken the testimony; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Diehl, 33 Kan. 422, 6 Pac. 566; Lee v. Birmingham, 39 Kan. 320, 18 Pac. 218; Cherokee & Pittsburg Coal & Mining Co. v. Stoop, 56 Kan. 426, 43 Pac. 766—holding that the trial court should set aside a verdict which is clearly against the weight of the evidence; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Keller, 31 Kan. 439; Kansas City, W. & N. W. R. Co. v. Ryan, 49 Kan. 1, 30 Pac. 108; City of Tacoma v. Tacoma Light & Water Co., 16 Wash. 288, 47 Pac. 738—holding that where the trial court, in overruling a motion for a new trial, held that the verdict was contrary to the weight of the evidence, a new trial would be granted; Bass v. Swingley, 42 Kan. 729, 22 Pac. 714, holding that it is the trial court's duty to pass on the weight of evidence, and hence a motion for a new trial on the facts before another judge than the one trying the case should be granted of course; McCarthy v. Talbot, 9 Kan. App. 444, 60 Pac. 656, holding that the trial court should set aside a verdict clearly against the weight of evidence, but the Court of Appeals cannot, if the verdict is supported by any evidence.

Torts—Liability—Co-operation.—Cited in Barnhart v. Ford, 37 Kan. 520, 15 Pac. 542, holding that two persons acting in concert with another in obtaining possession of plaintiff's property were liable jointly with him, although they were acting as his employes, where they did not disclaim when sued, but filed a general denial; Reed v. Dick, 7 Kan. App. 760, 53 Pac. 486, holding that the question of co-operation between two defendants in the wrongful act sued for was for the jury, and its finding would not be disturbed.

Followed in Merriman v. Blanton, 25 Kan. 572, affirming judgment on authority of cited case.

15 KAN. 572, COOPER v. CONDON

Harmless error.—Cited in Lanone v. McKinnon & Co., 19 Kan. 408, as to immaterial error.

Mortgages—Change in secured notes—Effect.—Cited in Topeka Capital Co. v. Merriam, 60 Kan. 397, 56 Pac. 757, holding that a chattel mortgage is not extinguished by a substitution of other notes for those originally evidencing the secured debt.

Notes—Payment or evidence of debt.—Cited in Shepard & Playford v. John G. Allen & Son, 16 Kan. 182; Medberry, Yetter & Co. v. Soper, Brainard & Co., 17 Kan. 369—holding that whether a note is payment of a debt or only additional evidence thereof depends on the agreement of the parties.

Cited in note in 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 767, on right of one leaving chattels in another's possession as against latter's vendees or creditors.

15 KAN. 602, HEADLEY v. CHALLISS

Appeal and error—Rehearing—Questions considered.—Cited in Western News Co. v. Wilmarth, 34 Kan. 254, 8 Pac. 104, holding that a question not presented on the original hearing of an appeal would not be considered on rehearing.

Cited in note in 91 Am. Dec. 195, on writ of error.

Same—Former decision as the law of the case.—Cited in Crockett v. Gray, 31 Kan. 346, 2 Pac. 809; A. J. Harwi Hardware Co. v. Klippert, 73 Kan. 783, 85 Pac. 784; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 11 N. M. 145, 66 Pac. 550—holding that a prior decision was the law of the case, not merely as to questions considered and decided, but as to all those necessarily involved in the decision; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Shoup, 28 Kan. 394, 42 Am. Rep. 163, holding that, while the court has power to reconsider and reverse a prior decision in the same case, it will not do so, unless it was clearly erroneous; Wheelock v. Myers, 64 Kan. 47, 67 Pac. 632, holding that the reversal of a judgment for the assignee of a mortgage, because the assignment was not admissible, did not prevent a subsequent recovery, where, after the first trial and pending the proceedings in error, the statute was changed so as to make it admissible in evidence; Lorimer v. Fairchild, 68 Kan. 328, 75 Pac. 124, holding that a former decision of the Court of Appeals in the same case would not be followed as the law of the case, where clearly erroneous and involving a matter of public importance; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Stone, 80 Kan. 7, 101 Pac. 666, holding that a question considered and determined on a former appeal would not be reconsidered; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McFarland, 9 Kan. App. 197, 59 Pac. 665, holding that a former decision of the Court of Appeals was the law of the case and binding on the district court, although it was possible that the case might be taken to the Supreme Court.

Cited in note in 34 L. R. A. 333, on conclusiveness of prior decisions on subsequent appeals.

15 KAN. 608, BALLINGER v. LANTIER

Provisional remedies—Bond—Necessity.—Cited in Simon v. Stetter, 25 Kan. 155, holding that an attachment bond is never required, where defendant is a nonresident; Kellogg v. Hazlett, 2 Kan. App. 525, 43 Pac. 987, holding that a summons in garnishment proceedings should be vacated, where the statutory bond was not given.

Residence—Change—What constitutes.—Cited in Adams v. Evans, 19 Kan. 174, holding that an intention to remove to this state, not followed by an actual removal, did not prevent an attachment on the ground of nonresidence; Amsbaugh v. Exchange Bank of Maquoketa, Iowa, 33 Kan. 100, 5 Pac. 384, holding that a person leaving a state with intent to remove therefrom ceased to be a resident thereof, although his wife still lived in that state; Garlinghouse v. Mulvane, 40 Kan. 428, 19 Pac. 798, holding that a temporary absence from the state with the intention of returning did not justify the attachment of the homestead on the ground of nonresidence.

Cited in note in 32 Am. Dec. 428, on meaning of inhabitancy, residence, and citizenship; in 19 L. R. A. 668, on what is nonresidence for purpose of attachment; in 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779, as to when nonresidence of person intending to leave permanently begins.

Pleading—Reply—Necessity.—Cited in Brown v. Massey, 19 Okl. 482, 92 Pac. 246, holding that, where no reply was filed to an answer containing new matter, the court should either have granted judgment for defendant on the pleadings or required plaintiff to file a reply.

15 KAN. 612, MARTSOLF v. BARNWELL

Referee—Findings—Conclusiveness.—Cited in Burchett v. Hamil, 5 Okl. 300, 47 Pac. 1053, holding that a referee's findings, when not excepted to, were conclusive on a motion to confirm the report.

Same—Conclusions of law—Conclusiveness.—Cited in Tribal Development Co. v. White Bros., 28 Okl. 525, 114 Pac. 736, holding that a referee's conclusions of law are not binding on the court.

Same—Review.—Cited in Kelley & Lysle Mill Co. v. Schreiber, 82 Kan. 403, 108 Pac. 816, 20 Ann. Cas. 192, holding that a referee's conclusions of law could be reviewed by the trial court without the filing of any exceptions thereto.

15 KAN. 619, SHELLABARGER v. THAYER

Mechanics' liens—Payments by owner.—Cited in Wilson v. School Dist. No. 2, 17 Kan. 104; Delahay v. Goldie, 17 Kan. 263—holding that a payment by an owner to a contractor within 60 days after completion of the building did not release him from liability to a subcontractor; Fossett v. Rock Island Lumber & Mfg. Co., 76 Kan. 428, 92 Pac. 833, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 918, holding that, where the cost exceeded the contract price, the owner, who had paid some subcontractors before their time for filing liens had expired, was entitled to credit for the proportionate share of such payments.

Cited in note in 20 L. R. A. 565, on payment to contractors or subcontractors as affecting liens of subordinate claimants.

Same—Statement—Time for filing.—Cited in Cunningham v. Barr, 45 Kan. 158, 25 Pac. 583, holding that a subcontractor's statement of lien, filed within 60 days after completion of the contract by the principal contractor, was in time.

Same—Contract—Force as against subcontractor.—Cited in Clough v. McDonald, 18 Kan. 114, holding that a subcontractor is not bound by the terms of the contract between the owner and original contractor as to the terms of payment.

15 KAN. 625, ALLEN v. HANNUM

Wills—Renunciation by widow—Effect.—Cited in Fennell v. Fennell, 80 Kan. 730, 106 Pac. 1038, 18 Ann. Cas. 471, holding that, where the widow's refusal to take under the will made it impossible to carry out the intention of the testator, the whole estate should be distributed under the statute of descents and distributions; Ashelford v. Chapman, 81 Kan. 312, 106 Pac. 534, holding that, where a widow renounced her rights under the will, she could not have the benefit of a provision therein requiring devisees to pay certain purchase-money liens; Pittman v. Pittman, 81 Kan. 643, 107 Pac. 235, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602, holding that, where the widow renounced, the will should be enforced as to other beneficiaries as nearly as possible in accordance with the testator's intent.

15 KAN. 627, CITY OF LEAVENWORTH v. BOOTH

License taxes—Validity.—Cited in Fretwell v. City of Troy, 18 Kan. 271, holding that a municipal license tax of $5 a day on auctions was valid; McGrath v. City of Newton, 29 Kan. 364, holding that a municipal ordinance imposing a license tax on various classes of business was valid, at least as to some of the classes.

Cited in note in 52 Am. Dec. 332, on power of state to exact licenses and charge therefor; in 77 Am. Dec. 67 (par. 2), on constitutionality of license taxes; in 30 L. R. A. 415, 423, 427, 439, on limit of amount of license fees.

Same—Failure to pay—Effect.—Cited in Yount v. Denning, 52 Kan. 629, 35 Pac. 207, holding that persons carrying on a real estate business without paying the license tax imposed by a municipal ordinance could not recover for their services.

Same—Necessity of uniformity.—Cited in Commissioners of Ottawa County v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 284, 27 Am. Rep. 101; City of Newton v. Atchison, 81 Kan. 151, 1 Pac. 288, 47 Am. Rep. 486; In re Martin, 62 Kan. 638, 64 Pac. 43—holding that the constitutional provision as to uniformity of taxation does not apply to license taxes.

Revenue tax—Necessity of uniformity.—Cited in Marion & McPherson Ry. Co. v. Champlin, 37 Kan. 682, 16 Pac. 222, holding that a statute in effect exempting from taxation property not owned by citizens of a township was void under the constitutional provision requiring uniformity; Ellis v. Frazier, 38 Or.

462, holding that a tax on bicycles was not a license tax, its principal purpose being the raising of revenue, and was void because not uniform.

Cited in note in 57 L. R. A. 86, on taxation of corporate franchises; in 60 L. R. A. 334, 335, on constitutional equality in relation to corporate taxation.

Foreign insurance companies—Conditions on admission to state.—Cited in State v. Phipps, 50 Kan. 609, 31 Pac. 1097, 18 L. R. A. 657, 34 Am. St. Rep. 152, holding that the Legislature can prescribe the conditions on which foreign insurance companies may do business in this state; Phoenix Ins. Co. of New York v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672, holding that a statute making license fees on foreign insurance companies dependent on the conditions imposed by their home state on Kansas corporations was valid.

Cited in note in 24 L. R. A. 299, on restrictions on business of foreign insurance companies.

Quasi criminal prosecutions—Appealability.—Cited in City of Burlington v. James, 17 Kan. 221, holding that prosecutions for violations of city ordinances may be taken to the Supreme Court by appeal.

Municipal corporations—Power to pass ordinances.—Cited in note in 34 Am. Dec. 638, on limitations on power of municipality to pass ordinances or by-laws.

15 KAN. 637, HAYNES v. COWEN

Evidence—Portion of record—Force.—Cited in Capital Bank of Topeka v. Huntoon, 35 Kan. 577, 11 Pac. 369, holding that, where a part only of a record was introduced in evidence, it proved only what it purported to prove.

Cited in note in 14 Am. Dec. 187, on admissibility of judgment in evidence without the judgment roll.

Foreign records—Authentication.—Cited in Friend v. Miller, 52 Kan. 139, 34 Pac. 397, 39 Am. St. Rep. 340, holding that the record of proceedings in a Utah court was properly authenticated, the court taking judicial notice of the acts of Congress creating courts in that territory.

Same—Admission in evidence.—Cited in Ward v. Baker, 16 Kan. 31, holding that a transcript of a foreign judgment was properly admitted in evidence.

Cited in note in 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960; on admissibility in evidence of copies of records of other states.

Service—Finding of—Force as evidence.—Cited in Dexter v. Cochran, 17 Kan. 447; O'Driscoll v. Soper, 19 Kan. 574—holding that a finding of due service in the journal entry of a judgment was prima facie evidence thereof; Gross v. Funk, 20 Kan. 655; Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, 9 Kan. App. 651, 58 Pac. 1029—holding that a finding in the case-made that notice of settlement was given was prima facie evidence thereof.

Judgments—Presumptions to support.—Cited in Head v. Daniels, 38 Kan. 1, 15 Pac. 911; Core v. Smith, 28 Okl. 909, 102 Pac. 114—holding that it would be presumed, in support of a judgment, that lost affidavits for an attachment and for publication were sufficient; National Bank of America v. Home Security Co., 65 Kan. 642, 70 Pac. 646, holding that, where a judgment record showed an appearance by a party and an order in its behalf respecting the subject-matter of the litigation, it would be presumed that the court had jurisdiction over such party.

THE STATE OF KANSAS V. N. B. FREELAND.

APPEALS, in Criminal Actions; When to be Taken. In a criminal action an appeal cannot be taken by the defendant from the district court to the supreme court until after a judgment has been rendered in the case; therefore, an appeal will not lie from an order of the district court, which overrules a motion to quash an information, or which sustains a motion for a continuance, while the action is still pending in the district court. [Cummings v. The State, 4-225; State v. Horneman, post, 452.]

Appeal from Pawnee District Court.

INFORMATION for forgery. The questions raised in this case are fully stated in the subjoined opinion. The rulings appealed from were made by the district court at the December Term 1875.

Nelson Adams, J. P. Worrell, and R. H. Ballinger, for the appellant.

J. M. Van Winkle, and A. M. F. Randolph, for The State.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was a criminal action for forgery. The defendant moved the court below to quash the information, which motion the court overruled, and the defendant excepted. The state then, by the county attorney, moved the court to continue the case until the next term thereof, which motion the court sustained, and the defendant again excepted. The defendant then appealed the case to this court.

The State v. Freeland.

The first question arising in the case is, whether a defendant in a criminal action can appeal from the district court to the supreme court on the overruling of a motion of the defendant to quash the information, or on the sustaining of a motion of the state for a continuance of the case till the next term, while the case is still pending in the district court, undisposed of. We do not think that an appeal will lie in such a case. The only section of the statutes authorizing a defendant in a criminal action to appeal reads as follows:

“Sec. 281. An appeal to the supreme court may be taken by the defendant, as a matter of right, from any judgment against him; and, upon the appeal, any decision of the court, or intermediate order, made in progress of the case, may be reviewed.” (Gen. Stat., 865.)

Section 288 of the same act (criminal code) provides for the state taking an appeal in certain cases. Section 282 of the same act, and of the same article, provides as follows:

“Sec. 282. An appeal from a judgment in a criminal action may be taken in the manner and in the cases prescribed in this article.”

That article is article 14 of the code of criminal procedure. The provisions of the code of civil procedure for taking cases from the district court to the supreme court are not in their nature applicable to criminal cases. Among other reasons, criminal cases can be taken from the district court to the supreme court only by appeal, while civil cases can be taken from the district court to the supreme court only on petition in error. And there is no statutory provision which in terms makes the provisions relative to proceedings in error in civil cases applicable to appeals in criminal cases, or vice versa. Besides, there can be no such motion as a motion to quash an information, in a civil action; and where a criminal case has been tried on its merits, and the defendant acquitted, the state has no appeal. The acquittal is conclusive. And taking §§ 281 and 282 of the criminal code, and applying the maxim, expressio unius, est exclusio alterius, and [a criminal appeal can be taken by the defendant only after judgment; and an intermediate order of which he complains can be reviewed only on such an appeal.]

We do not think that an appeal can be taken in cases of this kind, and therefore the appeal in this case must be dismissed.

JOHN W. HOOVER V. JOHN MEAR.

HERD LAW OF 1872; Order of County Commissioners; Proof of Publication. On the 20th of March 1872, the county commissioners of Dickinson county made an order under the herd law of 1872, specifying April 12th 1872, as the time for the taking effect of the order, and directing a publication for four successive weeks in the "Abilene Chronicle." The publication was made as directed, though not completed until after April 12th, but no affidavit thereof was made or entered upon the record of the county commissioners until May 20th 1873: Held, That the order went into effect upon the completion of the publication, and that it was not invalidated by the fact that the publication was not and could not be completed prior to the time fixed by the commissioners for its going into effect, and that it was neither invalidated nor its operation postponed by the delay in filing and entering of record the affidavit of publication. [Reed v. Sexton's Adm'rs, 20-195.]

Error from Dickinson District Court.

ACTION by Mear to recover from Hoover damages for injuries done on the premises of Mear by the stock of Hoover, between the 9th of December 1872 and 2d of January 1873. It was brought before a justice of the peace in January 1873, and appealed to the district court, and there tried at the May Term 1873, on an agreed statement of facts. It is admitted that the horses and cattle of Hoover damaged Mear, as charged, but that Mear's fields were not inclosed by fence, and that Mear claims under the herd law of 1872. Judgment against Hoover for $12 damages, and for costs, and he brings the case here on error.

Burroughs & Burris, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The question in this case is, whether the herd law of 1872 was, between December 9th 1872, and January 2d 1873, in force in Dickinson county. The facts are these: On the 20th of March 1872 the county commissioners made the order authorized by the statute, (Laws 1872, p. 384.) They fixed the time for the order to go into effect on April 12th 1872, and directed publication of the order in the "Abilene Chronicle." The publication was made as required by law, but the affidavit of publication was not made and filed until May 20th 1873, more than a year thereafter, and after the commencement of this suit. Two points are made: It is insisted that the order never went into effect because the time fixed by the commissioners for its taking effect was before the expiration of the four weeks' publication required; and secondly, that if it ever went into effect it did not until the affidavit was filed and made a part of the record. The first section of the law grants to the commissioners the power to make such an order. The second section provides that the order shall be entered upon the records of the county commissioners, and shall be published for four successive weeks next after the entry on the records, and adds this proviso: "Provided, that the board of county commissioners shall specify a certain time at which said order shall take effect, and that said order shall not go into effect until the completion of the publication aforesaid, * * * which publication * * * shall be verified by the affidavit of the person doing the same, and the said affidavit entered upon the records of the said commissioners." Was the order in force? We think it was. It went into force at the time of the completion of the publication. The law directs the commissioners to specify the time in which the order shall go into effect. They may specify a time many months after the order, and then, though the publication be completed in four weeks, the order remains inoperative until the time designated arrives

---

If however they specify a time, as in this case, anterior to the publication, the law steps in and says that it shall not go into effect, notwithstanding the specification of time by the commissioners, until the completion of the publication, and therefore postpones the operation of the order until that time. In other words, they may not by a specification of the time anticipate the completion of the publication, though they may thereby postpone the operation of the order.

In reference to the second matter, the law directs the manner of preserving proof of the publication of the order, but does not make the operation of the order depend upon the preservation of the evidence. It does not say that the order shall not go into effect until the affidavit of publication is entered upon the record, while it does say that it shall not go into effect until the completion of the publication. It makes one thing a prerequisite, and is silent as to the other. By what right do we make both prerequisite? Suppose the legislature should pass a special law affecting only Shawnee county, and should declare that the law should not go into effect until its publication in the "Topeka Commonwealth," and should also add a direction that the publisher of that paper should file in the secretary of state's office an affidavit of the publication: would not the law go into effect when the publication was made? That would be the only matter the legislature had specified as a condition of and prerequisite to its going into effect, and the other matter would be simply a direction of the means of preserving evidence of its publication. In other words, the publication, and not the evidence of it, is the vital matter. Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kas. 674.

The judgment will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

THE STATE OF KANSAS v. DANIEL A. INGRAM.

1. NOLLE PROSEQUI—When no Bar to a Second Action. A nolle prosequi of a criminal prosecution entered before the commencement of a trial is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. [State v. Curtis, 29-384; State v. Rust, 31-509; State v. Hart, 33-218.]
2. FORMER ACQUITTAL; Plea of. A plea to an indictment of autrefois acquit, which simply alleges a nolle prosequi, is bad, and a demurrer to it should be sustained. [State v. Curtis, 29-384; State v. Rust, 31-509; State v. McKinney, 31-570; State v. Hart, 33-218.]
3. ——— Where a demurrer to such a plea is however overruled, and then a denial filed, and the court on the trial of such plea refuses to call a jury, but hears the testimony and decides against the plea, and the testimony only shows a nolle prosequi before trial, held, that the substantial rights of the defendant were not prejudiced.
4. EVIDENCE—When Objection to be Made. Where testimony is admitted without objection, it is too late to insist for the first time in this court that it was admitted without first laying the proper foundation therefor. [Brumbaugh v. Schmidt, 9-117; Grandstaff v. Brown, 23-176; A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12-380.]
5. ADMISSIONS OF DEFENDANT; When Admissible. It is not error to admit in evidence the admissions and confessions of the defendant, although made after his arrest, and while in custody, and although at the time a crowd of persons was surrounding the building in which he was confined, provided it appears that such confessions and admissions were made without, and were uninfluenced by, any threats, promises, or other inducements. [State v. Reddick, 7-143; State v. Folwell, 14-105; State v. White, 17-487; State v. Mortimer, 20-93.]
6. LARCENY; Evidence of Identity of Property; Competency. On the trial of a prosecution for the larceny of a horse, which rests largely upon circumstantial evidence, it is not error to admit the evidence of certain witnesses who testify to seeing the defendant, recently after the larceny, in the possession of a horse, without fully identifying it as the horse that was stolen. The weight of such testimony is matter for the consideration of the jury. [A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12-354.]
7. INSTRUCTIONS; Circumstantial Evidence. Where the court, at the instance of the state, instructs the jury as to the right to convict upon circumstantial testimony, and thereafter gives all the instructions asked by the defendant in respect to such evidence, the latter has no cause of complaint that the first instructions failed to give any rules for weighing and determining the effect of circumstantial testimony, or to suggest the need of extra caution respecting such testimony.
8. ——— Prima Facie Case; Presumption. Where upon the whole testimony the state has made out a prima facie case, that is, has proven such a state of facts, as, unexplained, point to the defendant's guilt, and no explanations have been made, the jury is warranted in finding a verdict of guilty. The mere presumption of innocence does not overthrow the presumption from the unexplained facts.

Statement of the Case.

9. WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE; *Statements of Accused; Province of Jury. The jury is not bound to believe all the statements made by the defendant in explanation of his possession of recently stolen property, those in favor of as well as those against him, even though there is no direct evidence showing the falsity of the former. They are to consider all the statements, and give to each such credence as to them seems reasonable and just under all the circumstances of the case. [Callison v. Smith, 20-36; K. P. Rly. Co. v. Anderson, 23-52.]
10. INSTRUCTIONS—*When no Error to Refuse. An instruction which, though correct as an abstract proposition, seems likely without some explanation or qualification to mislead the jury, may properly be refused. [U. P. Rly. Co. v. Fray, 81-739; Gregg v. Garverick, 33-190.]

Appeal from Nemaha District Court.

INDICTMENT for grand larceny, found at the August Term 1875, charging that the defendant, at the county of Washington, "on the 8th of June, 1871, one bay gelding, four years old, about fourteen and one-half hands high, of the goods and chattels of one M. S., unlawfully and feloniously did steal, take and carry away," etc. The indictment also alleged that the defendant was absent from the state, and so concealed himself that he could not be found, from September 15th 1871, to June 14th 1875. A plea of former acquittal was filed. The record shows (and see 10 Kas. 630,) that defendant had been arrested in July 1871 upon a warrant issued by a justice of the peace, and had been recognized by the justice for his appearance at the October Term 1871 of the district court; that at said term an information was filed by the county attorney, but defendant failed to appear, and that at the April Term 1874, the county attorney entered a nolle, the defendant being still absent, and still failing to appear. The proceedings taken on said plea of former acquittal are fully stated in the opinion. Subsequently defendant pleaded "not guilty," to the indictment, and a trial was had at the August Term 1875. Verdict, guilty, and defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term of three years. From this sentence and judgment he appeals.

J. G. Lowe, and Joseph Sharp, for appellant.

J. W. Rector, county attorney, for The State.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Defendant was convicted in the district court of the crime of grand larceny. From that conviction he brings this appeal. Several questions are presented and discussed by counsel for appellant.

I. A plea of autrefois acquit, was made, and it is alleged that the court erred in refusing to submit the issue tendered thereby to a jury. A demurrer to this plea was filed by the county attorney, which was overruled. He then filed a denial of the plea, and upon that issue the court, after refusing to call a jury, heard testimony and decided against the defendant. We think the court should have sustained the demurrer, that the plea, as filed, showed no case of autrefois acquit, and that therefore there was no question of fact to be submitted to any triers. The plea, after alleging a prior information for the same offense, states:

“And the said defendant further alleges that at the said April Term 1874 of the said district court, * * * the said district court, by its order and judgment, upon the motion of J. W. Rector, county attorney for said Washington county, and prosecuting said information in behalf of the said state of Kansas, dismissed and forever discharged the said defendant from prosecution on said charge of feloniously stealing,” etc.

This shows no trial, no impanneling of a jury, no proceeding other than the filing of an information, and a nolle prosequi. It does not appear that the defendant was ever acquitted, was ever in jeopardy. A nolle prosequi, prior to the impanneling of a jury, is no bar to a subsequent prosecution. 1 Archbold Cr. Pr., (Waterman's Notes,) p. 368, and cases cited; 1 Wharton's Cr. Law, 7 ed., p. 544, and cases cited in note. So that the court should have sustained the demurrer to the plea; and any subsequent proceedings thereon, even though they were irregular, wrought no prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant. It may be stated that the testimony subsequently offered on the trial of the plea showed just what the plea alleged, a nolle prosequi, and nothing more.

II. It is claimed that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the prosecuting witness, and of the sheriff, as to admissions made by the defendant. So far as the testimony of the sheriff is concerned, it was admitted without objection, and it is too late now to object that no proper foundation therefor was laid. As respects the testimony of the prosecuting witness, while it appears that the defendant was in custody, that quite a crowd was collected in front of the building where the defendant then was, and that one at least of the crowd was threatening mob violence, it does not appear that any of these threats were heard by the prisoner, and it does appear that no inducements, promises, or threats of any kind whatever were made to defendant, or that anything was done or said to influence him to make the statements he did make. Under these circumstances there was no error in admitting the testimony. The State v. Reddick, 7 Kas. 143.

III. It is insisted that the testimony of one or more of the witnesses who saw defendant in company with another man, shortly after the larceny, in possession of some horses, did not sufficiently identify such horses as the ones that were stolen. But this is an objection going, not to the competency of the testimony, but to its weight, and was a matter for the consideration of the jury. The simple fact, if that was all, that the defendant was seen in possession of horses shortly after the larceny, even without any identification of the animals, was a fact which the court might properly admit in evidence, leaving the effect of it to be considered by the jury under proper instructions.

IV. The remaining objections are to the instructions. Of these, three were given at the instance of the state, two as asked by defendant, and two asked by defendant with some modification, though in what the modification consisted, does not appear. The court, in addition, gave a general charge. Five instructions asked by defendant were refused. The three instructions given at the instance of the state, counsel for appellant claims to be erroneous, but fails to point out any specific error in either. He quotes from Roscoe's Cr. Evidence, that "The utmost caution should be used in the application of circumstantial evidence," and also says that "in criminal cases the establishment of a prima facie case only does not take away the presumption of the innocence of the defendant, nor shift the burden of proof." This is the only specification of error. And, so far as this goes, we see nothing of which defendant can rightfully complain. True, the instruction bearing upon circumstantial evidence is brief, and in general terms, suggesting no need of extra caution, and giving no rules for weighing and determining such evidence. But it is unquestionably correct as far as it goes, and the court afterward, and at the instance of defendant, enlarged upon this matter, and gave all the instructions thereon asked by defendant. In reference to the other suggestion of the learned counsel, while it may be true that in the progress of the trial the onus probandi is not shifting backward and forward, and that the state must upon the whole testimony establish its case, yet if, upon the whole testimony, the state has established a prima facie case, that is, has proven such a state of facts as, unexplained, point to the defendant's guilt, and no explanations have been made, the jury is warranted in finding a verdict of guilty. The mere presumption of innocence does not overthrow the presumptions from the unexplained facts. We do not think the instructions inconsistent with these views.

The State v. Ingram.

The instructions refused were properly refused. Two of them were to the effect that, unless the state had shown the statements of defendant concerning his connection with the property to be false, they must acquit. We do not suppose the court was bound to single out a single matter, such as the truth or falsity of defendant's statements, and direct the jury as matter of law that the verdict should hinge thereon. The jury were to consider all the testimony, the manner of the larceny, the conduct as well as the statements of defendant, and from them all determine the question of guilt.

A third instruction refused was, that the jury must believe all the statements of defendant, those in his favor as well as those against him, unless the state had shown by the evidence that the former were false. This would be apt to mislead the jury, and induce the belief that there must be some direct testimony showing the falsity of defendant's statements, or else that they must be accepted as true. It would be invading the province of the jury, for they are to determine how much credence shall be given to each and all of the statements of defendant. Some may seem to them so improbable that, though there be no direct testimony showing their falsity, they may properly disbelieve them.

---

Opinion of the Court.

The fifth instruction refused was to the effect that if the proof showed the larceny of a horse, the jury must acquit, inasmuch as the indictment charged the larceny of a gelding. We think there was no error in refusing this instruction in the unqualified condition in which it was asked. Our statute, it is true, specifically mentions "horse, mare, gelding, colt," etc.; and the indictment charged the larceny of a gelding. But still, in common talk, the terms, "horse" and "gelding" are used interchangeably. The first question asked the prosecuting witness was, "Did you have a bay gelding stolen about the 1st of June 1871?" And the answer was, "I did." Subsequently he spoke of the animal as a "horse," as did the other witnesses. Now it seems to us, that an instruction which might seem to the jury to compel them to give to the word "horse," as used by the witnesses, an arbitrary technical meaning, instead of its common signification, might mislead them. We do not mean to hold, under our statute, that proof of the larceny of a stallion will sustain an indictment charging the larceny of a gelding. But where an instruction attempting to distinguish between the two classes of animals, and, using the terms "horse" and "gelding," ignores the fact that in common parlance the terms are used interchangeably, and seems calculated to compel the jury to give to the term "horse," as used by the various witnesses, a signification not intended by them, the court may properly refuse it. For an instruction, however correct, should not be given if, without qualification, it is likely to mislead.

Upon all the points therefore made by counsel for appellant, we think the ruling of the court must be sustained, and the judgment will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

H. F. WOOLLEY v. P. VAN VOLKENBURGH.

1. PROTEST DAMAGES—When Recoverable. Protest damages are recoverable in this state only when protest is legally necessary to fix the liability of some party to the note or bill. [German v. Ritchie, 9-106; Cramer v. Eagle Mfg. Co., 23-399; Noyes v. White, 9-640; Curtis v. Buckley, 14-450].
2. LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR; Protest not Necessary. Protest is not necessary in order to fix the liability of a guarantor; [Brenner v. Weaver, 1-188; Fuller v. Scott, 8-25;] hence, in an action by the payee of a note against the maker and a guarantor, protest damages are not recoverable.

Error from Saline District Court.

ACTION by Van Volkenburgh and four others, as partners, against the maker and guarantors of the following promissory note:

SALINA, KANSAS, Nov. 8, 1872.

Six months after date, we promise to pay to the order of P. Van Volkenburgh & Co., four hundred and twenty-five 88-100 dollars, at the Bank of D. W. Powers & Co., Salina, Kansas, value received.

H. F. WOOLLEY.

On the back of said note was the following indorsement: "We guarantee the payment of the within promissory note," which indorsement was signed, "H. B. MERRILL, M. S. PRICE, Z. W. MORROW, C. POST." At the March Term 1874 the plaintiffs had judgment for $425.88 principal, $85.50 interest, $25.55 protest damages, and $5.12 protest fees—total, $492.05. The defendants made no answer, nor appearance, in the district court, but they now allege error in the allowance of the protest damages and fees, and bring the case here for review.

J. G. Mohler, for plaintiffs in error.

McClure & Humphrey, and Clough & Wheat, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: But a single question is in this case. The action was on a promissory note, brought by the payees against the maker and four guarantors. The payees claimed and recovered protest damages. Were they entitled thereto? We think not. Protest damages are recoverable only when protest is legally necessary to fix the liability of some party to the note or bill. German v. Ritchie, 9 Kas. 106. But notice of non-payment is not necessary in order to charge a guarantor. It is said by Edwards in his work on Notes and Bills, page 242, after quoting from Chitty on Bills, that, "It is plain from the cases cited by him, as well as from the American authorities, that notice to the guarantor is not a term or condition of the contract; but only a mode of showing that the party guarantied has taken the proper steps to enforce or secure payment of the principal debt, * * * and that the guarantor of the bill is no party to the instrument, and is not by the custom of merchants entitled to notice of the dishonor." See also 2 Parsons on Notes and Bills, 137. Our statute defining the parties who are liable for protest damages does not mention guarantors. It speaks of "drawers, indorsers, makers, and obligors." (Gen. Stat. 116, §§ 14, 15.) We think therefore that there was error in awarding protest damages and fees. It is well settled that any error apparent in the final judgment of a district court may be corrected by suit in error in this court, although no exception was taken thereto by the party complaining, and no appearance by him at the trial and judgment, and no motion made to set aside the judgment.

The judgment of the district court will be modified by striking out the protest fees and damages. The costs of this court will be divided.

JOHN W. THOM v. W. D. DAVIS.

1. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; Newly-Discovered Evidence. Where a motion for a new trial is made on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and overruled, without all the evidence before us the supreme court cannot say that the newly-discovered evidence is not merely cumulative. (10 Kas. 81, 639.) [Bartlett v. Feeney, 11-593.]
2. PRACTICE, SUPREME COURT. Where counsel fail to specify any matter as error, and the supreme court perceives no error in the record, the judgment of the court below will be affirmed. [Hutchinson v. Bain, 11-234; Powers v. Kindt, 13-74; State v. Jennerson, 14-133.]

Error from Ottawa District Court.

AT the April Term 1874 of the district court, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, Davis recovered judgment against Thom for $149.23, and obtained a decree for the sale of certain real property. Thom moved for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, but the transcript does not contain any evidence offered to support said motion. The motion was overruled, and Thom brings the case here.

Case of Putnam, for plaintiff in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: From an inspection of the record, we have been unable to find any error in this case. The entire brief of the plaintiff in error reads as follows: "The plaintiff in this case believes the law of this case to be settled in the following cases: 10 Kas. 81; 10 Kas. 639." The plaintiff in error is correct. The two cases referred to do settle the principal questions that might be raised in this case, and they settle such questions against the plaintiff in error. As there is no error apparent on the record, the judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

BOAZ W. WILLIAMS V. NELSON HILL.

EVIDENCE; RECORDS; *When Record-Copy of Deed is Admissible. The common-law rule in reference to the conditions upon which copies of instruments may be admitted in evidence is changed by § 27 of chapter 22 of General Statutes, and §§ 11 and 12 of chapter 87 of the Laws of 1870, so as to admit the record-copy of a deed when it appears simply that the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use it. [Marshall v. Shibley, 11-114; Clark v. Lord, 20-390.]

Error from Washington District Court.

EJECTMENT, brought by Williams, as plaintiff, to recover possession of a certain lot in the town of Washington. Answer, denial of plaintiff's title. Trial at the August Term 1874. Plaintiff showed title by regular conveyances in Strohm and Richards, and then offered the official record of the deeds from said Strohm and Richards to Price and others, (plaintiff's grantors,) coupling such offer with proof that said deeds from S. and R. to P. and others were not in his (plaintiff's) possession nor under his control. The record-copies were objected to by Hill, and the objection sustained. Finding and judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings the case here on error.

J. D. Brumbaugh, for plaintiff.

J. G. Lowe, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The only question in this case is, whether the common-law rule in reference to the conditions upon which copies of instruments may be admitted in evidence, is changed by § 27 of chapter 22 of Gen. Stat., and §§ 11 and 12 of chapter 87 of the Laws of 1870, so as to admit the record-copy of a deed when it appears simply that the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use it. We think it is. The language of the statute is plain and unambiguous. It says that such record-copy "may be received in evidence in any court," and also that, when the "original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same, such record shall have the same effect as the original." And being merely a matter of evidence, we think it clearly within the power of the legislature to alter and modify the conditions upon which secondary evidence of the contents of written instruments may be admitted.

The State v. Stillwell.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to grant a new trial.

THE STATE OF KANSAS V. JOSEPH STILLWELL.

GAMBLING; Gambling Device; Betting on Cards. Where, under § 240 of the act relating to crimes and punishments, which makes it unlawful for any person to bet upon a gambling device, or to bet upon any game played by means of any such gambling device, an indictment was drawn charging substantially as follows: The grand jurors "find that J. S. is guilty of the crime of gambling, for that the defendant did play cards for money, checks, and other valuable things, all of which is contrary to the statute," etc.; and the indictment did not in any other manner allege that the defendant bet on said cards, or that he bet at all, or that said cards were a gambling device, or that the defendant bet on a gambling device, or that he bet on any game played by means of a gambling device, held, that the indictment was and is insufficient, and that the court below did not err in quashing it. [State v. Hardin, 1-474; Rice v. State, 3-142.]

Appeal from Greenwood District Court.

AN indictment was found by the grand jury, in the following words:

STATE OF KANSAS, GREENWOOD COUNTY:

In the district court of Greenwood county, for the April Term in the year 1875.

THE STATE OF KANSAS	}	Indictment for Gambling.
JOSEPH STILLWELL.

The jurors of the grand jury of the state of Kansas, duly drawn, sworn, and charged to inquire of offenses committed within the said county of Greenwood, in the name and by the authority of the state of Kansas, do present and find, that

---

Opinion of the Court:

---

Joseph Stillwell is guilty of the crime of gambling, for that the said defendant, in said county of Greenwood, did, on the first day of July 1874, in a certain frame building on lot 7, block 18, in the city of Eureka, play cards for money, checks, and other valuable things, all of which is contrary to the statute in such case made and provided.

Subsequently, and at said April Term 1875, the district court, on defendant's motion, quashed said indictment, and The State appeals.

W. C. Huffman, for The State.

R. M. Ruggles, for the defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: This was a criminal prosecution. The prosecution was commenced under § 240 of the crimes act. (Gen. Stat. 370.) This section provides, that any person who shall bet at or upon any gambling device, or shall bet upon any game played at or by means of any such gambling device, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars nor less than ten dollars. The indictment in this case charges substantially as follows: The grand jurors "find that Joseph Stillwell is guilty of the crime of gambling, for that the said defendant * * * did * * * play cards for money, checks, and other valuable things, all of which is contrary to the statutes," etc. The indictment is evidently defective. The offense intended to be charged was betting on a gambling device, or on a game played by means of such gambling device. But there is no allegation in the indictment that the cards used were a gambling device, and there is no allegation that the defendant bet on them, or that he bet at all. Now, cards are not necessarily a gambling device. They are indeed seldom used as such, but generally they are used merely as a source of amusement. If the cards in this particular case were a gambling device, the indictment should have so alleged. (Rice v. The State, 3 Kas. 142, 169; The State v. Hardin, 1 Kas. 474.) We do not wish however to be understood as approving the case of The State v. Hardin, to the extent that it goes. Cards may or may not be a gambling device, just as they are used, and intended to be used. A person may bet on a game of cards, without betting on a gambling device, or on a game played by means of a gambling device. Suppose that A. and B. play merely for amusement, with a deck of cards kept merely for amusement, and C. and D. bet on the game: would any one claim that C. and D. bet on a gambling device, or on a game played by means of a gambling device? And a person may play cards for money without betting on them. Suppose a person is hired to play cards for others to bet on, or for the purpose of showing his skill, or to teach others the tricks that may be performed with cards: would he not be playing for money, or for some other valuable consideration? It is easy enough to draw good indictments; and hence it is not necessary to prosecute any person on such an indictment as the one we now have under consideration.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

In the case of The State of Kansas, appellant, v. Alonzo Shewalter, appellee, also brought here from Greenwood district court, the following opinion was filed:

VALENTINE, J.: Precisely the same questions are involved in this case as in the case of The State v. Stillwell, just decided; and hence the same judgment must be rendered in this case as in that. Judgment affirmed.

SAMUEL MINER v. LOUISA B. PEARSON, et al.

1. ACTION ON NOTE; Default of Defendant; Judgment. In an action against the maker of a note and mortgage, where the petition sets forth the facts in full, and asks for a personal judgment against such maker for the amount due on such note and mortgage, and the defendant is in default for want of an answer, it is error for the court in rendering the judgment not to render a personal judgment as prayed for in the petition. [Brenner v. Bigelow, 8-496; Deitrich v. Lang, 11-636; Ames v. Brinsden, 25-746.]
2. MARRIED WOMAN; Personal Contract; Liability. A married woman may, in this state, bind herself by her contracts to the extent of her separate property; and a personal judgment may be rendered against her which will reach any or all of her separate property not exempt from execution under the exemption laws. [Deering v. Boyle, 8-528.]

Error from Franklin District Court.

THE facts in this case sufficiently appear in the opinion. The district court, at the November Term 1871, upon defendants' default, gave judgment in favor of Miner, as plaintiff, against Walter C. Pearson only, one of the two defendants sued, and duly served. Because such judgment was not given against both defendants, the plaintiff brings the case here on error.

John W. Deford, for plaintiff.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by Samuel Miner against Louisa B. Pearson and Walter C. Pearson on a promissory note and a mortgage. The petition below alleged that both of the defendants executed said note and mortgage; and the copy of the note attached to the petition shows that both of the defendants executed the note, the name of Louisa B. Pearson being signed to the note first. It does not seem from the record that a copy of the mortgage was attached to the petition. The petition prayed for a personal judgment against both of the defendants, and that the land mortgaged be sold to satisfy such judgment. The defendants, although duly served with summons, made default by not filing any answer in the action. And by such default they admitted the truth of all the allegations of the plaintiff's petition. And therefore the court below should have rendered a personal judgment against both defendants for the amount of the note and mortgage, and should have rendered the further judgment that the land mortgaged should be sold to satisfy the debt. The court below rendered a judgment on the default, but in doing so it did not render any personal judgment against Louisa B. Pearson. Why this was so, the record does not show. But the plaintiff, in his brief, attempting to account therefor, says: "The court stating as a reason therefor, that Louisa B., being a feme covert, (wife to Walter C.) was not bound by her contracts set forth in the petition." Now the record does not show that Louisa B. Pearson was a feme covert, the wife of Walter C. Pearson, or the wife of any other person. But even if it did, still that would not be a sufficient reason for not rendering a personal judgment against her. A married woman may in this state bind herself by her contracts to the extent of her separate property. And a personal judgment may be rendered against her which will reach any or all of her separate property not exempt from execution under the exemption laws. Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kas. 525; Wicks v. Mitchell, 9 Kas. 80; Going v. Orns, 8 Kas. 85; Monroe v. May, 9 Kas. 466; Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kas. 532; Faddis v. Woollomes, 10 Kas. 56; Larimer v. Kelly, 10 Kas. 298; Furrow v. Chapin, 13 Kas. 107; Tallman v. Jones, 13 Kas. 438. There is no reason apparent in the record for the decision of the court below, and the reason suggested by counsel (which is not apparent in the record) is not a good one.

Miner v. Pearson.

The cause will be remanded, with the order that the judgment be modified so as to correspond with this opinion.

JOHN PATTON V. ANTOINE FURTHMIER.

1. GUARDIAN Ad Litem; When Error to Appoint. Where a defendant is of age, and is under no legal disqualification, it is error to appoint a guardian ad litem, and thus oust him from the control and management of his defense. [Fowler v. Young, 19-150.]
2. ——— Where an action is commenced against a minor, and judgment rendered against him without the appointment of a guardian ad litem, and without his appearance at the trial, and thereafter, on his becoming of age, upon his petition the judgment is vacated and set aside, and the case set down for trial, it is error then to appoint a guardian ad litem and permit such guardian to take charge of and control the defense; and a judgment rendered in such trial against him by his next friend and guardian ad litem will be reversed.

Error from Miami District Court.

THE opinion contains a full statement of all facts necessary to an understanding of this case. The district court, at the September Term 1873, W. F., judge pro tem., presiding, gave judgment in favor of Furthmier, and Patton brings the case here on error.

B. F. Simpson, for plaintiff in error.

Wagstaff & Massey, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: In 1868 an action was commenced by defendant in error before a justice of the peace against plaintiff in error and his father. In that action judgment was rendered against both defendants. This judgment was appealed to the district court, and upon a trial judgment was there rendered against plaintiff in error alone. During all these proceedings no guardian ad litem was appointed for plaintiff in error, and in the district court no appearance was made by him. Subsequently, and in 1871, plaintiff in error filed his petition to have this judgment set aside, alleging that he was a minor during all those proceedings, that no guardian ad litem had been appointed, that he was absent at the time of the trial in the district court, and that he had a valid defense, etc., and that he had since become of age. On the hearing of this petition the court found all its allegations to be true, and set aside the judgment. Thereafter the original case coming on for trial, the defendant in error moved for leave to amend his bill of particulars by inserting in lieu of the name of plaintiff in error alone, his name by a guardian ad litem, which motion was sustained, a guardian ad litem appointed, who appeared, accepted the appointment, and filed his answer, and thereafter the trial, verdict and judgment were against the plaintiff in error by his next friend and guardian. To reverse this judgment this proceeding in error has been brought, and the error alleged is the appointment of a guardian ad litem, and permitting him to answer and take charge of the defense of the plaintiff in error. We think the objection well taken. When a party is of age, and under no legal disqualification, the proceedings must be against him, and he cannot be ousted from the control and management of his defense. The fact that at the commencement of these proceedings he was a minor, and that then a guardian ad litem ought to have been appointed, does not justify the appointment of one after he has become of age and is entitled to the control and management of his defense. It stood as though he had been of age at the commencement of the proceedings. He and his property are responsible for any judgment that may be rendered against him. He certainly, therefore, unless under some legal disqualification, should be allowed to take such measures as his judgment dictates are best to protect his interests; and to take this right from him, and commit it to the discretion of another, who at the best cannot have the same personal interest that he has, is doing him a manifest wrong.

Patton v. Furthmier.

For this error the judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

LEVI E. WARD V. HENRY W. BAKER.

COURTS OF OTHER STATES; Powers and Jurisdiction; Presumption. It will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, in favor of courts of general jurisdiction of sister states, that they have the authority they assume to exercise, and that the modes of procedure pursued by them, though different from those established by the laws of this state, are authorized by the laws of the states in which they act. [Butcher v. Bank of Brownsville, 2-70; Dodge v. Coffin, 15-277; Haynes v. Cowen, 15-637.]

Error from Coffey District Court.

ACTION by Baker on a judgment rendered on the 17th of August 1868 by the supreme court of Chautauqua county, state of New York, in an action then pending in said court in favor of Baker as plaintiff, and against Ward as defendant. The petition set forth a copy of said New York judgment, which shows that the same was entered by the clerk in vacation, pursuant to the following statement, which was signed and verified by Ward, to-wit:

(Title.) "I, Levi E. Ward, authorize judgment by confession, without action, to be entered against me in favor of Henry W. Baker for $434.22, for the following cause: On the 6th of March 1865, at Sinclairville, the plaintiff indorsed for my accommodation a promissory note made by me, and dated on said 6th of March 1865, payable to the order of Henry W. Baker at the Jamestown Bank, for the sum of $850, and use, and delivered the same to me. Said note having become due and owing, and not paid by me, the same was paid by the said Henry W. Baker, plaintiff, to the owner and holder thereof; and there remains unpaid from me to the said Baker on account of the payment by him of said note, and interest on said note, the sum of $434.22 aforesaid."

The transcript of said judgment is authenticated by the certificate of J. R. R., clerk, and by the further certificate of "Joseph Miller, presiding justice of the Fourth Judicial Department of the State of New York, composed of Allegany, Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, Erie, Genesee, Niagara, Orleans, and Wyoming," that J. R. R. "is the clerk of the supreme court of the county of Chautauqua, that the seal by him affixed to the foregoing certificate is the seal of said court, and that this attestation of the said record is in due form." These certificates are dated June 25th 1873. Trial at the May Term 1874 of the Coffey district court. The defendant objected to the introduction in evidence of the transcript of said New York judgment, "for that the same is irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial." Objection overruled, and transcript admitted, and defendant excepted. Judgment in favor of Baker for $593.30 and costs, and Ward brings the case here in error.

Niccolls v. Esterly.

A. M. F. Randolph, Silas Fearl, and Ruggles & Sterry, for plaintiff in error,

Stephen H. Allen, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The questions in this case have already been decided by this court in the recent cases of Dodge v. Coffin, and Haynes v. Cowen, 15 Kas. 277, 637, and no further opinion is necessary. For reasons given in the opinions in those cases, this judgment will be affirmed.

A. L. NICCOLLS V. BENJ. ESTERLY.

WITNESS; EVIDENCE; Transactions with Deceased Joint Contractor and Partner; Waiver. While a party may not under § 322 of the civil code testify in his own behalf as to any transaction had personally by him with a deceased partner or joint contractor in the absence of his surviving partner or joint contractor, when such surviving partner or joint contractor is an adverse party, yet, if he is called by such adverse party to testify as to a part of any such transaction, he may, at his own instance, and in his own behalf, testify as to the whole of such transaction.

Error from Franklin District Court.

ESTERLY brought suit against Niccolls on a note given for $240, dated October 15th 1870, signed by Geo. H. Stewart,

Opinion of the Court.

A. L. Niccolls, and S. B. McCord. Plaintiff claimed a balance of $161.07. Answer, that Stewart was the principal debtor, and that he (Stewart) had paid said note in full. Trial at the November Term 1874. Finding and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $117.75, and Niccolls brings the case here. The proceedings and alleged errors sufficiently appear in the opinion.

John W. Deford, for plaintiff in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action brought by defendant in error upon a note executed jointly by plaintiff in error, and S. B. McCord and Geo. H. Stewart. The answer of plaintiff in error alleged payment in full made by Geo. H. Stewart, principal on the note. It appeared that Stewart had died prior to the commencement of the action. Two questions are presented: First, that the finding was against the evidence; and second, that there was error in the admission of testimony.

Under the well-settled rules of this court, we cannot disturb the judgment on the first question presented. The testimony of Esterly was clear and positive, and according to it a balance still remained due. While there was contradictory testimony, still there was not such overwhelming contradiction as compelled a different finding.

The other question is thus presented by counsel in his brief:

Plaintiff Esterly then testified in his own behalf, as follows: "Question by Plaintiff's Counsel.—State for what purpose the $150 mortgage, given in evidence by the defendant, was given to you by Geo. H. Stewart?" [The defendant objected to this question, that it was incompetent by virtue of the provisions of § 322 of the civil code, and was irrelevant and immaterial, which objections the court overruled, and defendant excepted.] "Answer.—The mortgage was given to me by Mr. Stewart, as collateral and additional security to the note in suit. The deed, read in evidence by the defendant, was taken in consideration of the credit of $75 indorsed on the note sued on. It was agreed between Mr. Stewart and myself, that the deed should be given me for the $75, and the $200 consideration named in the deed was not the true consideration. [To the admission of the above evidence of Esterly, the defendant objected, that it was incompetent by virtue of § 322 of the civil code. The court overruled the objection, and defendant excepted.] "I never had any conversation with Mr. Stewart, in the presence or hearing of his wife, as to the amount to be indorsed on the note in consideration of said deed. I was not present when the deed was made, and don't know where it was made."

Nicolls v. Esterly.

That portion of the section referred to which bears upon the question provides, that a party shall not be competent to testify "to any transaction had personally by such party with a deceased partner or joint contractor in the absence of his surviving partner or joint contractor, when such surviving partner or joint contractor is an adverse party." This language seems applicable to the case at bar, and to render the testimony offered incompetent; and so we should be constrained to hold but for what had previously transpired. The burden of proof being, under the pleadings, upon the defendant, he opened the case, and called, as his first witness, the plaintiff Esterly, who testified:

"* * * After this, Mr. Stewart brought me the note now in suit here, which I accepted, and gave up the old $240 note, and released the mortgage securing it. Sometime afterward he gave me another note for $150, secured by mortgage." [Here a mortgage-deed, of which a copy is annexed, marked A, and made a part of the "case-made," was handed to the witness.] "This is the mortgage given to secure the $150 note. Afterward, Mr. Stewart and his wife conveyed the property described in this mortgage, to me." [Here a deed of conveyance, of which a copy is annexed, marked B, and made a part of the "case-made," was placed in the hands of the witness.] "This is the deed of conveyance just mentioned. Those above named are all the notes, deeds or mortgages, I ever got from Stewart."

Now the testimony of the plaintiff in his own behalf was in reference to the same transactions of which he had testified at the instance of defendant. And while, if the defendant had so chosen, none of this testimony could have been admitted, yet, having interrogated the plaintiff concerning these matters, and having obtained some of the facts concerning them, he could not thereafter object to the plaintiff's giving all the facts. By introducing part, he opens the door to all. Just as a party may not introduce his own statements in his own behalf, yet if his adversary draws out part of a conversation he may introduce the balance. The principle is general, that where a particular witness, or a certain kind of testimony, may be excluded, if the party who has the right to insist upon the exclusion waives that right, and himself calls the witness, or introduces the testimony, he cannot, after he has obtained what he desires, insist upon the exclusion, so far at least as to prevent a full development of the matters which he has partially presented.

McCarty v. Gordon.

---

These being the only matters presented by counsel, and in them appearing no error, the judgment will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

MARTIN McCARTY V. JOHN GORDON.

1. LICENSE; Sale of Liquors, Where Made; Order. Where M., doing business in Leavenworth, upon samples there shown him by G., a wholesale liquor-dealer in St. Louis, orders a bill of liquors from G., which liquors upon such order are selected from G.'s stock of goods in St. Louis and shipped to M. at Leavenworth, held, that the sale was made in St. Louis, and that it was not necessary for G. to have a license to sell liquor from the authorities of Leavenworth. [Haug v. Gillett, 14-140; Williams v. Feiniman, 14-288; Snider v. Koehler, 17-432; Gill v. Kaufman, post, 571.]
2. SALE BY SAMPLE; Place of Sale. The fact that it was expressly agreed between the parties that, in case the liquors sent did not correspond in quality or quantity with the samples shown, and the bill ordered, M. might refuse to receive them, and might return them to St. Louis at the expense of G., will not change the place of sale to Leavenworth. [Gill v. Kaufman, post, 571.]
3. PAYMENT, on General Account, Where Sales are Partly Legal and Partly Illegal. When in an action brought by G. to recover of M. for six barrels of whisky sold as above, no special findings of fact are made, but only a general finding for plaintiff, and where it appears from the testimony of defendant that one of such barrels was found upon arrival in Leavenworth to be inferior to the sample, and thereupon said defendant refused to receive it and notified the plaintiff thereof, and the latter requested the defendant not to return the barrel, but to wait until plaintiff should come to Leavenworth, and that upon the coming of the latter to Leavenworth a new contract was made by which this barrel was sold and delivered to defendant in Leavenworth for less than the original price, and where it appeared from the account that the several barrels differed in the number of gallons and the price per gallon, and there was nothing to show which one of the barrels was thus sold, and where it also appeared that the defendant had made upon the account, and subsequent to the delivery of the liquors, payments more than enough to pay for any one barrel, without specifying to what such payment should be applied, held, that a general finding in favor of the plaintiff for the entire unpaid portion of the account would not be set aside. [Shellabarger v. Binns, 18-345.]

McCarty v. Gordon.

---

Error from Leavenworth District Court.

ACTION by Gordon on an account for the sale of six barrels of whisky, amounting to $547.48, on which payments had been made and credited to amount of $229.50, leaving a balance of $317.98, for which plaintiff demanded judgment. Answer, first, a general denial; second, that said sales of liquor were made in Leavenworth, and plaintiff had no license from the city of Leavenworth authorizing the selling of liquors. Trial by the court without a jury, at the February Term 1874. Finding and judgment for plaintiff. McCarty brings the case here on error.

Taylor & Gilpatrick, for plaintiff in error.

H. Miles Moore, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The action below was for liquors sold and delivered by defendant in error to plaintiff in error. The case was tried before the court without a jury. No special findings of fact were made, and no exceptions to the introduction of testimony. So that the only question presented for our consideration is, whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment. It appears that Gordon, the plaintiff below, was a wholesale liquor-merchant in St. Louis; that the liquors were sold and delivered to McCarty. The special defense was, that plaintiff had no license to sell liquor in the state of Kansas, and that the liquors were sold in Leavenworth. On the contrary, the testimony shows simply that orders were taken in Leavenworth for the goods, which orders were filled in St. Louis, and the goods shipped therefrom to plaintiff in error. This brings the case clearly within the cases of Haug v. Gillett and Williams v. Feiniman, heretofore decided by this court; (14 Kas. 140, 288.) But it is said that there is this difference, that here the goods were sold by sample, and that it was expressly agreed that the goods were not to be received and accepted by McCarty unless they "proved identical with the order given, in quality and in quantity," and that he "reserved the right to reject the liquors, so ordered and sent, for any deficiency in quality or quantity; and in case of such deficiency to return the goods to plaintiff." We cannot see that this difference is material. The express contract was no more than the one the law would imply from a sale by sample. It is always understood that a party purchasing by sample is under no obligation to receive the goods sent unless they correspond with the sample, and are equal to the quantity ordered. The case of Brothby v. Plaisted, 51 N. H. 436, (also a liquor case,) is exactly in point, and sustains the views we have expressed.

---

Opinion of the Court.

Again, it is urged that, though these principles may be applicable to most of the account, yet as to one barrel of whisky the circumstances of the sale make a very different case, and show a sale in Leavenworth. It appears from the testimony of McCarty that one barrel of whisky that was shipped to him was inferior to the sample, and that he refused to accept it, and so notified plaintiff; that upon plaintiff's request it was not re-shipped to St. Louis, but held in Leavenworth until plaintiff came, and that plaintiff in Leavenworth made a new contract with him, and sold and delivered the whisky at twenty-five cents a gallon less than the price originally charged. Conceding, for the purposes of this case, that this shows a sale in Leavenworth, we are still constrained to sustain the judgment, and for two reasons: The account is for six barrels of whisky, each containing a different number of gallons, and at various prices per gallon. Now we are not informed by the testimony which barrel it was that was so sold, and there is nothing in the account, or the testimony, upon which we could base even a reasonable guess concerning it. Again, the defendant has paid in different sums an amount far exceeding the price of any one barrel. It does not appear that these payments were made as payments for any particular barrel, but simply on account of the entire debt. But they were so paid that no barrel was delivered without subsequent payments large enough to more than equal its price. So that if the debtor had not applied the payment to the purchase of any particular barrel, and the creditor had applied it to the one sold in Leavenworth, it would have more than paid therefor. Now in view of these facts, and inasmuch as the court made no special finding of facts, but only a general finding for plaintiff, it does not seem to us that we can hold that there is error apparent in the record.

The judgment must be affirmed.

1. AGREEMENT; Collateral Undertaking to Pay Damages. An agreement as follows: "This agreement, made and entered into this 1st of April 1870, between A. L., party of the first part, and E. F. B., and others, parties of the second part, witnesseth, that in consideration of one dollar this day paid to said parties of the second part by said first party, and in further consideration that the said party of the first part will permit the Gulf Railroad Company to build and complete the said road through the northwest quarter of section 5, township 34, range 24 east of the 6th principal meridian, without any hindrance or obstruction whatever, the said parties of the second part hereby agree to pay to the said party of the first part forthwith, on demand, all damages which the commissioners of Cherokee county may assess to be done to said land by the building of said railroad through said premises, without any appeal whatever," is a valid and binding contract. [Botkin v. Livingston, 21-232.]
2. WRITTEN INSTRUMENT; Proof of Execution; Waiver. Where an instrument is offered in evidence, and the opposite party objects to its reception, and names one ground of objection, which is overruled, and fails to object on the ground that the execution is not proven, he cannot thereafter be heard to say that the execution was not proven. THIS agreement made and entered into this 1st day of April, 1870, between Abraham Livingston, of Cherokee county, Kansas, of the first part, and E. F. Botkin, W. A. Botkin, W. B. Spencer, H. A. Judgment was rendered in favor of Livingston against all of the other parties, five of whom took proper exceptions, and bring the case here on error.

It is insisted that this agreement is void for uncertainty, because the "time for the performance of its conditions, the county in which the land is situated, and the parties to assess the damages, are not mentioned, and because the matters and things to be done are entirely too indefinite; and the power given too unlimited." The objections are not well taken. No time being specified, the law will imply a reasonable time. The land is sufficiently identified by section, township, and range, and by the line of the railroad. The assessors of the damages are expressly named. And the obligation of the parties is specific, definite, and limited.

Again, it is insisted that the instrument is void for want of consideration. On the contrary, a double consideration is expressed. First, a small money-consideration, and then a stipulation to make no hindrance or obstruction to the building of a railroad through certain lands. This does not, as counsel seems to think, refer to "violent, illegal, and forcible resistance and obstruction;" but to a legal and peaceable resistance, by appeal from the assessment of damages, and application to the courts for injunction, which often hinder if they do not finally prevent the construction of a road.

---

Opinion of the Court.

Still, again, it is insisted that the execution of the instrument is denied under oath, and that there was no proof of its execution. But the only objection made when the instrument was offered, was, that "it showed no liability on the face thereof." If a party fails to object to the introduction of an instrument on the ground that its execution is not proven, he cannot thereafter raise the question. He has waived that point. The court is under no obligation to make an objection for him. It is enough if it rules on the questions presented.

Again, it is objected that there was no proof of demand, and that the obligation is only to pay upon demand. It is doubtless true, that a promise to pay a specific sum, primarily the debt of the promisor, on demand, is treated as a promise to pay generally, and that an action may be maintained thereon without proving any prior demand. This, though it seems at variance with the expressed obligations of the parties, is the settled law. (Though see Carter v. Ring, 3 Camp. 459; Simpson v. Routh, 2 Barn. & Cress. 685; 1 Chitty's Pl. 330.) "But," as said by Mr. Justice BRONSON, "it is otherwise when a person undertakes for a collateral matter, or as surety for a third person. There, if the agreement be that he will pay on request, the request is parcel of the contract, and must be specially alleged and proved." Nelson v. Bostwick, 5 Hill, 89. Or, as said by Mr. Justice COWEN in the same case, "a bond to pay a precedent debt on demand is satisfied by the commencement of the suit itself, which is considered a sufficient demand; but in case of any agreement to pay a sum on demand or on request, not itself due independently of the contract, the terms of the contract must be pursued." This it seems to us must be treated as an undertaking for a collateral matter. In case of the condemnation of the right of way for the use of a railroad, the latter is the debtor to the land-owner. The appropriation is to its use, and it must pay for such appropriation. This obligation is to pay such debt. The parties contract to pay no other or different sum. True, it does not in terms recite a promise to pay, if the railroad company does not; and it is not, in form, the contract of principal and surety. It reads as a principal promise. But still it must be construed with reference to the extrinsic facts upon which it is based. The promisors could not initiate the condemnation proceedings. This must be done by the railroad company. And when the condemnation is had, it is the company which owes the debt. If it pays, all right of action on this undertaking is discharged. Nothing more can be recovered of these promisors. The amount is not to be paid twice. Whether this obligation was assumed at the request of the company, does not appear; and whether, if assumed without such request, and then paid, the payors would have any claim on the company, is a question not involved in this case, and therefore not necessary to determine. It is clearly however a promise to pay the debt of another, and therefore an undertaking for a collateral matter. We think therefore a demand was necessary. This was alleged, but after a careful reading of the testimony we do not find that one was proven. The only testimony bearing on this matter is thus stated: "J. R. H. being duly sworn said that he recognized the signature of W. A. B. and W. B. S., and had talked with them about the bond, and that he had talked with Jos. Benoist and R. McG., and each had paid a part of said bond, and acknowledged their execution thereof, and that he had made demand of said Benoist and McG., W. A. B., and J. C., before the commencement of this suit, for the amount due, but before this assessment was made." Now a demand before a right to make it exists, amounts to nothing; and the only demand shown is one before the assessment had determined what damages, if any, had been sustained. A demand after the assessment, and before the commencement of the action, was essential to a right of recov-

Botkin v. Livingston.

1. PERSONALTY; Where Attached to Land Without Owner's Consent. An owner of personal property cannot, against his will, be deprived of the title to such property by having it attached, without his consent; to the real estate of another, by a third person, where such personal property can be removed from such real estate without any great inconvenience, and without any substantial injury to the real estate. [Redlon v. Barker, 4-445; Eaves v. Estes, 10-314; Lanoue v. McKinnon, 19-408; O. B. Rly. Co. v. Fritz, 20-430; McDonald v. Shepherd, 25-112; Comm'r's Rush Co. v. Stubbs, 25-322.]
2. REPLEVIN; When Demand is Unnecessary. Whenever one person obtains possession of the personal property of another without the consent of the owner, and then, without any right which the law will recognize, asserts a claim to the property inconsistent with the owner's right of property and right of possession, the possession of such person will immediately become illegal and wrongful, and no demand for the property will be required to be made by the owner before he commences an action of replevin for the recovery of the same, although the possessor thereof may ever so honestly entertain the belief that his claim to the property is both legal and just. [Dickson v. Randal, 19-212; Seip v. Tilghman, 23-289; Stone v. Bird, post, 488.]

Error from Douglas District Court.

REPLEVIN for 26 bars of railroad iron, brought by Shoemaker, Miller & Co. as plaintiffs, against Wm. A. Simpson, and two others. The opinion, infra, contains a full statement of the facts and proceedings. Trial by the court, without a jury, at the June Term 1871. Findings and judgment in favor of the defendants, and plaintiffs bring the case here for review.

J. P. Usher, for plaintiffs, submitted, that as the iron was not so affixed to defendants' freehold that it could not be removed without injuring the freehold, and as it was not placed upon the premises by plaintiffs, or with their knowledge or consent, and as it had been removed by the defendants before the action was brought, the plaintiffs had not lost their right of property, nor their right to the possession. The whole law upon this subject is laid down in the American notes to the case of Elwes v. Mawes, 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 248, which establish the following propositions: 1st.—If a chattel is annexed to the freehold so as to become a part of the realty, it may be severed from the freehold and reinvested with the character of personal property by the act of the owner of the land. 2d.—The intention of the person by whom the annexation is effected is the paramount consideration; and if the intention was not to incorporate the article or structure permanently with the inheritance, but only for a temporary use, without regard to increasing the value of the land upon which the chattel is placed, and it can be removed without injury to the land, it is not a fixture, and may be removed by the owner; and if the removal is resisted he may bring trover or replevin for the article. 3d.—Although a chattel may have become a fixture, nevertheless, if it be afterward severed from the freehold it again becomes a chattel, and may be recovered in replevin by the rightful owner. 4th.—There must not only be an annexation to the freehold, but the thing annexed must be adapted to the purposes of the freehold; and unless both conditions unite, such chattel does not become incident and appurtenant to the real estate. If it is attached merely for a temporary purpose or the more complete enjoyment and use of it as a chattel, then it remains a chattel. Hellaway v. Eastwood, 6 Excheq. 295; Voorhies v. Magennis, 48 N. Y. 278; Potter v. Cromwell, 40 N. Y. 288; Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511; Fryatt v. Sullivan, 5 Hill, 116; 17 Vt. 583; 33 N. H. 66.

2. No demand was necessary, because, first, defendants' possession never was lawful, as they took by the act of a wrongdoer; and secondly, even had they been entitled to a previous demand, they have waived it by setting up title in themselves.

Nelson Cobb, W. W. Nevison, and S. A. Riggs, for defendants:

Chattels annexed to real estate become a part thereof, and the owner of the soil, by virtue of the annexation, becomes the owner of the fixture. "It is a maxim of great antiquity, that whatsoever is fixed to the realty is thereby made a part of the realty to which it adheres, and partakes of all its incidents and properties. By the mere act of annexation, a personal chattel immediately becomes part and parcel of the freehold itself." "Every case in which there is a right of severing a thing from the freehold by virtue of the law of fixtures, is considered as an exception to this general rule." Amos & Ferrard on Fixtures, 9, 10; 6 Pacific Law Reporter, 62; 1 Central Law Journal, No. 11, page 124; 15 Ind. 142; 2 Kent's Com. 362, 363.

2. A railroad is real estate, and rails of iron laid down in the construction of the road are thereby changed to real estate. Galveston Rld. Co. v. Cowdry, 11 Wallace, 464, 482; Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co., 97 Mass. 279; Strickland v. Parker, 54 Me. 263.

In Amos & Ferrard on Fixtures, page 13, it is said: "In Brooke's Abr., Tresp., it is laid down, that if a piece of timber that had been illegally taken from J. S. has been hewed, trespass does not lie against J. S. for retaking it; but if a piece of timber, which was illegally taken, have been used in building or repairing, this, although it is known to be the piece which was taken, cannot be retaken, the nature of the timber being changed, for by annexing it to the freehold it became real property." Here there is no intimation that the timber might be removed if it could be done without injury to other parts of the realty. But the doctrine is put squarely on the ground that it is realty. The same authority, on the same page, says: "Other and more recent authorities afford some singular illustrations of the principle under consideration. In Lord Raymond, p. 788, is the Shoemaker v. Simpson.

following case: "Sparks v. Spicer, (Mich., 10 Will. III;) Per HOLT, C. J. If a man be hung in chains upon my land; after the body is consumed, I shall have gibbet and chain. Said upon a motion for a new trial." These ancient authorities, we believe, have not been judicially controverted. And it is hardly credible that the gibbet and chain above mentioned, was intended as a permanent improvement to the realty on which it was erected. Nor is it credible in any case that a trespasser makes annexations with a view to improve the realty.

8. Nor did the disannexing of the iron by Simpson divest him of title thereto. There is no doctrine known to the law by which the owner loses title to real estate by converting it into personalty. If Simpson owned the iron as a part of the realty, he might use it as he chose without losing his title. Owning of the realty, which he owned in fee, he owned the iron by the same title; and such title implies an absolute right to use and dispose of it at will. 6 Gray, 536.

4. The possession by Simpson of the iron, even if he were not the owner, was in every view innocent, it having been placed upon his land in his possession without his agency. And where the possession of the defendant is innocent, a demand must always precede an action of replevin. Where one has acquired such possession without any unlawful act on his part, and holds it, honestly believing he has a right to hold it, it should be demanded of him before putting him to the cost of an action. And such we think is the great preponderance of authority. Newman v. Jenne, 47 Maine, 520; Barrett v. Warren, 8 Hill, 348; White v. Brown, 5 Lansing, 78.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action of replevin brought by Shoemaker, Miller & Co. against Wm. A. Simpson and others, for the recovery of twenty-six bars of railroad iron. The facts, stated briefly, are substantially as follows: Originally Shoemaker, Miller & Co. owned a large lot of railroad iron (including said twenty-six bars) at the state line, near Wyandotte. They intended to use said iron in building a railroad, which they had previously agreed to build for the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, (then Union Pacific Railway Company, Eastern Division,) from Junction City, westwardly. They employed said Kansas Pacific Railway Company to transport said iron from the state line westwardly to the place where they expected to use it. At the same time William A. Simpson (one of the defendants) owned certain town lots in the city of Lawrence, on the north side of the Kansas river, and between the said river and the Kansas Pacific Railway. Previously a railroad track had been constructed across said lots from the Kansas Pacific Railway to said river. But at this time, the iron which had originally been put on said track had been removed therefrom, and only the road-bed and cross-ties then remained. About this time the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, or its agents, took said twenty-six bars of iron from the iron of Shoemaker, Miller & Co. at the state line, transported them to Lawrence, and then spiked them down on the said cross-ties on the lots of said William A. Simpson. This was done by the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, or its agents, for the temporary purpose of obtaining some ninety car-loads of sand from the Kansas river, and it was intended to remove said iron as soon as the sand was obtained. This was all done without the knowledge or consent of either Shoemaker, Miller & Co., or said Simpson. The railway company had however taken other iron from Shoemaker, Miller & Co. for which they subsequently settled, but the parties never settled for this particular iron, and Shoemaker, Miller & Co. objected to the railway company taking or using their iron in any such manner. Afterward, said Simpson through his agents removed said twenty-six bars of iron from his said lots, claiming the same to be his own. Shoemaker, Miller & Co. then commenced this action, and replevied said twenty-six bars of iron from said Simpson and his agents, the other defendants. The action was tried in the court below by the court without a jury. The court made separate and special findings of fact and of law. Upon these findings the court rendered judgment for the defendants and against the plaintiffs.

 Shoemaker v. Simpson.

---

We think the court below erred. We know of no way by which an innocent person can be permanently and legally deprived of his property against his will, by the wrongs and trespasses of others, so long as it remains within the power of such innocent person to reclaim his property without committing any serious or substantial injury to the person or property of any other person.

1. Personal property: when it does, and when it does not, become part of the realty.

In the present case the plaintiffs committed no wrong; and they never consented that their property should be taken from them, or used in the manner that it was used. The railway company committed the first wrong by taking and using the property of the plaintiffs in the manner they did. They committed a wrong against the plaintiffs by taking their iron without their leave, and also committed a wrong against defendants by putting the iron on defendants' land without defendants' leave. But the defendants committed the second wrong by attempting to profit from the wrongs of the railway company, and by attempting to make the iron of innocent parties their own. And the wrong of the defendants was even greater than that of the railway company. The railway company attempted to deprive the plaintiffs of their property temporarily only. But the defendants attempted to deprive the plaintiffs of their property forever. But the wrongs of the railway company and the defendants, combined, can hardly cause the property of the plaintiffs to become the property of the defendants. The theory upon which the defendants claim that the property of the plaintiffs became their property is as follows: The said iron was spiked down to said cross-ties. It then became a part of the realty; and as the defendants owned the realty they also owned the iron. And they further claim that the subsequent removal of the iron from said cross-ties did not have the effect to change the property back from themselves to the plaintiffs. The whole question in this case therefore depends upon whether said twenty-six bars of iron became a part of the defendants' real estate as between the plaintiffs and the defendants. If it did not become real estate at all, or if it did not become real estate as between the

Opinion of the Court.

---

plaintiffs and defendants, then the plaintiffs must recover. It being real estate as between the defendants and the railway company, or as between the defendants and every other person in the world except plaintiffs, would not enable the defendants to recover. Now we suppose, that where one person or one corporation owns both the road-bed of a railroad and the iron attached to it, the iron is unquestionably a part of the realty. And where a trespasser, not owning the road-bed, attaches his own iron to the road-bed, the iron immediately becomes a part of the realty, and belongs to the owner of the road-bed. But neither of these cases is the present case. It is sometimes very difficult under the peculiar circumstances of a particular case to determine whether a particular thing is a part of the realty or not. It does not depend upon one fact alone, but generally upon several facts. And among these facts are those of attachment to the soil, the intention of the parties, and those facts which enter in to show where the equities and justice of the case are. Even the nature and extent of the attachment have much weight in determining whether a given thing is a part of the realty or not. Even a trespasser may place his personal property on the soil of another, where no connection exists, without it becoming real estate, or without it becoming the property of the owner of the soil. While on the other hand, the owner of the soil might even steal the personal property of another, and so incorporate it into his real estate that it would become a part thereof, and could never be reclaimed by the owner. And between these two extremes there are infinite degrees and modes of attachment and connection of various things with the soil. Where the connection is slight, property is often considered personal property; whereas, if the connection were close and intimate it would be considered real estate. But the other facts have a controlling influence in determining whether a given thing is a part of the realty or not. A key to the door of a house is a fixture, and a part of the realty, although at the time it may not be at or near the premises to which it belongs. While on the other hand, annual crops, and a nursery of young trees raised for sale, may not be a part of the realty, but only chattels, although most firmly and intimately attached to the very soil itself. Even dwelling-houses, or indeed anything placed by men upon the soil, if they can be again removed, either in bulk or in pieces, may under some circumstances be only chattels, although they may be ever so firmly attached to the soil. The intention of the parties is one of the strongest elements in determining questions of this kind. This is often exemplified as between landlord and tenant, but it is not confined to them. Haven v. Emery, 38 N. H. 66; Dame v. Dame, 38 N. H. 429; Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co., 97 Mass. 279; Wagner v. C. & T. Rld. Co., 22 Ohio St. 563; Hines v. Ament, 43 Mo. 298; Fuller v. Tabor, 39 Me. 519. And so have equitable considerations a strong influence in determining questions of this kind. In equity, money is often considered as land, and land as money. In Wisconsin it has been held, "that where rails have been placed along the line of an intended fence for the purpose of being laid into the fence, though not actually applied to that use, they pass by a deed of the land, there having been a manifest appropriation to the use of the land." (Conklin v. Parsons, 1 Chandler, 240, 244.) While in Missouri it has been held that where a fence was put on another's land, through a mistake of the boundary lines, the fence remained the personal property of the person who put it there. (Hines v. Ament, 43 Mo. 298. See also, Fuller v. Tabor, 39 Me. 519.) The Wisconsin and Missouri decisions are probably both correct. In the present case the connection between the iron and the real estate to which it was attached is not very close or intimate. The iron may be removed without substantial injury to either the iron or the real estate. And railroad iron, fastened down to the road-bed, as this was, does not necessarily become a part of the real estate. It may remain personal property. (Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co., 97 Mass. 179; Haven v. Emery, 38 N. H. 66.) It was never the intention of the plaintiffs that this iron should become a part of the de-defendants' real estate. Indeed, no person ever had any such intention except the defendants themselves. The plaintiffs never intended to give this iron to the defendants. They never intended to abandon it to any person who might take possession of it. They never committed any trespass or wrong toward the defendants. And it would be against justice and equity to deprive them of their property. The defendants seem to specially rely upon the case of Sparks v. Spicer, 1 Lord Raymond, 788. This case was decided one hundred and seventy-eight years ago. The entire report of the case reads as follows: "SPARKS vers. SPIORR; Mich.: 10 Will. III; Per Holt, Chief Justice. If a man be hung in chains upon my land; after the body is consumed, I shall have gibbet and chain. Said upon a motion for a new trial." Now the gibbet and chains probably belonged originally to the county, or the public; and it is probable that when a man was hung, the public never intended to reclaim the gibbet and chains, but intended to wholly abandon them to the owner of the land. This may have been so by special statute, or by special custom; and in either case it would prove nothing for the defendants. The report of the case certainly does not pretend to promulgate the doctrine, or even intimate, that the gibbet and chains would become real estate. The report does not show whether the consent of the owner of the land that the man might be hung on his land, should first be obtained, or not; but in any case, the putting of the gibbet and chains on the land would be the voluntary act of the owner of the gibbet and chains, through its agents, the public officers, and therefore such owner should abide by the consequences of its own acts, whatever they might be. A wrongdoer may lose his personal property by voluntarily attaching it to the land of another. A person not a wrongdoer, may, by his own consent, lose his personal property by attaching it or allowing it to be attached to the land of another. A person may even lose his personal property by wholly abandoning it to any person who may pick it up, although it may never be attached to any person's real estate. And an innocent person may sometimes against his consent lose his personal property by the same being incorporated into the real estate of some other person, so that it cannot be separated without great inconvenience and loss. But we do not think that any innocent person can be deprived of the title to his personal property against his consent by having it attached without his consent to the real estate of another by a third person, where such personal property can be removed without any great inconvenience, and without any substantial injury to the real estate.

---

Shoemaker v. Simpson.

---

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Shoemaker v. Simpson.

There is one other question involved in this case, presented by the defendants for our consideration. The plaintiffs did not make any demand for the property in controversy before they commenced this action; and the defendants now claim that because of such want of demand the plaintiffs cannot maintain their action. Now, a demand of the property before commencing an action of replevin is necessary only where the possession of the property by the defendant is rightful, or at least not wrongful, and where a demand is required to terminate such rightful possession, or to convert what was previously an innocent possession into a wrongful one. A demand never was necessary in a replevin action where the possession of the property by the defendant was already wrongful without a demand. And all that is necessary to make the possession of the property of another wrongful in law, is, that the possession be without the authority of the owner, and inconsistent with his rights. We think it may be laid down as a rule, that whenever one person obtains the possession of the personal property of another without the consent of the owner, and then without any right which the law will recognize, asserts a claim to the property inconsistent with the owner's right of property and right of possession, the possession of such person will immediately become illegal and wrongful, and no demand for the property will be required to be made by the owner before he commences an action of replevin for the recovery of the same, although the possessor thereof may ever so honestly entertain the belief that his claim to the property is both legal and just. An innocent owner of property is is necessary.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

not to be subjected to additional inconveniences and burdens, merely because some other person may be innocent and ignorant. The innocence and ignorance of the person in possession of another's property cannot in any manner abridge the rights of the owner thereof. The owner of property who has the present and existing right of possession is not to be postponed on account of the ignorance or innocence of some other person who claims adversely to him. Nor is such owner, if he commences an action of replevin for his property, bound to tender an issue, or to litigate a question, founded merely upon the ignorance or innocence of the party who claims adversely to him. These views we think are sustained by the great weight of authority: Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357; Ballou v. O'Brien, 20 Mich. 304; Clark v. Lewis, 35 Ill. 417; McNeil v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 155; McDonald v. Smith, 21 Ark. 422; Galvin v. Bacon, 11 Me. 28; Newell v. Newell, 34 Miss. 386; Smith v. McLean, 24 Iowa, 322. The last two cases decide that a defendant, by pleading title in himself, waives any right that he might otherwise have to claim that a previous demand should have been made for the property. Of course, replevin could not be maintained against a person who came innocently into the possession of the property, who never claimed any interest in the same, and who never disputed the owner's right thereto. But if sued he should disclaim, and not set up title and right of possession in himself, as the defendant did in this case. With respect to the question of a necessity for a demand, where the defendant has come into the possession of the property with the consent of the owner, and then wrongfully claims the property as his own, we have not expressed any opinion, and shall not do so in this case. In the present case the defendants did not come into the possession of the property with the consent of the owners; and after they got possession of it they claimed it as their own; and after this suit was commenced they set up in their answer an affirmative claim of title and right of possession in themselves; and they obtained a judgment to that effect in the court below. We think no demand was necessary in this case. Or at least we think there was no necessity for the plaintiffs, on the trial, to show by evidence that a demand was made for the property by the plaintiffs before the suit was commenced.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded with the order that the judgment be rendered on the findings of the court below in favor of the plaintiffs, and against the defendants.

1. JUDGMENT; When Error to Set Aside. In an action on a note and mortgage, when a personal judgment has been regularly and properly rendered against the defendant for the amount of the note, and also a judgment that the mortgaged property be sold to satisfy such personal judgment, it is error for the court, at the next term of the court, to set aside such personal judgment, without there being any sufficient reason therefor, although it might be proper under the circumstances of the particular case, to set aside the balance of the judgment for the purpose of allowing another defendant to come in and litigate other questions with respect to the mortgaged property. [George v. Hatton, 2-333; Hill v. Williams, 6-17; McLaughlin v. State, 17-283; Anderson v. Beebe, 22-768; Meixell v. Kirkpatrick, 25-13.]
2. HOMESTEAD; Mortgage by Husband alone, for Purchase-Money. Where a husband and wife are occupying a certain piece of land as their homestead, but without having any title thereto, and N. loans to the husband a certain sum of money with the understanding and agreement that said money should be used in purchasing said land, and that the husband shall then give his note and mortgage on the land to N. for such money, and such money is so used, and the land is purchased therewith, and then the husband executes the note and mortgage as agreed, but the wife does not join in the execution of either, nor does she give her consent thereto, and she has no interest in the land except as the wife of her husband and as an occupant with him of the land: Held, That the loaning of the money, the purchasing of the land, and the giving of the note and mortgage, are not separate and independent transactions, but are parts and portions of one single and entire transaction; that they were all done in and about the purchase of said land, and to accomplish that purpose; that the obligation to repay the money is an "obligation contracted for the purchase of said premises" within the meaning of § 9 of art. 15 of the constitution, and therefore, that there is no homestead-exemption law as against the enforcement of such obligation. FORECLOSURE of mortgage, brought by Nichols against Wm. H. Overacker and Sarah E. Overacker. The facts and proceedings in the district court are fully stated in the opinion. Trial and judgment at the August Term 1873. The plaintiff, Nichols, brings the case here for review.

Chas. J. Peckham, for plaintiff.

Stillwell & Baylies, for defendants.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by Nichols against William H. Overacker and Sarah E. Overacker on a promissory note and a real-estate mortgage executed by said William H., alone. The petition of the plaintiff undoubtedly stated a good cause of action as against said William H., but it did not state any cause of action as against the other defendant. The petition, besides being an ordinary petition on a note and mortgage as against William H. Overacker, also alleged that the consideration for said note and mortgage was money loaned by the plaintiff to said William H. for the purpose of enabling him to purchase, and to obtain title to, the land for which said mortgage was given, and that said land was so purchased with said money. But there is no allegation in the petition as against the defendant Sarah E. The prayer of the petition was for a personal judgment against said William H. for the amount of the note, and for a further judgment against both of the defendants that said land should be sold to satisfy said personal judgment. The defendant William H. filed an answer to this petition, substantially admitting the plaintiff's cause of action, but also pleading usury. The plaintiff replied to this answer by filing a general denial. The defendant Sarah E. did not at this time file any pleading. Said reply was filed March 28th 1873. The next term of court commenced April 7th 1873. At this term of court, and on May 2d, this case was tried, and judgment was rendered; but all this was done in the absence of both defendants. The judgment was rendered in accordance with the prayer of plaintiff's petition. At the next term of the court, and on August 7th 1873, said judgment was set aside. The plaintiff in error claims that the court below erred in setting aside the personal judgment rendered against William H. Overacker. We think the court did so err. No good reason has been shown why said personal judgment was set aside, and indeed we might also say that no reason of any kind has been given. We think said personal judgment should be restored. For the purposes of this case we shall assume that the balance of the judgment was properly set aside, although there might have been a grave question raised even as to this. Afterward the defendant Sarah E. Overacker filed an answer in the action. She admitted that said William H. executed said note and mortgage, as alleged in the plaintiff's petition. But she alleged that said William H. and herself were husband and wife; that when said note and mortgage were executed, and since, hitherto, her husband and herself occupied said mortgaged property as their homestead, that she never joined in the execution of said note or mortgage, or gave her consent thereto, and she denied everything in the plaintiff's petition which she did not specifically admit, and she then closed her answer with a prayer that said mortgage be declared null and void. The plaintiff replied to this answer, admitting that the defendants were husband and wife, that said land was their homestead, and denied all the other allegations of the answer, and then prayed for a judgment as prayed for in his petition. A trial was had upon these pleadings. The parties submitted the case to the court without a jury. The parties agreed upon the evidence, and submitted it to the court; but the court, upon the objections of the defendants, held that that portion of the evidence favorable to the plaintiff was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and excluded it, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff excepted. From said agreed statement, and the pleadings, it appears that the facts are substantially as follows: On August 29th 1871, the defendants were husband and wife, occupying said land as their homestead. They had no title however to the same. And as the defendant William H. desired to obtain the title, the plaintiff on that day loaned to said William H. $210, with the understanding and agreement between the parties that said money should be used to purchase said land, and that William H. should then execute said note and mortgage to the plaintiff therefor. The money was so used; the land was purchased with said money, and the note and mortgage were given accordingly. The note and mortgage were given for the sum of $300, due in one year, with interest at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum. The sum of $90 was added to the sum of $210 as interest for the first year, making the whole amount $300, as expressed in the note and mortgage. All this was done August 29th 1871. The defendant Sarah E. did not have anything to do with these transactions. And she never had any interest in said land except by virtue of being the wife of said William H., and an occupant of the land with him. He was the owner of the land, and held the title thereto after he purchased it with the plaintiff's money. The court below on this second trial rendered a personal judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant William H. Overacker for the sum of $210 and costs, but rendered no judgment for a sale of the mortgaged property. On the contrary, the court rendered judgment that said mortgage was void, and that the defendant Sarah E. Overacker recover from the plaintiff her costs.

Nichols v. Overacker.

---

We think that the judgment of the court below was erroneous. It is true, that a mortgage given by the husband alone on the homestead for any ordinary debt, is void; and no judgment for any ordinary debt can be a lien on the homestead. But we have no law which exempts premises held as a homestead from sale "for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises." The constitution expressly says that "No property shall be exempt from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon." (Const., art. 15, § 9.) Of course, an obligation for the purchase-money is no more a lien on property held as a homestead than it would be upon the property if it were not held as a homestead, but it may be just as much a lien. The matter simply stated is this: There is no homestead-exemption law as against obligations contracted for the purchase-money. As to such obligations, the rule is just the same as if no exemption-law had ever been adopted. And land held as a homestead is, with respect to such obligations, governed by just the same rules as if it were not a homestead. Now, were said note and mortgage given for the purchase-money? We think they were. The loaning of the money in this case, the purchasing of the land, and the giving of the note and mortgage, were all merely parts or portions of one single and entire transaction. The different parts were not separate and independent transactions in and of themselves. The loaning of the money was not a separate and independent transaction. It was loaned for a particular purpose had in contemplation by both of the parties. It was borrowed and loaned with the intention by both of the parties that it should be used in purchasing said land, and it was so used. The borrowing and loaning of the money was simply a part of one common or general purpose, of which the purchase of the land was another part, and the giving of the note and mortgage still another part. All were parts of a general purpose, of which the main object was the purchase of said land. All were done in and about the purchase of said land, and to accomplish that purpose. And all contributed thereto. Without the money, the land could not have been purchased. Obligations of the kind we are now considering certainly come within the spirit of the provision of the constitution above quoted. The spirit of that provision is, that no man shall enjoy property as a homestead, or an improvement thereon, as against the just claims of the person who procured it for him. This is highly equitable and just. These views we think are sustained by decisions in other states under similar homestead-exemption provisions. Austin v. Underwood, 37 Ill. 438; Magee v. Magee, 51 Ill. 500; Allen v. Hawley, 66 Ill. 168; Lassen v. Vance, 8 Cal. 271; Carr v. Caldwell, 10 Cal. 380; Hopper v. Parkinson, 5 Nevada, 233; Lane v. Polier, 46 Georgia, 580; Hawks v. Hawks, 46 Georgia, 204. In this state we have no vendor's lien created by mere operation of law. The only lien in this state, that might with any degree of propriety be called a vendor's lien, is a lien reserved to the vendor by the parties at the time of the sale. Hence, a claim for purchase-money stands no higher than any other claim, except that as against it no homestead-exemption can be interposed. As against it, there is no homestead-exemption law.

Nichols v. Overacker.

---

---

Opinion of the Court.

The personal judgment in this case against William H. Overacker, for the amount of the note and mortgage, and costs, should be restored. This judgment should be declared a lien upon the mortgaged property to the extent of $210, and interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the time the money was furnished, and necessary costs of suit, and that the land be sold to satisfy such lien. The defendant William H. did not prove usury at the time the judgment was properly rendered against him, and the defendant Sarah E. did not plead it. We do not wish to be understood as deciding any question in this case except such as are expressly decided.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

WILLIAM CROWELL, et al., v. IDA WARD.

ACTION ON GUARDIAN'S BOND; *In what Name to be Prosecuted. A person, after arriving at full age, may maintain an action in his or her own name, against his or her former guardian and the sureties on the guardian's bond, for a breach of the conditions of the bond, although the bond was executed in the name of the state of Kansas as obligee.

Error from Miami District Court.

ACTION by Ward, in her own name as plaintiff, against Crowell and two others, on a bond given by Shively as guardian, and executed by the other defendants as sureties. The defendants demurred to the petition, alleging that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue on said bond in her own name, and that the action should have been in the name of the state. The district court, at the December Term 1873, overruled the demurrer, and gave judgment for plaintiff. The defendants bring the case here on error.

B. F. Simpson, for plaintiffs in error.

W. R. Wagstaff, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by Ida Ward against W. T. Shively, William Crowell, and A. G. McKinsie, for the breach of the condition of a guardian's bond. Shively was the guardian. Crowell and McKinsie were the sureties on the bond, and Ida Ward was the minor under guardianship. She is now, and was at the commencement of this suit, of full age. The bond was executed in the name of the state of Kansas as obligee. It is now admitted by the parties that the only question involved in the case is, whether Ida Ward can maintain this action in her own name, or whether she must prosecute the same in the name of the state. At common law, all actions on penal bonds had to be prosecuted in the name of the obligee. This was not always so in equity, and it is not generally so under our statutes. In this state the rule is, that actions must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. (Civil Code, § 26.) Every assignee of a chose in action must now sue in his own name. In this state we hear nothing of "John Doe," and "Richard Roe," for in our action of ejectment the real party in interest must sue in his own name. (Code, §§ 595, 26, 11.) In an action of mandamus, or quo warranto, an individual person can no longer sue in the name of the state; but he must prosecute his action in his own name. (The State v. Jefferson Co., 11 Kas. 66; Civil Code, § 654; Laws 1871, page 277, § 2; The State v. Bartlett, 13 Kas. 102.) Even a married woman may now sue separately, and in her own name. (Gen. Stat. 563, § 3; Civil Code, § 29.) Indeed, she must do so if she is the only party in interest. And for breaches of officers' bonds, executors' bonds, and administrators' bonds, any person injured may sue in his or her own name, although such bonds are executed in the name of the state as obligee. (Gen. Stat. 468, § 183; Civil Code, § 686.) We would therefore expect to find by an examination of the laws that any person injured by a breach of a guardian's bond would have a right to sue therefor in his or her own name. Such a mode of procedure would certainly seem to come within the spirit of the laws of Kansas. The statutes do not define who shall be the obligee of a guardian's bond. They provide that "Guardians appointed to take charge of the property of the minor must give bond, with surety, to be approved by the court, in a penalty double the value of the personal estate, and of the rents and profits of the real estate of the minor, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties as such guardian, according to law." (Comp. Laws, 577, § 6; Gen. Stat. 513, § 7.) The bond in this case was executed in the name of the state as obligee. Such a bond we think is valid. But it might also be valid if it were executed in the name of the court, or the minor, or some one else, as obligee. The statute also provides with reference to guardians, that "A failure to comply with any order of the court in relation to the guardianship shall be deemed a breach of the conditions of the guardian's bond, which may accordingly be put in suit by any one

Opinion of the Court.

Crowell v. Ward.

aggrieved thereby, for which purpose the court may appoint another guardian of the minor, if necessary." (Comp. Laws, 578; § 18; Gen. Stat. 515, § 19.) If the minor has become of full age, as in this case, he or she may prosecute the action. But if the minor is still a minor, then "the court may appoint another guardian of the minor" to prosecute the action for him or her. The words, "which may accordingly be put in suit by any one aggrieved thereby," contained in the foregoing statute, must mean, in the light of all the other statutes, that the breach of the condition of the bond may "be put in suit by" and in the name of "any one aggrieved" by reason of such breach. If they do not mean this, and if such aggrieved person must sue in the name of the state, then we should have a strange and anomalous exception to our general mode of procedure. And it would be an exception to our general mode of procedure, not only without any good reason therefor, but against reason. The petition in this case alleges that the guardian failed to comply with an order of the probate court previously made requiring the guardian to pay over to the plaintiff the sum of $4,231.29, an amount previously found to be due the plaintiff on final settlement. But suppose the plaintiff has no right to sue in her own name in this action: then how can she obtain her rights? There is no provision anywhere to be found in the statutes giving her or any one else any right to use the name of the state in suing on a guardian's bond. Indeed, no private action of any kind can be prosecuted in the name of the state. Actions prosecuted in the district court in the name of the state are prosecuted by the county attorney, and they should be public actions. (Gen. Stat. 284, § 136.) Actions prosecuted in the supreme court in the name of the state are prosecuted by the attorney general. (Gen. Stat. 986, § 64.) And they also should be public actions. Public actions and private actions are intended to be kept separate, in this state. Public actions may be prosecuted in the name of the state, county, or other public corporation. But private actions must be prosecuted in the name of the person beneficially interested therein. We except the actions given by chapter 79 of the laws of 1871. These actions are quasi public, quasi private, and come under no rule. The progressive spirit of the present age is to separate public rights from private rights, public actions from private actions, and to give to every person of full age and sound mind a right to sue and be sued in his or her own name, and to make each person responsible for his or her own acts. It would be a retrograde movement toward the dark ages to require that a private person, for a private wrong, in which the state has no interest, should prosecute his or her action to enforce such right or redress such wrong in the name of the state.

at the March Term 1874. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring the case here. The errors complained of are stated in the opinion.

R. C. Clark, and Smith & Knight, for plaintiffs in error.

Horace Cooper, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: The plaintiffs in error claim that the court erred in giving the first and second instructions to the jury, and in refusing to give the third instruction asked to be given by the plaintiffs in error, defendants below. The defendant in error claims that no error is shown by the record. Indeed, the defendant in error claims that the greater part of what the plaintiffs in error file in this court as the record of the case, is no part of the record whatever. We think no error is shown, for various reasons. The supposed record does not purport to contain all the instructions given, and hence we cannot consider the one refused. (Ferguson v. Graves, 12 Kas. 39.) The first instruction given was not excepted to, and hence we cannot consider it. (Wyandotte v. Noble, 8 Kas. 444; Norton v. Foster, 12 Kas. 45.) But none of the instructions given or refused are made a part of the record of the case. "Instructions copied into a transcript, without having been made part of the record in the court below, are not part of the record in this court, and cannot be examined." (McArthur v. Mitchell, 7 Kas. 173.) Even "entering instructions upon the journal, and noting the exceptions thereto, does not make them a part of the record." (Same case.) "Instructions not embodied in a formal bill of exceptions, nor signed by the judge of the court below, as provided by statute," (code, §§ 276, 303,) nor embodied in a case made for the supreme court, as provided by statute, (code, §§ 546 to 549; Laws of 1871, p. 274,) "form no part of the record, and will not be considered by the supreme court." It is also necessary that a case made for the supreme court should be signed by the judge of the court below. (Code, § 548; Laws of 1871, p. 274.) In the present case the instructions, or a portion of them, are found in the transcript brought to this court, but they are not signed by the judge of the court below, and they are not even embodied in any paper or proceeding signed by the judge of the court below. At what time they were filed in the case, is not shown. A bill of exceptions must be filed during the term, to be of any force or value. Code, § 300; Gallaher v. Southwood, 1 Kas. 143.

it appears that the district court erred in its instructions as to the validity of the plaintiff's title to one, but committed no other error, this court must set aside the entire verdict and judgment, and remand the case for a new trial, and cannot divide the judgment, and, reversing as to the one chattel concerning which the error was made, sustain it as to the others. Error from Washington District Court.

REPLEVIN, brought by Milne, as plaintiff, and as owner of the property, to recover the possession of a span of mules and a double-wagon. Hallowell, defendant, claimed title in himself. Trial at the December Term 1874. The facts, and the instructions complained of, appear in the opinion. Verdict for plaintiff, and the defendant brings the case here on error.

J. W. Rector, for plaintiff in error.

Joseph G. Lowe, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action of replevin for the possession of a wagon and team. The testimony disclosed these facts: One George W. Reedy occupied a farm of plaintiff in error as a tenant, and had in his possession this team and wagon. He took them to Missouri and there sold them to defendant in error. And the question presented was, as to Reedy's title, and right to sell. So far as the team is concerned no point is made by counsel for plaintiff in error, further than that the verdict is against the evidence. But as to the wagon, he claims that an instruction given was erroneous. It appeared that the wagon was bought from one Snyder by Reedy; that in payment therefor Reedy gave his note, with Hallowell as security, and that this note had never been paid by Reedy. There was testimony tending to show that this was the entire extent of the transaction as between these three parties. There was also testimony tending to show that Hallowell declined to sign the note as surety until he was protected, and that by agreement between the three the title in the wagon was to pass to Hallowell and remain in him until the note was paid by Reedy. Upon these facts, at the instance of plaintiff, the court gave this instruction:

Opinion of the Court.

“If the jury find that Geo. W. Reedy purchased the wagon in question of T. B. Snyder, and that defendant Hallowell was security for said Reedy to said Snyder for the payment of the purchase-money for said wagon, then they will find for plaintiff; and it can make no difference whether said Hallowell was to own said wagon until the same was paid for or not, provided said Reedy retained possession of said wagon.”

It also, at the instance of defendant, gave this instruction:

“If the jury find from the evidence that Reedy bought said wagon, and that Hallowell went on the note as security on condition that Reedy was to deliver the wagon to him to remain Hallowell's property until Reedy paid said note, then said sale was only conditional, and the wagon remained Hallowell's property until Reedy paid said note.”

The instruction first quoted plaintiff in error insists was erroneous; and with this we are inclined to agree. By the mere signing the note as surety, of course Hallowell obtained no interest in or title to the property; and whether the note was paid or not, Reedy would have had full power to sell and pass a good title. But something more is involved here. By agreement the title was to pass to Hallowell, (at least that is the assumption in the instruction,) and so remain until the price was paid. The consideration for such agreement was ample, and the power to make it unquestioned. The transaction is the same as though Hallowell had owned the property in the first place, and delivered it to Reedy upon an agreement that the title should pass to him when (and only when) he paid the price therefor. It is no more nor less than a conditional sale. The vital question in all such cases is, the location of the title. Here it was located in Hallowell; and Reedy not having it, could not (Hallowell being guilty of no laches) transfer it to one, even though he were an innocent purchaser. We have had the question of conditional sales recently before us in the case of Sumner v. McFarlan, (15 Kas. 600,) and no further comment thereon is needed. See also Benjamin on Sales, Am. ed., § 820, and notes.

PATRICK MUGAN v. TIMOTHY HALEY.

1. PLEADING; Allegations of "Time." An omission, in a bill of particulars for work and labor, to state the time at which the work sued for was done, is not a fatal defect, or one sufficient to justify this court in reversing a judgment rendered thereon. [Backus v. Clark, 1-303.]
2. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; Newly-Discovered Evidence; Competency; Materiality; De Minimis. H. sued M. before a justice of the peace for work and labor, claiming $39. Judgment was rendered in his favor. Upon appeal by defendant to the district court, and trial there by a jury, they found in his favor for $23.55. Upon the trial he testified to working at an agreed price of $1.50 per day. The defendant conceding that such was the first agreement, testified that by a subsequent arrangement plaintiff was to receive but one dollar per day, and that 34½ days' work was under the new arrangement. Upon this plaintiff and defendant were the only witnesses. Upon the plaintiff's testimony he was entitled to a verdict for the full amount of his claim. Upon the defendant's testimony he had overpaid the plaintiff. The verdict was general, so that except for the difference between the amount of the claim, and that of the verdict, there was nothing to show whether the jury believed the testimony of the plaintiff or that of the defendant upon this matter. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, claiming that since the trial he had ascertained that there was a witness by whom he could prove that plaintiff at two different times stated that he was receiving only one dollar a day. He did not disclose how he had found out this witness, nor was there anything tending to show whether or not the situation of the witness and his relation to the matter in controversy were such as to have required the defendant, in the exercise of due diligence, to have made previous inquiry of him as to his knowledge of the facts in the case: Held, That in view of the fact that two trials had already been had, each resulting in favor of the plaintiff, that the amount to be affected by the new testimony was small, that it was at least doubtful whether the jury did not find the fact to be as it was claimed this testimony would show it to be, and that it was not clear, even if they did not so find, that a subsequent jury would with the new testimony find a different verdict, this court will not reverse the action of the district court refusing a new trial.

ACTION by Haley, to recover for work and labor. Trial and judgment for plaintiff at the October Term 1874. Mugan brings the case here on error.

A. J. Reid, for plaintiff in error.

David C. Beach, and J. Jay Buck, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action for work and labor, brought before a justice of the peace, and taken on appeal to the district court. In both courts judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, defendant in error. Three questions are raised by counsel for plaintiff in error. He insists that the bill of particulars is fatally defective, in that it gives no dates, and specifies no time during which the plaintiff was working for defendant, but simply asks judgment for a certain amount "for work and labor done and performed by plaintiff for defendant, at the special instance and request of defendant, and for which defendant promised to pay." No objection was made to the pleading in the district court. No motion to make it more definite and certain; and no objection to the introduction of evidence under it. And it was decided in the early case of Backus v. Clark, 1 Kas. 303, that even in a petition an omission of any allegation of the time when the work was done, was not a fatal defect.

A second point made is, that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. Each party was his own principal witness. Each had some slight corroboration. And a verdict either way, upon such conflicting testimony, would be conclusive upon this court. True, the plaintiff appears to have been an ignorant man, and to have kept no book account of the number of days' work, or the payments made, while the defendant presented an itemized account showing every day's work, and every payment made; and so his testimony upon the record seems clearer, more definite and precise. But the jury do not seem to have fully credited his statements, and we cannot say that they were bound to believe him, and disbelieve the plaintiff. Perhaps the very particularity of his account may have justly excited suspicion.

Mugan v. Haley.

But the principal question arises on the overruling of the motion for a new trial. One of the grounds therefor was newly-discovered evidence. Upon the trial plaintiff testified that defendant was to pay him $1.50 per day for certain work. The defendant, conceding that such was the original agreement, testified that subsequently a new arrangement was made by which the plaintiff was to work for $1 a day; and according to his account there were 84½ days' work under this new arrangement. This would make a difference of $17.25. The plaintiff claimed $39, but the jury only found in his favor $23.55. Upon this question there was no testimony other than that of the two parties. As newly-discovered evidence defendant claimed that since the trial he had ascertained that one Cassiday would testify that plaintiff had upon two different occasions told him that he was receiving only $1 a day for his work. He testifies that he did not know of this testimony before the trial. It does not appear how he obtained the knowledge of this testimony, nor whether the situation and relation of the witness to the matters in issue were such that due diligence would have compelled inquiry of the witness as of one likely to know something about the case. But conceding the matter of diligence, it does not seem to us that we are justified in reversing the ruling of the district court refusing a new trial. In the first place, it would seem probable that the jury had given credence to the testimony of defendant upon this very point. For according to the testimony of the plaintiff he was entitled to a verdict for the full amount claimed, and a trifle more. Deducting the $17.25 and allowing interest as claimed would make the amount very nearly that of the verdict. As the verdict was general, we cannot of course know that this was the matter upon which the jury found for less than the claim, but it at least seems quite probable from the testimony. The instructions are not preserved in the record, and perhaps they were so strong and direct upon this matter that the court was clear in the belief that this was the very matter upon which the jury found less than the plaintiff's claim. Again, the amount to be affected by this new testimony is small. True, it is more than one-half the amount of the verdict, but the amount in controversy is small. This is a matter which the court may properly take into consideration in determining a question like this. There is no certainty that with this testimony a subsequent jury would find differently. The expense of a new trial, both to the public and the parties, would probably exceed the amount affected by the new testimony. It is for the interests of the public, as well as of the parties, that the litigation cease. We do not decide that this testimony is strictly cumulative, and therefore not of a character to justify the granting of a new trial, but we do hold that in this case, after two trials have been had, where the amount affected by the new testimony is small, and where it is at least uncertain whether the jury did not find the fact to be as it is claimed this testimony would show it to be, and where it is not clear that, even if they did not so find, a subsequent jury would, with the new testimony, find a different verdict, this court will not say that the district court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a new trial.

Opinion of the Court.

---

The judgment will be affirmed.

JESSE GEORGE V. THE TOWNSHIP OF OXFORD.

MUNICIPAL BONDS, Issued under Special Act; Requirement of Act Must be Complied with. Where an act of the legislature was passed March 1st 1872, which took effect March 21st 1872, authorizing a certain township to issue bonds upon condition that a majority of the electors of the township should first vote for their issue at an election to be held for that purpose, and such act provides among other things that "the time and place of holding said election shall be designated by the said trustee, treasurer and clerk, (or any two of them) by giving at least thirty days' notice by posting written or printed notices thereof in three of the most public places in said township, and the election is held on April 8th, only eighteen days after said act took effect, and the bonds are issued on April 15th, only twenty-five days after the act took effect; and all this is shown on the face of the bonds, held, that both the election and the bonds are void; that sufficient time did not elapse after the act took effect and before the election was held and the bonds issued; and that no person can be an innocent purchaser of said bonds.

Original Proceedings in Mandamus.

ON the verified petition of George, showing that he was the owner and holder of two bonds (Nos. 11 and 12,) and the coupons thereof, of a series of twenty bonds of $500 each, issued by The Township of Oxford, in Sumner county, April 15th 1872—that the coupons on said bonds which became due and payable October 15th 1874 remained unpaid, and the proper officers of said Oxford township neglected and refused to levy a tax on the taxable property of their said township to pay said coupons, an alternative writ of mandamus was allowed by this court, and issued August 5th 1875, returnable August 28th, commanding the said township, and the proper officers thereof, to proceed at once to levy and collect a tax sufficient to pay in full the amount due said George upon said coupons, or to show cause before this court, why they refuse to do so. The following is a copy of one of said bonds:

Statement of the Case.

$500.

OXFORD TOWNSHIP BRIDGE BOND.
COUNTY OF SUMNER, STATE OF KANSAS.

THE Township of Oxford, in the County of Sumner, and State of Kansas, hereby promises to pay to _____, or bearer, the sum of Five Hundred Dollars on the 15th day of April 1882, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually on the 15th day of October and April of each year, upon the presentation of the coupons therefor hereto attached. Both principal and interest payable at the American Exchange National Bank in the city of New York.

This bond is one of an issue of Ten Thousand Dollars made for the purpose of aiding in the building of a bridge across the Arkansas river at the Town of Oxford, in the County of Sumner, and State of Kansas; and in pursuance of an act of the legislature of the State of Kansas, entitled "An act authorizing the Trustee, Treasurer and Clerk, (or any two of them,) of the township of Oxford, county of Sumner, and state of Kansas, to subscribe for stock in the Oxford Bridge Company to the amount of Ten Thousand Dollars to aid in the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas river, at Oxford, in said county and State, and to issue the bonds of said township in payment therefor," approved March 1st, 1872; and in pursuance of a vote of the qualified electors of said township, had at an election held therein on the 8th day of April 1872, which said election resulted in a majority of 112 in favor of issuing said bonds in a total vote of 140. The faith of said township, and the receipts for toll of said bridge, are pledged to the payment of this bond and interest.

In testimony whereof, the Township Trustee, Clerk and Treasurer of said township, have caused this bond to be issued, duly signed, attested, and countersigned, this 15th day of April, 1872.

GEORGE T. WALTON, Trustee.

Attest: JOHN H. FOLKS, Clerk.

Countersigned—T. E. CLARK, Treasurer.

The defendant showed cause, alleging that said bonds were issued without warrant or authority of law; that the act of the legislature referred to in said bond, and alternative writ of mandamus, is repugnant to the constitution, and void; that no notice was given by the trustee, treasurer and clerk of said township, to the electors thereof, of the time, place, and purpose of the election referred to in said bonds; that said bonds were issued within a less period than thirty days from the time when said act took effect; that said bonds were made and issued in payment for a subscription of $8,300 made by the trustee, treasurer, and clerk of said township to the capital stock of the "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company;" and that said "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company" was and is a private corporation, engaged in building and maintaining a toll-bridge, and running a toll-ferry across the Arkansas river, at the town of Oxford. At the hearing of plaintiff's motion for a peremptory mandamus, in October 1875, it was agreed by the parties, that the election was held and resulted as recited in the bond, but that there was no record evidence that any notice of said election had been given, and that said "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company" was and is a private corporation, as alleged in defendant's return.

Thomas George, for plaintiff:

The ultimate object to be attained, as shown by both the title and the body of the act cited in the bonds, (Laws of 1872, p. 320,) is one and the same thing, namely, the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas river at the town of Oxford in Sumner county. The act is not repugnant to § 16 of art. 2 of the constitution. Nor is said act repugnant to § 17 of art. 2 of the constitution. The act is not a "special law," within the meaning of that section; and the legislature is the judge whether the purpose could or could not be better accomplished by a general law. 1 Kas. 178; 11 Kas. 23.

But it is claimed that said act is unconstitutional for the reason that it provides for the levy and collection of taxes in aid of a private purpose. Is it possible, that a bridge built across the Arkansas river, and used by the public at will, is not a public benefit? Undoubtedly the legislature that passed this act considered that the public would be benefited by the construction of said bridge, or it never would have provided for the levy and collection of taxes for the purpose of assisting in its erection. And the result of the vote cast at the election held under and by virtue of said act shows that the people of the township sought to be taxed considered the erection of said bridge a public benefit. To make a tax-law unconstitutional on the ground last mentioned, it must be apparent at first blush that the community taxed can have no possible interest in the purpose to which their money is to be applied. (2 Coler's Law of Municipal Bonds, 312, § 17; 16 Wall. 698.) Bridges are not private affairs. They are public improvements, and it is the right and duty of the state, county or township to advance the interest and promote the welfare of the people by making or causing them to be made at the public expense. But if a state declines to make a desirable public improvement, she may permit it to be done by a company; and the fact that it is made by a private corporation does not take away its character as a public work.

Brief of Defendant.

The defendant contends that said bonds and coupons were issued without authority of law, for the reason that the provisions of the law under which they were issued, were not complied with, in this, that they did not give notice of the time and place of holding the election provided for by said law. The notice of the time and place of holding said election was not just such a notice as should have been given; yet, after the electors of said township met pursuant to the notice given, and proceeded to hold an election for the purpose mentioned in said act, and a great majority of the votes cast at said election being in favor of said "bridge and bonds," (and that all the electors of said township were present and voted at said election is not denied by the defendant,) and the bonds issued in pursuance of said election, and the bonds and coupons negotiated, and into the hands of innocent parties, it is too late to object to the irregularity in giving notice of the time and place of holding said election.

J. Wade McDonald, for defendant:

1. The special act of the legislature approved March 1st 1872, and referred to in the alternative writ, and on the face of the bonds, as the foundation for their issue, is unconstitutional, and an attempt to extend the legislative power beyond its rightful limits. The "Oxford Bridge Company" is a private corporation, operated for private gain; and the power of taxation cannot be exercised or used in aid of private purposes. Sedg. on Const. & Stat. Law, 533; Dillon Munic. Corp. § 455; Citizens' Loan Assoc. v. City of Topeka, 20 Wall. 655; National Bank v. City of Iola, 9 Kas. 689; Leavenworth Co. v. Miller, 7 Kas. 479; Clark v. Des Moines, 19 Iowa, 199.

Said act is also invalid, because the subject thereof is not stated in the "title." (Comm'rs of Sedgwick Co. v. Bailey, 18 Kas. 600.) The title permits a subscription, to the stock of a certain company, and the issue of the bonds of the township in payment for such subscription; while the purview of the act authorizes and directs the issue of the bonds of the township to the amount of ten thousand dollars, as a donation, for a certain purpose.

George v. Oxford Township.

Said act is also a special law, and is repugnant to §17 of art. 2 of the constitution.

2. There was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of said act, (ch. 158, Laws of 1872,) on the part of the trustee, treasurer and clerk of the defendant township, as was necessary in order to vest in them the authority to issue said bonds. Sec. 5 of said act provides, that before any bonds should be issued under said ch. 158 the question of issuing bonds should be submitted to the electors of the township at an election to be held for that purpose, and that thirty days' notice of such election should be given by a majority of the officers named. This was not done. The act was approved March 1st, to take effect on its publication. It was published March 21st. The election was held April 8th, and the bonds were issued April 15th. There was therefore no power to issue the bonds, and they are void. Hoppel v. Brown Township, 13 Ohio St. 311; Beckel v. Union Township, 15 Ohio St. 437.

3. The subscription, in payment for which these bonds were issued and delivered, was made to the capital stock of the "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company;" and this of itself is quite enough to invalidate the bonds. If a subscription was in any event authorized by the statute, it was authorized to be made to the "Oxford Bridge Company"—and to no other company or corporation. The "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company" is not in law the "Oxford Bridge Company," and hence the subscription was unauthorized, and the bonds issued in payment therefor are void. Lewis v. Comm'rs of Bourbon Co., 12 Kas. 186; Marsh v. Fulton Co., 10 Wall. 676.

4. The plaintiff is not an innocent purchaser without notice. The recitals on the face of the bonds are notice of their invalidity, so plain "that he who runs may read." The recitals on the face of the bonds, refer, first, to the act of the legislature, claimed as the foundation for the proceedings, which resulted in their issuance; and next to the date of the election pursuant to the result of which they purport to have been issued, and show also that the bridge, in aid of the construction of which they were issued, was a toll-bridge. Any purchaser of these bonds, or the coupons belonging to them, is undoubtedly chargeable with notice of the full text of the law under which they purport to have been issued; and if such purchaser omits to ascertain whether in fact there ever was such a law, and if so, then whether it was in force and of effect during the pendency of the proceedings resulting in the issuance of the instruments which depend upon it for their validity, he certainly so omits at his peril. 12 Kas. 186. Each and every irregularity in the issue of these bonds appears of record upon the face of the public records of said township and county. No notice of the election was given; the election was held on the eighteenth day after said statute was first published, and said bonds issued on the twenty-fifth day after said act took effect.

Opinion of the Court.

---

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: Passing over all preliminary and minor questions, the main question presented to us in this case is, whether certain bonds issued by the township of Oxford, in Sumner county, to the "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company," a private corporation of said township, are valid. Said bonds show upon their face that they were issued on April 15th 1872, "in pursuance of an act of the legislature of the state of Kansas, entitled 'An act authorizing the trustee, treasurer, and clerk (or any two of them) of the township of Oxford, county of Sumner, and state of Kansas, to subscribe for stock in the Oxford Bridge Company to the amount of ten thousand dollars, to aid in the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas river at Oxford in said county and state, and to issue the bonds of said township in payment therefor,' approved March 1st 1872;

George v. Oxford Township.

and in pursuance of a vote of the qualified electors of said township had at an election held therein on the 8th day of April 1872." Said act took effect March 21st 1872. (Laws of 1872, pp. 320, 321.) It provides for issuing "the bonds of said township to the amount of ten thousand dollars, for the purpose of aiding in the building and constructing a bridge across the Arkansas river at the town of Oxford in said county and state;" (§1.) But to whom the bonds were to be issued, is not designated in the act. And the body of the act does not anywhere provide for subscribing for stock in the "Oxford Bridge & Ferry Company," or in any other company or corporation. The title of the act mentions the "Oxford Bridge Company." Said act also provides that, "Before any of the bonds hereinbefore mentioned shall be issued, the question of issuing said bonds shall be submitted to the legal voters of said township at an election to be held for that purpose, which said election shall be conducted in all respects in conformity with the general election laws of this state. The time and place of holding said election shall be designated by the said trustee, treasurer and clerk (or any two of them) by giving at least thirty days' notice by posting written or printed notices thereof in three of the most public places in said township;" (§5.) Now the election to determine whether the bonds should be issued or not was in fact held on the 8th day of April 1872, only eighteen days after the act authorizing the issue of the bonds took effect; and this is shown upon the face of the bonds. The notices of the election were in fact given only from March 24th 1872 to the day of election, only fifteen days instead of thirty, as the act prescribes; but this is not shown on the face of the bonds. And the bonds were in fact issued on April 15th 1872, only twenty-five days after the act took effect; and this is shown on the face of the bonds. We do not mean that the time when the act took effect is shown on the face of the bonds, but it is shown on the face of the bonds under what act, and under what election, the bonds were issued, and when the election was held, and when the bonds were issued; and every one having anything to do with the bonds is required to know when the act under which they were issued took effect, and therefore what time elapsed after the act took effect till the election was held and the bonds issued. Now we think the election under which the bonds were issued was void. First, because sufficient time had not elapsed after the act took effect, and before the election was held; second, because sufficient notice of the election had not been given, and could not have been given, after the act took effect and before the election was held. And we think the bonds are void because no sufficient or valid election was held authorizing their issue. The legislature evidently intended that no bonds should be issued unless an election authorizing their issue should first be held. The legislature evidently intended that no such election should be held within less than thirty days after the act should take effect; and the legislature evidently intended that no such election should be held unless "at least thirty days' notice" thereof should first be given. The bonds were, in this case, issued in less than thirty days after the act authorizing their issue took effect. As we have already stated, the bonds do not show upon their face that the township board did not at least thirty days prior to said election call the election and give notice thereof. But even if they had done so, their action in that respect would have been void. Thirty days prior to said election there was no law in force authorizing the township board to call an election for any such purpose, or to give any notice of such an election. There is no room therefore for any innocent or bona fide purchaser of the bonds to suppose that the election was legally called, or that the proper notices thereof were legally given. And as this is an election that depends for its validity upon being legally called, and upon legal and proper notice thereof being given for at least thirty days prior to the election, and as these things were not done, the election must be held to be invalid. This is wholly unlike an election where the object of the election and the time and place for holding the same are all fixed by law. There the election is valid, although a notice required by law may not be given. In such a case the electors are presumed to know the law. They are presumed to know what is to be of the cause, where he is tried, convicted, and sentenced: Held, That the judgment of the district court will not be reversed merely because of such failure to make such order.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

9. AGE AND SIZE OF DECEASED; Evidence; Competency. When the defendant is charged with the offense of murder in the second degree, and the evidence shows that the defendant killed the deceased with a piece of fence rail, it is error for the state to show among other things that the deceased was a man about sixty years of age and about five feet and six or seven inches high. [Wise v. State, 2-419.]
10. INSTRUCTION; Testimony of Corrupt Witness; Province of Jury. It is error for a court to instruct the jury that, "If any witness has willfully testified falsely as to any material fact in the case, then the jury should disregard all the testimony of such witness." [Shellabarger v. Nafus, 15-547; Higbee v. McMillan, 18-133; A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Retford, 18-251; Garrin v. Jennerson, 20-373; Greer v. Higgins, 20-425. Contra, Campbell v. State, 3-488; Hale v. Rawallie, 8-136; State v. Horne, 9-131; Russell v. State, ex rel., 11-322; Gannon v. Stevens, 13-461.] Even where a witness has testified willfully, corruptly and falsely to a material fact in a case, still the question as to whether the jury should disregard the whole of his testimony should be left entirely to the jury themselves. But still, where such erroneous instruction was given and not excepted to, the supreme court will not consider the error.
11. INSTRUCTION; Res Gestæ; Continuous Act; Lapse of Time. Where evidence was introduced on the trial of Isaac Potter for murder in the second degree, showing that George Potter, at Brack's corner, in the presence and hearing of the defendant said "that he wanted to kill the old man, (meaning the deceased,) that that was his intention," and shortly afterward George and Isaac Potter followed the deceased, each armed with a piece of a fence rail, and Isaac did then and there "kill the old man," held, that it was not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury, "that unless they find from the evidence that in the altercation at Brack's corner George Potter was aided, counseled or abetted by Isaac Potter in what he did, they cannot take said altercation at Brack's corner, or any acts, words or conduct of George Potter into consideration in determining the guilt or innocence of defendant."
12. ——— Questions of Fact; Province of Jury. Where there is sufficient evidence introduced to prove that the defendant, who is charged with murder in the second degree, is guilty as charged, although some of this evidence is contradicted by other evidence, it is not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that, "under the evidence in this case they cannot convict the defendant of murder in the second degree." It is the province of the jury to weigh the contradictory and conflicting evidence.
13. VERDICTS—May be Corrected in Criminal Cases. Where a jury, in a case of murder in the second degree, return a verdict as follows—"We, the jury

Brief of Appellant.

---

find the defendant guilty as charged," it is not error for the court, after being informed by the jury that they intended to find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, to allow the verdict, with the consent of the jury, to be amended so as to read as follows—"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, as charged in the information."

Appeal from Leavenworth District Court.

INFORMATION for murder in the second degree, filed originally in the district court of Atchison county, where a trial and conviction were had. The defendant appealed to this court, when such conviction was reversed and a new trial ordered. (The State v. Isaac Potter, 18 Kas. 414.) After such reversal a change of venue was taken from Atchison county to Leavenworth county. The proceedings subsequent to the order changing the place of trial, and the errors complained of on this appeal, are fully stated in the opinion, infra. Another case growing out of the same homicide also came to this court on appeal from Atchison district court, and was heard and decided here at the last term. (The State v. George Potter, 15 Kas. 802.) Full statements of the facts will be found in the reports referred to—18 Kas. 414, and 15 Kas. 802. The present conviction was had at the May Term 1875 of the Leavenworth district court, and the defendant brings the case here on appeal.

Horton & Waggener, and C. F. Cochran, for appellant:

At the June Term 1874 of the district court of Atchison county an information was filed against Isaac Potter, George Potter, and Walter Boyle, charging them with murder in the second degree, in the killing of Jacob B. Keeley. A separate trial was had, and Isaac Potter convicted of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to imprisonment for the period of ten years, from which judgment and sentence he appealed to this court. The court here reversed said judgment, and granted a new trial. At the November Term 1874 a change of venue was ordered by the district court of Atchison county in a case of "The State vs. Isaac Potter," on an information for manslaughter, to the criminal court of Leavenworth county. At the May Term of the district court of Leavenworth county, (the criminal court of said county having been abolished,) Isaac Potter was tried on a copy of the information certified from Atchison county, and convicted of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years, from which judgment and sentence he now appeals to this court.

The State v. Potter.

1. The court erred in not sustaining the challenge of defendant to the entire array of jurors, as the same was not a "jury of the county or district in which the offense was alleged to have been committed." Const., Bill of Rights, § 10; Wheeler v. The State, 24 Wis. 52; Osborn v. The State, 24 Ark. 629; State v. Denton, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 539.

2. It was improper for the court to admit evidence as to the age, size and strength of the deceased. This was not necessary to prove any ingredient of the alleged crime. It could serve no purpose but to prejudice the minds of the jury against defendant. The state could with as much reason introduce evidence as to the good character of the deceased, as to introduce evidence of the deceased's want of ability to make, or to resist, an assault, before defendant's defense had been disclosed. The reasons for such rules are obvious. "Such testimony tends to distract the minds of the jury from the principal question, and should only be admitted when absolutely essential to the discovery of the truth." The State v. Potter, 13 Kas. 424.

3. The court erred in its charge, that the jury should disregard all of the evidence of any witness who had willfully testified falsely. Shellabarger v. Nafus, 15 Kas. 547.

4. The court erred in refusing to give instruction No. 23, asked for by defendant. It will be seen by an examination of the testimony, (all of which is preserved in the transcript,) that all of the witnesses agree, that in the altercation at Brack's corner, between George Potter and the deceased, (which was the inception of the difficulty that terminated so unfortunately,) that Isaac Potter, the defendant here, in no manner counseled, aided or abetted George Potter in what he did. To say the least, there is evidence tending to show that Isaac Potter took no part in that disturbance. On what hypothesis the court refused this instruction we are unable to see. That the defendant was prejudiced by such refusal of the court, there can be no question, for if Isaac Potter was bound by the acts and conduct of another, in which he took no part in any manner whatever, it was useless for him to make any defense.

Brief of Appellant.

We also insist that the court erred in refusing to give instruction No. 25, asked for by defendant. We insist that there is an entire absence of testimony tending to show the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree; and while we do not desire to reflect upon the jurors before whom he was tried, we feel perfectly justified in claiming to this court that defendant was so convicted through prejudice, and not from the testimony.

5. The motion for a new trial should have been sustained for the errors of law hereinbefore pointed out, and because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence.

6. The court erred in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment. The district court of Leavenworth county had no jurisdiction of said case. The pretended order for a change of venue from the district court of Atchison county was made in a case with the following title, viz.: "The State of Kansas v. Isaac Potter.—Information for Manslaughter." There is no pretense that the transcript discloses any order for a change of venue in any case against Isaac Potter for murder in the second degree. The words "Information for Manslaughter," are used to designate the case transferred, and form a part of the order and record; yet the court assumed to put defendant upon trial for murder in the second degree, over the objections of defendant. It may be claimed that this was a clerical mistake, or error. Is there anything in the record upon which to base such a claim? Clearly not. Is there anything in the record here presented that justifies this court or the court below in saying that there was only one case pending in the district court of Atchison county against Isaac Potter, and that that was on an information for murder in the second degree? Does the record disclose any order for a change of venue from the district court of Atchison in a case against Isaac Potter on an information for "murder in the second degree?" If the record does not disclose this jurisdictional fact affirmatively, has the court a legal right to assume it?

Did the district court of Leavenworth county, from this state of the record, have jurisdiction to try defendant for murder in the second degree? What is jurisdiction? "The power to hear and determine a cause is jurisdiction." 6 Peters, 691, 709. "To have jurisdiction in a criminal case, is to have power to inquire into the facts, to apply the law, and to declare the punishment in a regular course of judicial proceeding." 3 Metcalf, 460, 462. If a change of venue was granted in a case of "The State vs. Isaac Potter, in an information for Grand Larceny," would the court to which a change of venue was granted have authority to place him upon trial for murder, simply from the fact that other papers filed in the case showed that he had been charged with murder? The only way the district court of Leavenworth county can acquire jurisdiction of a criminal case on a change of venue from another district is from the order granting such change, exclusively and alone. The record must show jurisdiction affirmatively. Nothing can be taken by intendment.

7. The statute authorizing a change of venue was not complied with. See §§173 to 179, criminal code. The pretended order granting a change of venue, is assumed to have been made upon the affidavit of B. P. Waggener; but we submit that said affidavit did not authorize the judge of the court to enter the order that was entered. A defendant in a criminal case may have it removed to another county in the same judicial district, whenever it shall appear that the minds of the inhabitants of the county in which the cause is pending are so prejudiced against him that a fair trial cannot be had therein; (Crim. Code, §171;) but cannot have the cause removed to another district, unless the inhabitants of the entire district are so prejudiced that he cannot have a fair trial in the district; (Crim. Code, §175.) The application, if made by defendant, must be by petition, setting forth the facts upon which the application is made, which must be made to appear by affidavits to the satisfaction of the court; (Crim. Code, §177.) In this case nothing of this kind was done or attempted. The court, as shown by the affidavit, stated the case would be transferred to Leavenworth county, but no order of that kind was entered. On the 27th of January 1875, said affidavit was filed, upon which the judge on that date entered the order nunc pro tunc. The record shows that the order was entered December 12th 1874, but the order itself shows it was made upon an affidavit that was not made until January 28th 1875. Upon this statement of facts as shown by the record, we claim, that the court had no authority under the sections above referred to, on its own motion, on account of prejudice existing against defendant which would prevent his having a fair trial in Atchison county, to remove said case to Leavenworth county in the First Judicial District. We also claim, that the order granting a change of venue is an absolute nullity, and conferred no jurisdiction upon the district court of Leavenworth county. That the requirements of a statute authorizing a transfer of a case from one court to another must be strictly observed, and everything necessary to pass jurisdiction thereunto must appear in the record. (Sweepson v. Cole, 18 Fla. 335.) We further claim, that, if we concede for the sake of argument, that the court in ordering a change of venue complied with the statute authorizing such a change, we contend that the statute is in conflict with §10 of the Bill of Rights, wherein it is provided that in all prosecutions the accused is entitled to a "trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed." The only authority the court or judge has to order a change of venue on his own motion is derived from §§178, 179 of the crim. code. And the wisdom of the section of the constitution above referred to is forcibly illustrated in the case at bar. The defendant made no application to remove his trial beyond the Second Judicial District, and the record fails to show that the judge of that district was in any manner disqualified; yet of his own motion, as stated in his order, he removes the trial to another district on account of the bias and prejudice of the inhabitants of the county of Atchison. Wheeler v. The State, 24 Wis. 52; Osborn v. The State, 24 Ark. 629.

Brief of Appellant.

---

The State v. Potter.

8. But it may be claimed that the record does not show that defendant objected to such order being made, and has by reason thereof, waived his right to object after the order is made. It will be observed that the record does not show that the defendant was present when the order was made. We claim that the defendant must be present in court whenever any proceedings or acts are had or done, and this must appear affirmatively. An order of this kind cannot be made in the absence of the accused. Ex parte Bryan, 44 Ala. 402; 46 Ala. 227; Dougherty v. Commonwealth, 69 Penn. St. 290; State v. Bray, 67 N. C. 283; Stewart v. State, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 338; Mauere v. The People, 43 N. Y. 1.

The case of Wheeler v. The State, 24 Wis. 54, is certainly conclusive on the question of waiver. The second change of venue was granted on the application of the defendant herself, and the court says that "the prisoner, whose appearance was compulsory, cannot be held to have waived her rights by any steps taken by her after the removal for the purpose of defending herself as far as she might be able." We contend that a defendant in a criminal case cannot waive any of his legal and constitutional rights. 18 N. Y. 135; 8 Ohio St. 640.

9. The record shows that the defendant was in prison in Atchison county, and has never been released therefrom since his arrest; and at the time the order for a change of venue was made, he was in actual custody and confinement. The court, in the order, directs the clerk to "forthwith prepare a full transcript of this cause and forward the same to the clerk of the criminal court of Leavenworth county," but in no manner makes any order in compliance with § 186 of crim. code. The record presents the strange anomaly of the defendant being confined in jail in Atchison county on a charge of murder in the second degree (from which the record fails to show that he has been removed,) and being on trial, and personally present, in Leavenworth county, at the same time, on a change of venue on an information for manslaughter. This state of facts can only be reconciled upon the theory that the defendant is possessed of that attribute of ubiquity peculiar only to omnipotence; yet upon such a record, defendant has been convicted of murder in the second degree, and is now in the penitentiary.

10. The court erred in receiving the verdict in the manner it did, over the objections of defendant.

Aaron S. Everest, for The State:

1. The challenge made by the defendant to the array of the jury, was indefinite, and in no manner pointed out the objections thereto. The reasons assigned, "That the same did not constitute a constitutional jury, and were not a jury of the county or district where the offense is alleged to have been committed," would not in any manner convey even an impression to the court below that any irregularity existed in the transfer of said case. The records show that no such objection was made or pointed out to the court below, nor its attention called to any such question. We do not think that kind of practice will admit of the appellant now assigning as error what was never presented to or passed upon by the court below. We do not understand that the statute provides for any such ground of challenge; and if we resort to the practice at common law, we find that it recognized two principal grounds of challenge to a jury, one being to the array, by which it means the whole jury as it stands arrayed in the panel; and this challenge, as recognized by the practice in this country, was based on the partiality or default of the sheriff, coroner, or other officer that made the return, or summoned the jury, and such challenge was required to be made in writing. We do not believe that this court will adopt the action of the defendant in seeking to question the regularity of the transfer by a challenge to the array of the jury, as correct practice, founded upon pre-edent, or justice to a court who is to pass upon a question thus presented. We do not understand that our code in any manner recognizes the practice of a challenge to the array of the jury. If so, certainly not for the reasons assigned, or in the manner in which it was sought to be done by the defendant in the court below.

The State v. Potter.

2. There was no error in permitting the question to be asked as to the apparent age of the deceased. Nor did the answer of the witness prejudice any substantial right of the defendant. The testimony elicited merely went to the identification of the deceased, and we do not think that the minds of the jury were in any manner, by reason thereof, diverted from the principal question in the case. Such questions and testimony cannot possibly have the remotest connection with any matters connected with the character of the deceased, or with the principles enunciated by this court in the case of The State v. Potter, 13 Kas. 424.

3. No error was committed in refusing to give instruction No. 23, asked for by defendant, when taken in connection with the entire charge and instructions given in the case. And we also claim that upon a full examination of the charge of the court, and the instructions given to the jury, that no error was committed in refusing to give instruction No. 25, asked for by defendant.

4. Neither do we think this court is called upon by any principle of law to examine the volume of evidence to ascertain, (in a case of conflicting testimony, and especially when, as in the case at bar, the defendant himself admits, in open court, upon the trial of the action, that Jacob B. Keeley died from the effects of the fatal blow inflicted by defendant,) whether, if this court had been jurors upon the trial, they might have arrived at a different verdict. That the defendant killed Keeley on the 24th of June 1874, may be taken as established; and that such killing was shown from the facts and circumstances to constitute murder in the second degree, is no longer a subject of discussion.

5. There was no error in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment. This court having decided that the information charged the defendant with murder in the second degree, we suppose from the fact that in the order for change of venue an indorsement was made by some person of the words "Information for manslaughter," it cannot be said to be any error affecting the substantial rights of the accused. The prisoner was tried upon that information, and this court will not presume error, or that any other information than the one disclosed in the record had ever been filed against the defendant. The papers transmitted upon the change of venue clearly indicated the offense with which the accused stood charged.

6. We think that the spirit of the statute authorizing a change of venue, when viewed in the light of the attending circumstances disclosed by the record, was complied with. The record shows that it was made upon the application of defendant's counsel, and it was on their application that a change of venue was granted, and for the further reason that it was within the personal knowledge of the court that the defendant could not have a fair trial in the county of Atchison. . It was perfectly proper for the court to have the order for change of venue entered nunc pro tunc. 4 Ala. 231.

7. In the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the defendant was present during the proceedings complained of. 17 Iowa, 18; 2 G. Greene, 270; 14 Mich. 300; 19 N. Y. 549; 23 Ind. 24. But in any event, we claim that the defendant was bound by the acts of his counsel. People v. Rathburn, 21 Wend. 509; The State v. Montgomery, 2 Kas. 263. The presumption is that the court did its duty. But we do not understand that it is absolutely necessary for the defendant to have been personally present: 19 Iowa, 447; 17 Cal. 389. But can the defendant, after conviction, under our criminal procedure, raise the question (for the first time) as to the legality of the transfer by a motion in arrest of judgment? Motion in arrest of judgment in criminal cases is now governed wholly by statute, and embraces only the two points therein enumerated. Dillon v. State,

The State v. Potter.

9 Ind. 408; Guy v. State, 1 Kas. 448, 452, 453; Montgomery v. State, 3 Kas. 263, 274, 275.

8. As to the point of the competency of the defendant to waive compliance with the statutory provisions for a change of venue, we suppose it is too late to question at this day that a defendant may waive a statutory right in a criminal proceeding. And we understand that this court has decided that the defendant in a criminal case may, by his conduct, waive the right of arraignment and plea, especially in cases where it appears that the defendant was present in person and by counsel, announced himself ready for trial upon information, and submitted the question of his guilt to the determination of the jury: The State v. Cassidy, 12 Kas. 550; The State v. Lewis, 10 Kas. 157; Hensche v. State, 16 Mich. 46; 30 Ind. 266; 18 Ind. 389.

9. If we should admit for the purpose of this argument, that technically construed, the grounds upon which said change of venue was granted, did not, under the provisions of the statute, provide for such change to be made to the district court of a county outside and not within the judicial district of the court granting such change, still we contend that, as the change was procured by the defendant, at his request, and for his own benefit, and to a court having competent jurisdiction of that species of offenses of which the defendant was charged, it is not such irregularity as can be taken advantage of by the appellant for the first time after trial and verdict. We understand the principle of law well settled, that a prisoner cannot complain of proceedings beneficial to him, and in compliance to his request. Nash v. State, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 286. And we understand the law to be that an irregularity in a proceeding in a criminal case would be waived by failing to object, and submitting to a trial and verdict. Harriman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 270.

The appellant, now, after waiting and taking the chances of an acquittal or conviction, asks the court to repudiate what has been done at his own request and for his benefit. Such a practice is not to be commended, and it cannot be supposed that an experiment of this kind will be successful, unless this court should deem itself bound by some controlling and absolute rule of law, for, after taking the chances for a successful issue, the defendant should not be permitted to repudiate the proceedings, and avail himself of the chances of a more favorable result hereafter. The real question, we apprehend, for this court to decide is, does the record disclose any errors, defects, or exceptions, which affect the substantial rights of the accused? If not, this court will give judgment without regard to any technical errors, defects, or exceptions appearing in the record. Crim. Code, § 293; Laurent v. The State, 1 Kas. 413; Morton v. The State, 1 Kas. 468; Miller v. The State, 2 Kas. 174.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was a criminal action for murder in the second degree. The prosecution was instituted in Atchison county, and was removed therefrom on a change of venue to Leavenworth county, where the defendant was tried, convicted and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. The defendant now appeals to this court. This is the second time that this case has been in this court. (The State v. Potter, 13 Kas. 414.)

The first supposed error complained of by the defendant is the removal of the cause from Atchison county to Leavenworth county. The record upon this subject shows among other things the following proceedings had in the district court of Atchison county, to wit:

"Upon application of the defendant, by his counsel Horton, Waggener, and Cochran in open court, it was ordered by said court, that the defendant, Isaac Potter, be granted a change of venue for his trial herein to the criminal court of Leavenworth county, it being within the knowledge of this court that prejudice against him exists which would prevent his having a fair trial, in said county of Atchison; there also having been two trials of this same offense, convictions in both cases. The application for removal having been made by defendant in open court, thereupon the court on its own motion, and for the reason aforesaid, and within his knowledge, does grant the change of venue in said case; and the clerk will forthwith prepare a full transcript of the case and forward the same to the clerk of the criminal court of Leavenworth county."

It will be seen from the foregoing that the defendant did not only fail to make any objection to the change of venue, but that the change was actually made upon his application, and at his request. After said change of venue was granted the district court of Leavenworth county became the successor of the criminal court of Leavenworth county: (Laws of 1875, page 125;) and this cause was then taken by statute to said district court. The case was there regularly called for trial, the defendant and his counsel being present. The defendant did not then raise any question as to the jurisdiction of the court, but on the contrary moved for a continuance of the case until the next term of the court, and filed affidavits in support of his motion. The state then agreed that the affidavits should be read in evidence, on the trial, as the depositions of the alleged absent witnesses; and the case was not continued. A jury was then impaneled. The defendant then "challenged the array of jurors, and each and every one of them, for the reason that the same did not constitute a constitutional jury, and were not a jury of the county or district where the said offense was alleged to have been committed." But again the defendant failed to raise any question as to the jurisdiction of the court. The state then introduced its testimony. The defendant objected to the same, and to different parts thereof, for various reasons, among which was the following: "that the said court had no jurisdiction of the person of the said defendant, or the subject-matter of said case." This was the first time that the question of jurisdiction was raised. "But [even then] no objection was made or pointed out to said court as to any irregularity in the transfer of said case from the said county of Atchison to this [Leavenworth district] court; nor was the attention of said court called to any irregularities therein at said time," or at any other time, before the verdict was rendered, or even before a motion for a new trial was overruled. The first time that any question as to any irregularity was raised in taking said change of venue was by the defendant on a motion in arrest of judgment. It would seem that the defendant chose to experiment upon the chances for an acquittal, and if convicted then to experiment upon the chances for a new trial, before calling the attention of the court below to any irregularity in taking the change of venue. Now, if the taking of the change of venue were wholly void, then the defendant would have been safe in making such experiments; for if the taking of said change of venue had been void, then the district court of Leavenworth county would not have obtained any jurisdiction thereby to try the cause; and if the district court did not obtain any jurisdiction of the cause, then the defendant could have raised the question of jurisdiction at any time in that court, or he could even have waited and then raise the question for the first time in this court. But if the taking of said change of venue were not wholly void, but merely irregular or voidable, then it would have been necessary for the defendant to raise any question as to the irregularity in taking the change at the earliest convenient opportunity. Now we do not think that the taking of said change of venue was wholly void, although it must be confessed that it was very irregular. But the irregularity was against the state, and not against the defendant. The order changing the venue should have been set aside on the motion of the state, if the state had asked for the same to be done. It might possibly have been set aside on the motion of the defendant, if he had asked that it should be done at any time before he made his motion for a continuance, or possibly at any time before the trial of the case was actually commenced. But it would have been beyond all reason for the court to have set aside the order granting the change after a trial had been completed, and the defendant found guilty. Even a defendant in a criminal case cannot trifle with the court in that manner. He cannot procure a change of venue irregularly, and then, when he is convicted, have the conviction set aside because of the irregularity. Or at least, he cannot have this done unless the order granting the change of venue is so entirely irregular as to be wholly void. In a case like the one we are now considering, the proceedings of the court granting the change should be construed liberally, so as not to hold the granting of the change void. That the district court of Atchison county had the power, on a proper application, and proper showing, to change the venue to Leavenworth county, there can be no question. The district court can change the venue in a criminal case on the application of the defendant in either of the following cases: "First, Where the judge of the court in which the cause is pending is near of kin to the defendant by blood or marriage. Second, Where the offense charged is alleged to have been committed against the person or property of such judge, or some person near of kin to him. Third, Where the judge is in anywise interested or prejudiced, or shall have been of counsel in the cause." (Criminal Code, §173.) Fourth, "Whenever it shall appear, * * * that the inhabitants of the entire district are so prejudiced against the defendant that a fair trial cannot be had therein." (Criminal Code, §175.) And, "Whenever it shall be within the knowledge of a court or judge that facts exist which would entitle a defendant to the removal of any criminal cause, on his application, such judge or court may make an order for such removal, without any [formal] application by the party for that purpose." (Criminal Code, §178.) In the present case the defendant made the application for the removal, but it was informal, and even insufficient under the statutes. It was informal, because not in writing: (Criminal Code, §177;) and it was insufficient, because the facts upon which it was founded did not entitle the defendant to have the cause removed to another district. (Criminal Code, §§174, 175.) Atchison county is in the second judicial district, and Leavenworth county is in the first.

tion.

---

The State v. Potter.

---

4. Change from one district to another.

Opinion of the Court.

The district court of Atchison county therefore erred in granting the defendant's application. But the error was against the state, and not against the defendant. The error was in his favor. And therefore he has no right to complain. But while the order granting the change was erroneous, it was not void. It was upon a subject over which the court had complete jurisdiction, and although erroneous is nevertheless valid until set aside or reversed by competent authority. The state has never asked to have it set aside or reversed; and the defendant cannot legally ask to have it so done, as the order was made on his application.

The defendant seems to claim that he could not waive his constitutional right to be tried "by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed." This is a mistake. This right is merely a personal privilege, bestowed upon the accused, which he can waive or insist upon at his option. The constitution provides that, "In all prosecutions, the accused shall be allowed to * * * have * * * a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed." (Const., Bill of Rights, § 10.) But the constitution nowhere provides that the accused shall in all cases, and under all circumstances, be tried by such a jury, and be tried in the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; nor does it anywhere provide that the accused shall not have the power to waive his said right or privilege. Said provision of the constitution does not pretend to confer power upon any tribunal, person, or body of persons. It is really only a limitation of the power elsewhere conferred by the constitution upon the government of the state to punish crime in the manner thought best by the law-making power of the state. The right to try, to convict, and to punish persons accused of crime, is conferred by other provisions of the constitution. And except for this provision, a law might be passed to try a defendant in a criminal action, even against his will, before any jury, and in any by jury of county or district; waiver.

The State v. Potter.

part of the state. But with this provision, a defendant in a criminal action can be tried by any other jury, and out of the county and district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, only with his consent. It is too late now to suppose that any person of full age and sound mind cannot waive a merely personal right, or personal privilege, although such person may be a defendant in a criminal action, and although such right or privilege may be conferred upon him by the constitution. Of course, there are many rights conferred upon individuals from considerations of public policy which are not merely personal privileges, and which cannot be waived. But they are such rights as public policy requires to be exercised, and from the waiver of which the best interests of the public would be likely to suffer. They are conferred upon individuals for the benefit of the public, and not merely for the benefit of the individual. But such rights may be conferred by statute as well as by the constitution. We do not suppose that any one will claim that any question of public policy can enter in so as to affect the question we are now considering.

It is also claimed by the defendant, that whenever a court grants a change of venue in a criminal case the defendant must be present in the court in person; and that in the present case the defendant was not present in the court in person when said change of venue was granted. Now, it may certainly be questioned whether it is necessary for a defendant to be personally present in such a case. But even if it were necessary, we would presume in favor of the regularity and validity of the proceedings of the court below, where there is nothing to show the contrary, that the defendant was personally present in the court when said change of venue was granted. The language of the order itself, liberally interpreted, would lead to such a conclusion.

The defendant also claims that the order granting the change of venue is void, because at the head of the order, where it is entitled, it reads "Information for manslaughter," instead of "Information for murder in the second degree." There can be no question that the order was made

title of action.

Opinion of the Court.

in this case, and the mere clerical mistake of the clerk in writing "manslaughter," instead of "murder in the second degree," cannot invalidate the order.

The defendant also seems to make a point upon the ground that the district court of Atchison county did not make any order, in accordance with §186 of the criminal code, for the removal of the defendant to the jail of Leavenworth county. Now, as the defendant was personally present at the trial of his case in Leavenworth county, and has not shown that any inconvenience was caused by a want of said order, or that he ever asked for or desired any such order, we think that no substantial right of his was prejudicially affected by a want of such order. We suppose the failure to make the order was wholly immaterial.

The defendant claims that, "It was improper for the court to admit evidence as to the age, size, and strength of the deceased," and refers us to pages 25, 27 and 37 of the record. The only evidence found there, objected to, is evidence showing that the deceased was a man about sixty years of age, and about five feet and six or seven inches high. We see nothing very improper in this.

The defendant also claims that the court erred in instructing the jury that, "If any witness has willfully testified falsely as to any material fact in the case, then the jury should disregard all the testimony of such witness." This instruction was erroneous. (Shellabarger v. Nafus, 15 Kas. 547.) Even where a witness has testified willfully corruptly and falsely, to a material fact in a case, still the question as to whether the jury should disregard the whole of his testimony should be left entirely with the jury themselves. But the defendant did not object or except to the giving of said instruction; and hence he waived any error that may have been committed by the court in giving it. It may have been given for his benefit.

The defendant also claims that the court erred in refusing to give the 23d instruction asked for by the defendant, which instruction reads as follows:

"The jury are instructed that, unless they find from the evidence that in the altercation at Brack's corner George Potter was aided, counseled, or abetted by Isaac Potter in what he did, they cannot take said altercation at Brack's corner, or any acts, words, or conduct of George Potter into consideration in determining the guilt or innocence of defendant."

This instruction would have been very misleading and erroneous if given to the jury. The defendant Isaac Potter, and George Potter and Walter Boyle, were in one wagon, and the deceased, Jacob B. Keeley, and John Keeley, a son of the deceased, and Michael Brannon, were in another wagon. All were traveling in the same direction, Keeley's wagon behind. Keeley's wagon overtook Potter's wagon, and passed it. Afterward, Potter's wagon came up to Keeley's wagon at said Brack's corner. Here George Potter jumped out of Potter's wagon, picked up a stone about the size of two fists, threw it at Keeley's wagon, and hit the boy on the back of the head. Brannon testifies that then "George said he was very sorry he had hit the little boy; that he would not have hit him for ten thousand dollars; that he wanted to kill the old man; that was his intention." Mr. Keeley, the deceased, was the only "old man" belonging to either party. Now, Isaac Potter was present, and unquestionably saw and heard all that was done and said at Brack's corner. Shortly afterward the Keeley party passed on. Afterward the Potter party followed and overtook them in Allbright's lane. Just before overtaking them however, each of the Potters (Isaac and George,) and Boyle, armed themselves, each with a piece of a fence rail, and after overtaking the Keeley party, Isaac Potter, who is now the defendant, did then and there "kill the old man," Jacob B. Keeley.

The defendant also insists "that the court erred in refusing to give the 25th instruction asked for by defendant," which instruction reads as follows:

"The jury are instructed that under the evidence in this case they cannot convict the defendant of murder in the second degree."

This instruction was unquestionably rightly refused. There was unquestionably sufficient evidence to prove the offense charged, and to sustain the verdict of the jury. Some of this evidence was however contradicted by other evidence; but we have nothing to do with weighing the contradictory or conflicting evidence introduced. That was for the jury.

---

Opinion of the Court.

The defendant also claims that "the court erred in receiving the verdict in the manner it did, over the objections of defendant." The jury returned the verdict in the following form, <sup>12. Receiving and correcting verdicts.</sup> to-wit: "We the jury find the defendant guilty as charged.—R. V. FLORA, Foreman." The court suggested that the verdict was informal, and permitted it to be amended so as to read as follows: "We the jury find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, as charged in the information.—R. V. FLORA, Foreman." Before the verdict was amended the jury, through their foreman, told the court that it was their intention to find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, and after the verdict was amended it was read to the jury, "and the jurors collectively answered that it was their verdict." The court offered to have the jury polled, but neither party desired it. This was all done in the presence of both the defendant and his counsel. We perceive no error in this.

We have now considered all the questions raised by counsel, and we perceive no error in the rulings of the court below sufficient to authorize a reversal of the judgment below. The case has been very ably presented to us on both sides, and we would refer to the authorities cited in counsel's briefs, and to the arguments of counsel, for a more elaborate discussion of some of the questions involved in the case than we have been able to present.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

1. ELECTION; BOARD OF CANVASSERS, May be Compelled to Reassemble and Canvass Votes. The court may by mandamus compel a board of canvassers, after it has made one canvass, declared the result, and adjourned, to reassemble and make a correct canvass of all the returns, if it appears that upon the first canvass it improperly rejected the returns from some of the election precincts, and refused to canvass them. [Higerty v. Arnold, 13-367; State v. Comm'rs Hodgeman Co., 23-264; Morgan v. Comm'rs Pratt Co., 24-71; Rice v. Stevens, 25-302.]
2. DUTY OF CANVASSERS—Ministerial, not Judicial. Where returns are regular in form, and genuine, a canvassing board may not reject and refuse to canvass them on the ground that illegal votes had been received, or other frauds and irregularities practiced at the election. Such matters are to be inquired into by a tribunal for contesting elections, or in quo warranto proceedings. [State, ex rel., v. Comm'rs Neosho Co., 6-524.]
3. ——— Where Returns are Tampered With. Where returns are duly prepared and signed by the proper officers, but thereafter and before they reach the office of the county clerk, are tampered with by unauthorized and outside parties, and changed as to the votes cast for the respective candidates for one office, and only so changed: held, that the canvassers should receive the returns and canvass the votes cast for candidates for the other offices. Original Proceedings in Mandamus.

LEWIS filed in this court his verified petition for a mandamus against the Board of Comm'rs of Marshall Co., and J. G. McIntire, the County Clerk of said county. Said petition showed that Lewis was a legal elector of said Marshall county, and was eligible to the office of county clerk of said county; that at the general election held in said county on the 2d day of November 1875, he was a candidate for said office of county clerk, and received a majority of all the votes cast for such office, and was duly elected thereto for the regular term to commence on the second Monday of January 1876; that the defendant McIntire was also a candidate for said office; that there were and are twelve election precincts in said county, and no more; that the votes cast at said election for the plaintiff and for said McIntire, respectively, for said office, were as follows:

The petition alleged also that the poll-books and ballots were duly returned from all said precincts, to the county clerk of said county, and duly filed; that the board of county commissioners, constituting the board of county canvassers, met at the office of said county clerk on the 5th of November, for the purpose of opening and canvassing the returns made to said county clerk of the votes cast in said Marshall county for the several persons voted for for said office of county clerk, and for other offices to be filled at said election; that said county clerk met and was present with said canvassers at that time; that the returns from all the above-named election precincts were then on file, and were duly submitted to said canvassers; that said canvassers proceeded to and did open and duly canvass the votes cast for the several state, county and township officers voted for at said election at the several election precincts aforesaid, except the returns from the precinct of Waterville, and did thereupon, among other matters, determine that the plaintiff had received 856 votes, and that said McIntire had received 972 votes, for said office of county clerk, and that said McIntire had received the greatest number of votes for said office, and was duly elected thereto; that said determination was reduced to writing, and signed by said commissioners as canvassers, and attested by said county clerk, etc. The petition further alleged that Lewis was present at such canvass and determination, and asked and demanded of said canvassers that they canvass and include in their statement the votes cast at and returned from said precinct of Waterville for said office of county clerk, but said commissioners fraudulently and wrongfully refused to do so, and did not nor would they count or canvass said returns, or declare the result of the election and vote in said Waterville precinct, in any manner, or for any person, or for any purpose whatever, but on the contrary wrongfully and fraudulently rejected the poll-book and tally-list from said precinct. Upon such petition an alternative writ of mandamus was issued, commanding and requiring the defendant commissioners immediately to reassemble at the proper place as a board of canvassers, and proceed to open the returns of the election held in said precinct of Waterville, and canvass said returns and add the votes cast for said Lewis in said precinct for said office of county clerk to the votes cast for him in each and every other precinct in said county for said office, and thereupon determine that the said plaintiff received the greatest number of votes for said office, and declare him elected to said office; and commanding and requiring the defendant McIntire, as county clerk, immediately after the canvass and determination so made by said commissioners, in pursuance of such determination, to make out and deliver to said plaintiff a certificate of his election to said office—or that said defendants respectively show cause, etc. Said writ was allowed and issued November 15th, and was returnable on the 8th of December 1875.

One of the commissioners, Joseph C. Dickey, chairman of the county board, answered, that he was, on said 5th of November, and has since been and still is, ready and willing to count and canvass the vote and returns from said Waterville precinct, but was and is prevented from so doing by reason of the action of the other two commissioners of said county. The other two commissioners, Joseph Whitley and D. Q. Millett, and the defendant McIntire, as county clerk, showed cause. They filed a joint answer, verified by McIntire, in which they allege that said J. G. McIntire was eligible to said office of county clerk at said election; that he was a candidate for said office, and was voted for by electors of said county, and that “the said McIntire, as appears from the returns of the judges of the election, duly certified and returned into the office of the county clerk of said county, and canvassed by the board of county commissioners, received a majority of all the votes cast at said election;” that said commissioners met at the proper time and place, “and then proceeded to open the several election returns which had been made to the office of said county clerk,” and “did then and there declare and determine that the plaintiff had received 846 votes, and said McIntire had received 972 votes for said office,” and thereupon determined that said McIntire was duly elected, etc. Said answer admitted that the “pretended election returns from said Waterville precinct were presented to the said clerk and commissioners; but defendants deny that they fraudulently and wrongfully refused to count or canvass said returns,” etc. The answer then alleges that one H. S., and divers other persons to defendants unknown, entered into an unlawful and corrupt agreement and conspiracy to defeat the election of said J. G. McIntire, and to procure the election of said plaintiff; and that in pursuance of said agreement and conspiracy, that said H. S., J. W. S., C. B., E. C. W., and J. A. E., or some of them, with other persons to defendants unknown, on the morning of the election, and before the polls were opened in said Waterville precinct, met at the voting-place in said precinct, and placed in the ballot-box, “fraudulently and unlawfully, a large number of ballots,” and that during the day “the persons above stated kept and had in their possession and control the said ballot-box, poll-books, and tally-sheets,” etc.; that the “judges and clerks, or some of them, unlawfully and fraudulently received and deposited into said ballot-box over 100 fraudulent ballots.” The answer also alleges that “a large number of the persons who voted at said Waterville precinct were voters in other counties of the state of Kansas than that of Marshall county.” It also alleges that the “poll-books, tally-lists and ballots” sealed up by the judges of said Waterville precinct “to be delivered to the county clerk were never delivered to said county clerk at any time, but that other fraudulent and spurious poll-books, tally-lists, and ballots were returned to said county clerk by said persons, or some of them, and these are the returns which were submitted to the commissioners for canvass, and which plaintiff demanded that said commissioners should count in determining the result of said election."

No testimony was offered at the hearing in support of the defendant's answer. But the original poll-books of said Waterville precinct were produced, and given in evidence; and it appears from them, and from testimony given at the trial, that after the poll-books had been duly and properly signed, attested and sealed up by the judges of the election, and before they were delivered to the county clerk, some person had wrongfully and willfully opened them and changed the vote as cast and certified by the judges for one candidate for county commissioner, which alteration would have changed the result as to such candidate and office. No other change or alteration was made or shown. The commissioners, being advised of such alteration, rejected said poll-books entire, refusing to count any votes cast in Waterville precinct for any person for any office.

The opinion of the court was delivered by .

BREWER, J.: This is an action of mandamus, to compel a correct canvass of the votes cast in the county of Marshall for the office of county clerk. Upon the canvass that was made the canvassers rejected the returns from Waterville township, and declared one J. G. McIntire elected. If those returns had been counted, the plaintiff would have received a majority, and been declared elected. Three questions are presented: First, will the court, after a canvassing board has made one canvass, declared the result, and adjourned, compel it, by mandamus, to reassemble and make a correct canvass on the ground that at the prior canvass it had improperly omitted to canvass all the returns? Second, if the returns are regular in form, and genuine, may the canvassing board reject and refuse to canvass them, on the ground that during the election fraudulent votes were received, and other irregularities practiced by the judges and clerks of election? And third, will the fact that, after the poll-books and tally-sheets have been properly prepared and signed, and before their delivery to the township trustee and county clerk, they are tampered with and changed by outside parties, so far as respects the votes for candidates for a single office, justify the canvassing board in rejecting the entire returns, and in refusing to count the votes cast for the candidates for the other offices?

The first question must be answered in the affirmative, and the other two in the negative. We are aware that the authorities are not uniform upon the first question. See on the one hand, People v. Suprs. Green County, 12 Barb. 217; and, as partially indorsing this view, The State v. Berry, 14 Ohio St. 815; and on the other side, The State v. County Judge Marshall Co., 7 Iowa, 186; The State v. Bailey, County Judge, 7 Iowa, 390. The view taken by the Iowa court seems to be the correct one. It is the duty of the canvassers to canvass all the returns, and they as truly fail to discharge this duty by canvassing only a part, and refusing to canvass the others, as by refusing to canvass any. And it is settled by abundant authority, that where the board refuses to canvass any of the votes it may be compelled so to do by mandamus, and this though the board has adjourned sine die. Hagerty v. Arnold, 13 Kas. 367, is a case in point. The canvass is a ministerial act, and part performance is no more a discharge of the duty enjoined than no performance. And a candidate has as much right to insist upon a canvass of all the returns, as he has of any part, and may be prejudiced as much by a partial as by a total failure. The adjournment of the board does not deprive the court of the power to compel it to act, any more than the adjournment of a term of the district court would prevent this court from compelling by mandamus the signing of a bill of exceptions by the judge of that court, which had been tendered him before the adjournment. As a general rule, when a duty is at the proper time asked to be done, and improperly refused to be done, the right to compel it to be done is fixed, and is not destroyed by the lapse of the time within which in the first place the duty ought to have been done.

Lewis v. Comm'rs of Marshall Co.

As to the other two questions, it is a common error for a canvassing board to overestimate its powers. Whenever it is suggested that illegal votes have been received, or that there were other fraudulent conduct and practices at the election, it is apt to imagine that it is its duty to inquire into these alleged frauds, and decide upon the legality of the votes. But this is a mistake. Its duty is almost wholly ministerial. It is to take the returns as made to them from the different voting precincts, add them up, and declare the result. Questions of illegal voting, and fraudulent practices, are to be passed upon by another tribunal. The canvassers are to be satisfied of the genuineness of the returns, that is, that the papers presented to them are not forged and spurious; that they are returns, and are signed by the proper officers; but when so satisfied, they may not reject any returns because of informalities in them, or because of illegal and fraudulent practices in the election. The simple purpose and duty of the canvassing board is to ascertain and declare the apparent result of the voting. All other questions are to be tried before the court for contesting elections, or in quo warranto proceedings. It must be borne in mind that the change in returns in this case was made after their execution by the proper officers, and before they reached the county clerk's office, was made by unauthorized and outside parties, and not by the election officers, and did not affect the number of votes cast and returned for this plaintiff, or his opponent. Under those circumstances we think the commissioners were not justified in refusing to canvass the returns from Waterville township, so far at least as respects the officers other than the one concerning which the tampering with and changing of the votes was had.

The peremptory writ must be awarded as prayed for.

SETH H. WOOD v. H. BARTLING, Mayor, et al.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE; When Elected; When Term of Office Commences; Notice of Election. Where the time for holding elections for justices of the peace in cities of the second class is fixed by law for the first Tuesday of April of each alternate year, but the law does not prescribe whether such elections shall be held in the odd years or in the even years, and does not prescribe the years within which the terms of office of justices shall commence, but leaves the times for their election, and for the commencement of their terms of office to be ascertained from the time when the first election for justices of the peace was held in and by such city, and the law further requires that the mayor shall issue a proclamation giving at least ten days' notice of each election to be held in such city "announcing the offices to be filled" at such election; and where the mayor, previous to an election at which two justices of the peace should be elected, issues a proclamation announcing that one justice only is to be elected, and the electors receive no other sufficient notice that two justices should be elected; and the electors believe that only one justice is to be elected, and each elector votes for only one candidate for that office, held, that only one justice is elected at such election, although more than one candidate may have received votes for the office. [Hale v. Evans, 12-562; Jones v. Gridley, 20-584.]

Original Proceedings in Mandamus.

WOOD, as plaintiff, filed in this court his verified petition for a mandamus to compel the Mayor and City Councilmen of the City of Topeka, to enter of record the fact that plaintiff had been duly elected to the office of justice of the peace of said city at the city election held on the 6th of April 1875, and to cause such election of plaintiff to be duly certified by the city clerk to the county clerk of Shawnee county. The record shows that at said city election votes were cast and canvassed for the office of justice of the peace as follows: For Thomas Johnson, 655; for Seth H. Wood, 342; for Samuel S. Urmey, 324; for J. C. Chseney, 277. The mayor and council canvassed said votes on the 9th of April, and holding and deciding that one justice only was to be chosen at such election determined that Thomas Johnson had received the greatest number of votes cast for that office, and was therefore duly elected as such justice. Wood claimed that two justices were to be and were elected, and that as he had received the second highest number of votes he also was entitled to a certificate of election and to such office. An alternative writ was issued. The defendants showed cause—claiming, as they had before decided, that only one justice was to be chosen at such election, and, also, that notice for the election of one justice only had been given, and that the electors of said city respectively had voted for only one person for said office, instead of each elector voting for two persons as would have been the case if two justices were to have been elected.

---

Wood v. Bartling, Mayor.

Seth H. Wood, plaintiff, for himself.

B. J. Ricker, city attorney, and David Brier, for defendants.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: This is an action of mandamus to compel the mayor, council and city clerk of the city of Topeka to issue to the plaintiff a certificate of election showing that he was elected to the office of justice of the peace in and for the city of Topeka on the 6th of April 1875. All questions have been so arranged and disposed of by the parties that the only question for us to determine is, whether the plaintiff was duly elected to the office of justice of the peace or not. Involved in this question, however, are several others, which we shall consider as we proceed with this opinion. We think we may assume as among the established facts in this case, that there were two justices of the peace to be elected in the city of Topeka on the 6th of April 1875; that the mayor however issued his proclamation for the election of only one; that each elector voted to elect only one; that the electors did not in fact know that more than one was to be elected; that 1598 votes were cast for various candidates for that office, of which Thomas

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Johnson received 655 votes, Seth H. Wood, the plaintiff, received 342 votes, Samuel S. Urmy received 324 votes, and J. C. Chesney received 277 votes. The question is, whether upon these facts the plaintiff was duly elected to said office. The objections urged against his election are, that no notice was given or proclamation issued for the election of more than one justice of the peace, the electors believed that only one justice was to be elected, and they voted to elect only one—each elector voting for one person only for that office. Now it is true that the plaintiff knew before the election, and at the time thereof, that two justices were to be elected, and he told several other persons so, and he thinks that one or two ballots were cast at that election in the first ward with two names for the office of justice of the peace thereon; but still the agreed statement of facts shows that “the electors in casting their ballots for justice of the peace left the name of but one candidate on their tickets, and so each elector voted for but one person for said office of justice of the peace;” and the fact undoubtedly is, that the electors, with scarcely any exceptions, did not know or even suspect or imagine that more than one justice was to be elected at that election. The voters were of course mistaken in supposing that there was but one justice to be elected at that election, but the mistake was clearly one of fact, and not one of law. Justices of the peace are elected in this state each for a term of two years; but there is no law designating when their terms shall commence, or in what years they shall be elected to fill such terms, and these questions depend upon the facts of each particular case. They really depend upon what year the first election for justices of the peace within the particular city or township where the inquiry is made took place. For instance, the first election held in and for and by the city of Topeka for justices of the peace was on April 5th 1869: hence, the regular elections for that office in Topeka would be held in April in the years 1871, 1873, 1875, 1877, and so on, in every alternate year thereafter. But if the first election had been held in 1868, or in 1870, instead of in 1869 as it was held, then all the regular elections held thereafter would have been held in the even years, instead of in the odd years as now held. From this it will be perceived that the regular elections for justices of the peace may be held in the various cities and townships in the state in different years, and that no one can tell when a regular election for justices of the peace is to be held in any particular city or township, except from proof, or evidence, or knowledge of facts. This is not so with reference to state or county officers. With reference to them the law (Gen. Stat. 427, 428,) fixes absolutely and uniformly throughout the state the time for their election. And therefore, as all persons are presumed to know the law, all persons are presumed to know when a state or county officer is to be elected, although he may receive no notice thereof from any other source. (George v. Oxford Township, ante, 79.) The courts will take judicial notice when state and county officers are to be elected. (Ellis v. Reddin, 12 Kas. 306.) But courts cannot take judicial notice when justices of the peace are to be elected. Or rather, courts may take judicial notice that justices of the peace are to be elected in April of each alternate year, (in cities of the second class, and in townships also up to 1875,) for the law thus far prescribes; but the courts cannot take judicial notice as to which these alternate years are. Courts cannot judicially know, except from evidence, whether these alternate years are the odd years or the even years. And probably voters, who receive no notice, actual or constructive, cannot be required to know more in this respect than the courts. Under the laws of this state the mayor of each city of the second class, (and Topeka is such a city,) is required to issue a proclamation giving at least ten days' notice of each election, and "announcing the offices to be filled" at such election. (Laws of 1872, page 196, §17.) Now probably if such a notice were given the voters could not ignore the notice, and refrain from voting. Or, if the body of the voters were in fact to receive notice in any other manner, probably then they could not ignore it. Or, if sufficient facts should come to the knowledge of the body of the voters to put them upon inquiry, possibly they could not ignore the election. This has been so held where the election was held at the same time and place of some other election which called out substantially all the voters, and the matter was discussed among the voters, and a large proportion of them voted upon the subject. But none of the foregoing cases is this case. In this case the body of the voters had no notice from any source, and they did not participate in the election. That is, they had no notice of an election for two justices, and each elector voted for only one justice. In fact, the notices that they actually received, from whatever source they came, might almost be construed into an actual and affirmative notice that there would be an election for only one justice. The first election by the city for justices was in 1869. The regular election would therefore have been held every alternate year thereafter. But instead of an election coming only once in every two years, there has been an election for one or more justices held in Topeka every year since 1869. In 1870 one justice was elected. In 1871 two were elected. In 1872 one was elected, and one of those elected the year before held over. In 1873 one was elected, and the one elected in 1872 held over. In 1873 the mayor's proclamation was for the election of only one justice, and only one was voted for by each of the electors. In 1874 one justice was elected, and the one elected the year before held over. And the one elected in 1874 was elected and commissioned for two years, and he is now holding the office under that election. It will therefore be seen, that the whole city of Topeka has been laboring under a mistake as to the regular time for electing justices, and that the mistake originated at least as early as the spring of 1873. Now as this mistake is a mistake of fact, and not of law, we hardly think that it is sufficient to defeat the will of the voters. "The real will of the people" should generally "not be defeated by any informality." In the present case more than three-fourths of the electors voted against the plaintiff; and should less than one-fourth who voted for him override the will of the other three-fourths who voted against him? Under the circumstances of this case we think the law to be, that only one justice was elected, and that such justice was not the plaintiff. There was in fact no election for a second justice. It has been held in many cases that a mere want of notice will vitiate the election. (See authorities cited in case of George v. Oxford Township, ante, 80.) This is generally so where the law does not fix the time for holding the election. But even where the law does fix the time for holding the election, it has been held that if no notice was given as required by law, and no notice was in fact received, and the great body of the electors were misled by such want of notice, they believing that no such election was in fact to be had, and only about one-fourth of the electors voted at such election, and they voted for a single candidate, such election is void. Foster v. Scarf, 15 Ohio St. 532. See also The State v. Goetze, 22 Wis. 368, et seq. And it has several times been held, where a majority of the electors vote for an ineligible candidate, that the election is a nullity, although eligible candidates may also have been voted for. (Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145; State v. Giles, 1 Chandler, 112; State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497; Commonwealth v. Cluley, 56 Penn. St. 270; People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 451; State v. Swearingen, 12 Geo. 23; State v. Gastinel, 20 La. An. 114; Opinion of Judges, 38 Me. 597, et seq.) The person receiving the highest number of votes in such a case is not elected because of his ineligibility; and no other candidate can be considered as elected, because a majority of the electors have expressed their will and determination that he should not be elected. This reasoning fits the present case. In the present case the electors chose to elect only one justice of the peace, and a vast majority of them voted against the plaintiff and for other candidates. The candidate elected received nearly twice as many votes as the plaintiff. In our opinion there was no election for a second justice of the peace. An election should therefore be held in April of the present year (1876) to elect another justice to fill the unex-

---

Wood v. Bartling, Mayor.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Wood v. Bartling, Mayor.

to plaintiffs, and this action was against John Polster, and his surety J. G. Polster, to recover said sum. Answer, general denial. Trial, and judgment for plaintiffs, at April Term 1874. The defendants bring the case here.

John N. Ritter, for plaintiffs in error.

A. W. Rucker, and W. C. Webb, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The only question in this case is, whether the petition is sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment. No objection was made to it until after the trial and verdict. An objection thus made will be regarded with little favor, and the defect in the petition must be plain, and in a vital matter, or it will be deemed to have been waived. Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kas. 617. Unquestionably this petition is open to criticism, but still we think that it must be held sufficient. It alleges that defendants "took from one Charles Beuro the sum of $114.53, and the said Charles Beuro gave to the plaintiffs an order therefor, for value received, and that the said Charles Beuro assigned to the plaintiffs his cause of action against the defendants." It also alleges nonpayment in whole or in part. Counsel contends that the presumption of law is, that this "money was taken rightfully and legally, and by authority, in the usual routine of business." It is true, there is no allegation that the money was wrongfully taken, or even that it was the money of said Beuro. But there is another presumption, that the possessor of personal property is its owner; and this money is shown to have been in the possession of Beuro. In other words, the petition shows Beuro in possession of money, and presumptively, therefore, the owner, and rightfully in possession; that this money is taken from him by defendants, and never returned. No authority for such taking is shown. Now after the trial, without any objection to the petition, we think the court ought not to set aside the entire proceedings because of a failure to allege that the money was taken wrongfully, and without authority. But beyond this, the petition alleges that the district court, after this taking by defendants, made an order directing John Polster to pay this money into court, that said Polster did not pay the money into court as ordered, but took the order to the supreme court, and gave an undertaking signed by both the defendants, a copy of which is attached to and made a part of the petition, conditioned to pay said sum of money into court if said order should be affirmed, that said order was affirmed, and that still said money has not been paid into court. This, while perhaps not exactly showing that the original taking was unlawful, clearly shows that the defendants have no longer any right to retain the possession and are guilty of a wrong in so doing.

Challiss v. A. T. & Santa Fé Rld. Co.

We think therefore that the petition, as against any objection raised for the first time after trial and verdict, must be held sufficient, and the judgment will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

W. L. CHALLISS V. A. T. & SANTA FE RAILROAD CO.

1. TITLE OF RAILROAD COMPANY, to Lands Acquired for Right of Way. The title acquired by railroad companies in condemnation proceedings, under chapter 124 of the laws of 1864, was an absolute title in fee simple, and not a mere easement. [Under Gen. Stat., only easement; K. C. Rly. Co v. Allen, 22-285.]
2. Legislative Power; Ch. 124, Laws of 1864. Said chapter 124 is constitutional; for in the exercise of its power to devote private property to public use, the legislature is the exclusive judge of the degree and quality of interest which are proper to be taken, as well as of the necessity of taking it.
3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; Words Construed. Sec. 4 of art. 12 of the constitution is not a grant of power to appropriate private property to public use, but a restriction upon the exercise of such power; and the term therein used, "right of way," is not used as defining the quantity of estate to be appropriated, but as meaning the right of passage, irrespective of the estate or title to be acquired.

Challiss v. A. T. & Santa Fé Rld. Co.

4. CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS; Compliance with Statute; Title. Where in condemnation proceedings under said law of 1864, the full legal notice was given, the affidavit of publication filed in the county clerk's office correct, and showing due and legal publication, the subsequent proceedings all regular, except that in copying into the record in the office of register of deeds the proof of publication a clerical mistake was made by which the first publication was made to have been on the 28th instead of the 25th, and so less than thirty days before the time fixed for the meeting of the commissioners, and where the damages awarded to the owner of a certain tract were paid to and accepted by him, and the road actually constructed and in operation through his land, although only a strip of about twenty feet in width was actually occupied by the railroad company, and the balance of the hundred-foot strip condemned was used by the previous owner for the same purposes as the remainder of his tract, and where after such condemnation proceedings and payment and receipt of damages, and during such occupation by said railroad company, said owner sells and conveys the entire tract by warranty deed: Held, That the purchaser acquires no title to any portion of the one hundred-foot strip.

Error from Atchison District Court.

PRIOR to and during the year 1864 one M. Yocum owned and occupied a certain quarter-section of land in Atchison county, one J. S. Yocum a certain eighty-acre tract, and one J. W. Baldwin a certain twenty-two acre tract. Through these tracts the right of way, one hundred feet wide, was laid off and condemned for the Atchison & Pike's Peak Railroad, was paid for, and the railroad constructed, as stated in the opinion, infra. Challiss purchased said three tracts of land from the Yocums and Baldwin in 1868 and 1869, taking general warranty deeds. In March 1872, upon due proceedings being had, upon the application of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, commissioners were duly appointed for the purpose and laid off a railroad route for said A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. through Atchison county. Their report shows that they took from one of the three tracts of land above mentioned nearly three acres, from another nearly one acre, and also a strip of land from the 22-acre tract embracing forty feet. The land so taken and condemned for the A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. lies within the right of way taken and condemned in 1864 for the Atchison & Pike's Peak Railroad Company, and is a portion of the right of way of the said A. & P. P. railroad, now the Central Br. U. P. railroad. In May 1872, Challiss claimed that he had an interest in the property lying within the right of way condemned for the Atchison & Pike's Peak Railroad, and again taken and condemned for the A. T. & Santa Fe Railroad Co., and he appealed from the determination of the said commissioners to the district court of Atchison county, upon the ground that the act of the legislature of March 1st 1864, (ch. 124, laws of 1864, p. 236,) relating to the mode by which railroad companies may acquire title to lands, was unconstitutional and void, and that under said act no proceedings could vest in a railroad company the title in fee simple to the land set apart and condemned for a right of way. The theory of Challiss' appeal, is set forth in the following instruction which was asked by him in the court below, and which was refused, namely:

"The jury are instructed that in 1864 and 1865 no valid law for the condemnation of land for the use of railroads then existed; and that said railroad (meaning the Atchison & Pike's Peak Railroad Co.) could not acquire any interest in said lands by virtue of the provisions of the act of 1864, further than the license to use such lands for its own purposes, after payment of damages therefor to the satisfaction of the other owner."

Trial at the March Term 1874 of the district court. Verdict and judgment for defendant, and Challiss brings the case here on error.

W. W. Guthrie, for plaintiff in error:

It was shown on the trial that Challiss had bought these tracts of land after the C. B. U. P. railroad had been built, and under warranty deeds and covenants of full title; that said C. B. U. P. railroad only had a single track, and Challiss occupied and cultivated his field on either side, less about 20 feet occupied by the railroad. That the location of defendant's road was eight feet from and one foot lower than the former road, and compelled plaintiff to abandon a part of his field in crop season, destroyed his farm crossings, and otherwise burdened the use of his farm, producing great damages to his entire tract in addition to the loss of the land taken by defendant, in all some $1,200. Challiss as a purchaser had actual notice of claim of C. B. U. P. railroad only to the extent used, and only constructive notice as shown by records in the register's office at time of purchase. Besides this, no title as against such purchaser could be acquired under the act of 1864.

The condemnation proceedings were recorded in two sections, one filed October 9th 1864, in the county clerk's office, the other March 16th 1865; but this last was not dated till March 17th. The notice was for September 26th 1864, and the publication was recorded as made from "August 28th to September 29th," and so stood until January 26th 1874, when the first date was changed to August 25th, on the margin of the record.

The court erred in instructing the jury, "that such records, with the testimony of witnesses, constituted a valid condemnation for a 100-foot strip"—thus instructing the jury that plaintiff had acquired no title by his purchase to any part of the 100-foot strip claimed by the C. B. U. P. Rld. Co. under such condemnation proceedings. Or, in other words, that the strip of 100 feet in width through the middle of plaintiff's 700-acre tract, taken under condemnation for "right of way" for a railroad, had become in allodium the property of such railroad company, and as such, thereafter to use in any manner and for any purpose desired.

1. On the questions presented in the record, the plaintiff in error submits: That a railroad corporation has not power under any law to take for "right of way" any other interest in lands than an easement. The right to appropriate private property for public use has always been limited to the actual necessities of such use. And the necessity which in one case will authorize the taking of an entire tract for a municipal almshouse in allodial title, will not in another case authorize the taking of a narrow strip out of a large tract for a "right of way" for the road of a private corporation. Neither reason nor necessity allows such a rule, nor is it asserted in Heyward v. The Mayor, etc., 7 N. Y. 814, but is expressly denied. (Cooley Const. Lim. 583; 4 Ohio St. 808, 824; 1 Redf. Rld. Law, 250, 257, and notes; 50 Mo. 243.) But it is claimed that the C. B. U. P. Rld. Co. had the right to acquire the title to this 100-feet strip because its necessities for right of way so required, and afterward, by involuntary sale, to convey a part of it to defendant for a like use, or to an individual for any use such individual might desire; that is, that the power of eminent domain gives to a railroad corporation the right to acquire land under claim of right of way to hold and resell on speculation, and that such right is only limited by the greed of its corporators, and their ability to pay. We say the limit is the necessity for actual use, and that such use must be personal to the party taking. Private corporations do not take unusual powers by implication.

2. Any attempt at such legislation would be unconstitutional. Such an idea does not exist in the history of private corporations for the construction of road-ways; and, in this state, the appropriation of the land is not authorized—only the right of way—and thereby, by implication, the right beyond an easement is denied. Sec. 4, art. 12, constitution.

3. Nor is such a construction of § 4 of the act of 1864 authorized. All that such language implies is, “that such company shall thereafter have the full right to use such land for the purpose of a route for its railroad, or to whoever such line of railroad might be transferred.” In other words, the condemnation of the right of way for the railroad of that company or its successor, was alone authorized. And under the act of February 13th 1865, (Laws of 1865, p. 94, §§15 and 26,) the power to acquire lands is granted only to the extent of “right of way,” and “those granted to aid in construction of such roads.” This act of 1865 was the first general act authorizing incorporation of railroad companies, and it makes the difference in tenure of lands, held in Land v. Coffman; 50 Mo. 243.) And see 12 N. Y. 121; 2 Iowa, 802; 81 Me. 217; 8 Vt. 898.)

4. Challiss' land was subjected to an additional burden; and therefor he was entitled to recover damages against defendant, which had imposed such burden; and it was error to refuse his instructions asked on this point: Mifflin v. Railroad Co., 16 Penn. St. 182, 190; Blake v. Rich, 34 N. H. 282; Imlay v. Railroad Co., 26 Conn. 249, 253. Defendant was an independent organization, with its road at a different grade, which destroyed plaintiff's farm crossings, thus doing him a special damage.

5. The proceedings of the C. B. U. P. Rld. Co. were only valid when recorded in the office of register of deeds; (§ 4, acts of 1864;) and only as recorded, were notice to plaintiff as the purchaser of these lands. As recorded, "they were so irregular that no rights could be founded upon them." Akin v. Davis, 11 Kas. 580, 592; Ellis v. Pacific Rld. Co., 51 Mo. 200. There was neither 30 days' notice, nor recording within 10 days.

6. The acceptance by the plaintiff's grantors of damages under such proceedings would only operate as a license to the C. B. U. P. Rld. Co., and possession thereunder would be notice to a subsequent purchaser only to extent of actual occupancy. The rule which applies in case of possession under an unrecorded deed does not apply to possession under a mere license. And plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the strip taken, under the general rule of full compensation.

7. The publication notice as found of record in the register of deeds' office, could not be impeached as against a bona fide purchaser. Nor was the original report evidence, where the record in the register's office existed. Nor of the proceedings had in the treasurer's office on such report; at least, until its loss had been shown. The payment of damages by defendant in error to the C. B. U. P. Rld. Co. was no evidence in Challiss' action to recover damages; if this was his land, such payment would not defeat his claim; and if not his, then he failed in his case.

Horton & Waggener, for defendant in error:

The A. & P. P. Rld. Co. acquired title in fee simple for itself and its successors and assigns of the lands now claimed by Challiss under the condemnation proceedings had in accordance with ch. 124, Laws of 1864. Said act of 1864 is constitutional, and vested a fee-simple title in railroad companies which proceeded under its provisions. Laws of 1864, pp. 236, 238; 3 Paige's Ch. 45 to 76; 1 Kernan, 308; 2 id. 190; Peoria & R. I. Rld. Co. v. Birkett, 62 Ill. 332; State v. Rives, 5 Iredell, 397; Heyward v. Mayor of N. Y., 3 Selden, 314; Moore v. City of New York, 4 Sanford, 456; Nicoll v. N. Y. & Erie Rld. Co., 12 N. Y. 121. The right of the legislature, in the absence of a constitutional restriction to that effect, to condemn the fee for the purposes of a railroad, cannot be well questioned. It is not less a legislative function to determine what estate in point of duration the public exigency requires to be condemned, than to determine the existence of the public exigency which requires the condemnation of any estate. 2 Dev. & Bat. 467; Pierce on Am. Rld. Law, 161.

The quantity of estate in land taken in condemnation for acquisition of right of way which is vested in railroad companies is not uniform in all states. In Illinois some of the charters vest the fee simple in the company, while others provide that the company is merely authorized to enter upon and take possession of and use the land. In North Carolina the fee simple is vested in the company. In New Hampshire and Iowa, and some other states, railroads have only an easement in the land, and do not hold the estate in fee simple. Pierce Am. Rld. Law, 160, 161; 5 Iredell, 307; 3 Selden, 314; 4 Sandf. 456. In 1864, the legislature of the state of Kansas provided that railroad companies could acquire title in fee simple to lands, and in so doing exercised a right which cannot be at this date well questioned. In De Varaigne v. Fox, 2 Blatchf. 95, it was held that where the statute conferred the right to take the fee of land, and it was taken upon compensation accordingly, the court will not construe the grant a conditional fee or usufruct, leaving a possible reverter to the original proprietor, but will regard the entire property as vested in the grantee forever. In the present case the county commissioners understood when they were condemning the lands of the grantors of the plaintiff in 1864 and 1865, that the railroad company were to have the title in fee simple to the lands set apart for the right of way, and must necessarily in their appraisement of the value of the lands taken, and in their assessment of damages therefor, have given to said grantors full compensation for the land taken in fee; and the grantors of the plaintiff must have accepted the moneys so paid to them in 1865 and 1866, in full satisfaction of the estate in fee for the lands so set apart and appropriated for said company. And it would seem, upon general principles, that the grantors of Challiss should be estopped from claiming any interest in the land after having received compensation therefor with the understanding that they had transferred to the said railroad company fee-simple title for the same. If his grantors are estopped from claiming any interest in the land after having accepted the payment of the awards made, then of course Challiss could have no better claim or interest in said lands than his grantors. An acceptance of the amount of the value of the land, whether by taking the amount agreed upon by the parties, or fixed by the commissioners, or the court, is an acquiescence in the taking of the land as much as if the owner had conveyed the same lands to the railroad company by deed. 9 Wis. 450 to 485.

The plaintiff, at the time he obtained his deed of the Yocums and Baldwin, could have ascertained from the records in the clerk's office in Atchison county that due proceedings had been taken to have the premises mentioned in said report condemned under the law of 1864, and that a strip of land 100 feet in width had been appropriated for the right of way of the railroad company; and the records in the register's office showed that the moneys for such right of way had been deposited with the county treasurer, or paid to the owners thereof; and upon inquiry the plaintiff could have ascertained without any difficulty that his grantors had received full payment for the fee of the said 100 feet of land so appropriated for said right of way. And in addition to this record notice, the said A. & P. P. Rld. Co., now called the Central Branch U. P. Rld. Co., was running and operating its road over and upon the said right of way at the time of plaintiff's purchase. In view then of the public records of the condemnation proceedings had for said right of way, and of the possession of such right of way by said railroad at the date of the purchase under which plaintiff claims, the plaintiff had full and complete notice of the title of said railroad company to the lands which he was about to purchase. The original report of condemnation of 1864 and 1865, on file in the office of the county clerk was presented in evidence. The register's books, showing the same to have been duly recorded, with the exception that in the proof of notice of publication, the register had recorded 8 for 5, was also introduced. The fact that the register of deeds had copied August "28th," for August "25th," and that such record remained unchanged until January 26th 1874, could not have really prejudiced the rights of the plaintiff. The register's office showed that payment of the assessment damages by the railroad company, and the original papers on file in the office of the county clerk showed that notice of condemnation proceedings had been published for 30 days; and the records of the county clerk's office are as much public records as the records in the office of the register of deeds. These facts, and the further fact that the railroad company was operating its road, not only put plaintiff upon inquiry as to the title of said company, but gave him actual knowledge of the fact that 100 feet had been duly condemned through the parcels of land he was buying, and that the railroad company had paid the money for a title in fee therefor.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: In 1864-5 the A. & P. P. Railroad Co. instituted condemnation proceedings, under the law of 1864, to obtain the right of way through certain tracts of land in Atchison county. And the two principal questions in this case are as to the validity of those proceedings, and as to the quantity of title transferred by them, if valid, to the railroad company.

We will consider the latter question first. Chap. 124 of the laws of 1864, entitled "An act to enable railroad companies to acquire title to lands for railroad purposes," prescribes the steps to be pursued in these condemnation proceedings; and in § 4 it is provided that, "to such portions of such <sup>1. Title to lands acquired for right of way.</sup> road * * * title in fee simple shall vest in such company, its successors and assigns." This language is plain, and susceptible of but one construction. The clear intent of the legislature was, that the railroad companies should acquire a perfect and absolute estate, and not simply an easement. This being the clear meaning of the statute, the power of the legislature to enact it is challenged. It is said that "the right to appropriate private property to public use has always been limited to the actual necessities of such use," and that an easement is all that is necessary to secure to the railroad company the fullest possible enjoyment of the land for its purposes. All this may be true; but the question of necessity is one for the legislature and not for the courts. It is said by Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, p. 558, that <sup>2. Legislative power; constitutional law.</sup> "It seems, however, to be competent for the state to appropriate the title to the land in fee, and so to altogether exclude any use by the former owner, except that which every individual citizen is entitled to make, if in the opinion of the legislature it is needful that the fee be taken." True, in a note he says, "We think it would be difficult to demonstrate the necessity for appropriating the fee in the case of any thoroughfare; and if never needful, it ought to be held incompetent." But notwithstanding this suggestion in the note, we think the doctrine of the text fully sustained by the authorities. Moore v. City of New York, 4 Sandf. 456; Heyward v. Mayor of New York, 3 Seld. 314; Reesford v. Knight, 1 Kernan, 308; Beekman v. S. & S. Rld. Co., 3 Paige, 75; Pierce on Am. Rld. Law, 151; Hallerman v. Penn. Cent. R. R. 50 Penn. St. 425; Waterworks Co. v. Burkhart, 41 Ind. 364; Dingley v. City of Boston, 100 Mass. 544; Brooklyn Park Comm'rs v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234; Foster v. N. J. Rld. Co., 3 Zab. 227; P. & R. I. Rld. Co. v. Birkett, 62 Ill. 322; Ral. & G. Rld. Co. v. Davis, 2 Dev. & Bat. 451; State v. Rives, 5 Iredell, 297; DeVaraigne v. Fox, 2 Blatch. C. C. 95. In this last case the law is thus stated: "In the exercise of its power to devote private property to public use, the legislature are the exclusive judges of the degree and quality of interest which are proper to be taken, as well as the necessity for taking it."

Opinion of the Court.

Again, it is urged by counsel, that, as our constitution recognizes the granting of the right of way, it by implication forbids the acquisition of anything beyond the mere right of way. Sec. 4 of art. 12 of the constitution reads:
2. Right of way. Constitution construed. "No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation until full compensation," etc. We cannot give to this the force that is claimed. The right of eminent domain is not granted by this section. That right is one of the powers inherent in the state, as the representative of the public; and this section operates only as a restriction upon this power. If the term, "right of way," is here used in its restricted, technical sense, as referring simply to a mere easement, it would have the power to take the fee unrestricted in the matter of compensation. We think it should be construed, not as defining the quantity of interest to be transferred, but as meaning the right of passage through the grounds of others, irrespective of the interest or title to be acquired. We see therefore in this nothing to limit the force of the adjudications elsewhere; and whatever might be our views, if the question were a new one, we feel constrained to follow what seems to be the almost unbroken line of decisions.

We hold therefore that title in fee simple passed by the condemnation proceedings, if those proceedings were in conformity to the statute. It may be remarked that the legislature of 1868 changed the law as to the quantity of estate passing by such proceedings to a railroad company, (Gen. Stat. 213, §84,) where it is provided that "the perpetual use of such lands shall vest in such company, its successors and assigns for the use of the railroad."

Were the proceedings in this case in conformity to the statute? It appears that the application of the railroad company was made on the 24th of August, 1864; that the 26th of September following was the day fixed by the commissioners for the commencement of the work of laying off the route; that publication of notice of such time was duly made in the "Champion," the first publication being on the 25th of August, and more than thirty days before the appointed day; that the commissioners met at the appointed time and commenced their work; that after completing it they filed in the county clerk's office a written report thereof; that a copy thereof was duly filed in the county treasurer's office, the damages paid, and the report thereafter filed and recorded in the office of the register of deeds. It also appears that the then owners of the tracts through which the right of way was condemned accepted the appraisement and received the money, that the road was constructed and in operation through these tracts in 1866; and that in 1868 and 1869 the plaintiff in error purchased the tracts of the then owners, receiving warranty deeds therefor. At the time of this purchase the hundred-foot strip was not all actually occupied by the railroad company, but only a strip of about twenty feet in width. The balance was and had been cultivated by the prior owners. The affidavit of publication of notice recited that the "notice was published in said newspaper for five consecutive weeks, the first publication being on the 25th day of August 1864, and the last on the 29th day of September 1864." In recording this affidavit by the register of deeds a clerical mistake was made, the figure 8 being substituted for 5, so that it stated that the first publication was on the 28th, and less than thirty days before the appointed time for the meeting of the commissioners. Now it is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error, that the occupation by the railroad company, at the time of the purchase by plaintiff in error being only of a twenty-foot strip was no notice of any claim to the balance of the one hundred-foot strip, and that the purchaser was chargeable with notice of the condemnation proceedings only as they appeared upon the records of the register of deeds' office; and that as they there appeared, they showed proceedings invalid, in that no legal notice appeared to have been given of the time of the commissioners' meeting. In this we think counsel is mistaken. The full legal notice was actually given; the proceedings actually had were regular. By those proceedings the title of the then owners was then wholly divested. This was divested, not by a voluntary conveyance, but by proceedings in invitum, to compel a transfer, exactly as by a sheriff's sale. Now as to such proceedings a party may not trust entirely to the records of the office of register of deeds, but must take notice of whatever appears upon the records of every officer or tribunal having jurisdiction of such proceedings. Again, there was sufficient in the record in the register of deeds' office to put the plaintiff in error upon inquiry. The report of the commissioners recited that notice had been published for thirty days. The day of the last publication was given as September 29th. Running back five weeks would bring it to August 25th, and not August 28th. This record was but a copy of a copy. Proof of publication was not by the law, in terms at least, required. (Sec. 6 of the act, Laws of 1864, p. 237.) The only object of publication is notice to the land-owners. If with a defective publication, or without any publication, they had appeared to the proceedings, and accepted the award, neither they nor their grantees would be heard to say that the notice was defective, or omitted. We think therefore, as against this plaintiff the court properly ruled that the proceedings were regular and valid. Some other questions are raised by counsel, but in the view we have taken of these two principal matters, it seems unnecessary to consider them.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This is a proceeding in error to review the action of the district court in granting a new trial. In such a case it is settled, that the "supreme court will require a stronger case for interference than when one has been refused." Field v. Kinnear, 5 Kas. 233. The reasons for this are fully given in the opinion in that case, and need not be repeated. It seems to us that they are controlling in this case, and compel an affirmance. The facts are these: The bank was a purchaser before due of a negotiable promissory note executed by Bedell. The claim was, that the note was obtained from Bedell by fraud and without consideration, and that the bank had knowledge of this, or notice sufficient to put it upon inquiry. The verdict of the jury was in favor of Bedell. The new trial was granted for the reason, as stated by the court, that it appeared to it that the jury might have been misled by one of the instructions. That instruction was as follows:

"And the plaintiff being a banking institution, and accustomed to buy and sell and deal in commercial paper, was bound to greater diligence as to what defenses there might be against the note between the original parties, than ordinary persons."

The note was given by Bedell in part payment of a subscription to the capital stock of the Great Western Telegraph Co., was obtained from him upon representations that the company was at work on the line between Humboldt and Chetopa, and

Bedell v. National Bank.

---

would have the line completed to Chetopa, where Bedell resided, and in working order before the maturity of the note. The note was an ordinary negotiable note, payable to the order of O. D. Bond, General Agent Gt. W. Tel. Co., by him indorsed to McDonald, Whitcomb & Balt, the contractors for building the line of telegraph, and discounted for them by the bank. It appears that other parties at Chetopa besides Bedell were induced to take stock and give their notes therefor, as were also parties at Burlington, including the plaintiff, the Burlington National Bank. The notes of the latter were still outstanding, and not yet due, when it discounted the note in controversy. Before discounting it, the bank took the precaution to ascertain the responsibility of Bedell. While it must be conceded that the testimony points to a gross imposition practiced upon Bedell, yet it seems that others, including the bank, were equally victimized. Upon the other and equally essential matter, knowledge of or notice to the bank, we are constrained to say that the testimony is very deficient. We can well imagine that the district court, impressed with this deficiency, scrutinized carefully the instructions it had given to see if some one had not unduly influenced the jury to its apparently unwarranted conclusion. Unwilling perhaps to say that there was absolutely no testimony inculcating the bank, it nevertheless felt that the verdict was wrong, and charitably assumed the responsibility for the error which was properly imputable to the jury. Regarding the instruction itself, it may be true that a party engaged in dealing in commercial paper may be more familiar with the habits of business men in the making and discounting of such paper, and therefore more chargeable with notice of anything unusual in the form of the paper, or the conduct of the holder; but beyond that we do not understand that he is under any greater obligations than any other purchaser of such paper to inquire into and ascertain the true nature of the transaction between the maker and the payee. He is at equal liberty with all other persons, if the paper be in proper form, and the conduct of the holder without suspicion, to purchase in full reliance upon the protection which the law casts around such paper. This instruction particularly, as applicable to the facts in this case, seems to cast an unwarranted restriction upon the free circulation of commercial paper, and doubtless improperly influenced the jury in its verdict. We see no error in the order granting a new trial.

---

Counsel for defendant in error has attached to the transcript a cross-petition, alleging error in taxing the costs of the term to the bank as a condition of the new trial. Whether there were error in this ruling or not, we do not think the question can be raised before us in this manner. A party alleging error in the proceedings in the district court must bring his separate action to have those errors examined, and cannot bring those errors up for review by simply attaching a cross-petition in error to the plaintiff's record.

The judgment will be affirmed.

OSCAR SEITZ, et al., v. UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.

1. LIENS OF VENDOR, AND OF MECHANIC; *Priority, Where Vendor Reserves Legal Title as Security. The railway company owned three lots in the city of Salina. Mrs. B. desired to build a hotel on them. The parties thereupon agreed that Mrs. B. should build and furnish said hotel, that the railway company should advance some money by way of a loan to assist her in building and furnishing the same, and that when she should build and furnish it, and pay back to the railway company the amount of money advanced by the company to her, the company would then execute a deed, conveying to her the full legal title to the property. Under this contract the railway company furnished to Mrs. B. the sum of $7,512.85, and she built and furnished said hotel. But she has never yet refunded said sum of money, or any part thereof; and the company has never yet executed to her a deed for said property. Said contract between the railway company and Mrs. B. was originally entirely in parol. But subsequently, and on November 4th 1867, Mrs. B. gave to the railway company her two promissory notes for said amount of money, and also gave a mortgage on the hotel property and on the furniture therein to secure the payment of said notes. The original parol contract was not in any other manner disturbed or altered by these transactions. While Mrs. B. was building said hotel she obtained labor and material therefor from the defendants below (plaintiffs in error.) The defendants below afterward duly filed statements for mechanic's liens on said property, under the provisions of ch. 137 of Compiled Laws of 1862. These claims of the defendants have never been paid or satisfied. The court below held that these claims were valid liens upon the property, but also held that they were subsequent to the lien of the railway company thereon. When the contracts for furnishing said labor and materials were made is not shown. Whether any of them were made before the railway company furnished said money is not shown. Therefore, in support of the decision of the court below, it should be presumed that said contracts for labor and materials were made after the money was furnished. Some of the defendants furnished labor and material before said mortgage was executed, and some of them afterward. The judgment of the court below was, that the property should be sold, and that the claim of the railway company should be first paid from the proceeds thereof. Held, that the judgment of the court below was correct.

---

2. MECHANIC'S-LIEN LAW OF 1862, Construed. The mechanic's-lien law of 1862, taken all together, undoubtedly means, that a mechanic's lien shall operate upon the whole of the estate which the person procuring the labor and materials may have in and to the property for which he procures the same, whatever may be the character of that estate, but that such lien cannot operate upon anything more than such estate, and that so far as it does operate it is the paramount lien upon the enhanced value given to such estate by the labor and materials. That is, it is the paramount lien upon the surplus value of the estate, over and above what would have been the value of such estate without such labor and materials.
3. ——— Extent and Effect of Liens. Where a person holding an equitable estate in and to certain real estate, and not holding the legal estate, made improvements on such estate, and afterward mechanics' liens were filed thereon under the mechanic's-lien law of 1862 to secure payment for labor and materials furnished in making said improvements, said liens operate upon the said equitable estate only, and do not reach the legal estate, or affect the rights of the party holding the legal title. [Harsh v. Morgan, 1-293.]

Error from Saline District Court.

THE Railway Company brought its action in June 1868, to foreclose a mortgage. It made Mary A. Bickerdyke, H. D. Rush, Alonzo B. Chapman, Lorenzo D. Bower, Benj. Howard,

Oscar Seitz, Miller & Stevens, Jacob De Witt, Hamlin & Woolley, and Palmer, Fuller & Co., defendants. Mrs. Bickerdyke was the mortgagor. The other defendants were joined as having some claim or lien on the mortgaged premises subsequently to the claim of the plaintiff. Trial at the October Term 1870 of the district court, J. H., judge pro tem., presiding. An agreed statement of facts was filed, among which are the following:

"In 1867 the defendant Mary A. Bickerdyke commenced erecting a building for a hotel, and other buildings appurtenant thereto, for herself, on the lots of the plaintiff company, described in the petition in this case, their title thereto then being of record. Said hotel building was finished in March 1868. The money furnished by the plaintiff for materials for said building, and for the furniture purchased and owned by said Mary A. Bickerdyke, was furnished and paid at various times during the summer of 1867, and previous to November 4th 1867. Said building was erected with the knowledge of the plaintiff, and on the understanding that on the erection of said building, and on the payment of all her indebtedness to the plaintiff, said Mary A. Bickerdyke should have a title to said lots, but without any definite contract, until the giving of the mortgage specified in the petition. Said mortgage was given by said Mary A. Bickerdyke on the 4th of November 1867, to said plaintiff, on said lots and hotel-building and furniture, for the sum of $7,512.85, the amount of money previously advanced as aforesaid by the plaintiff, and payable as stated in said petition and mortgage.

"The defendants hereinafter named have each recovered a judgment in this court against said Mary A. Bickerdyke for the several amounts hereinafter named, and each on a contract with said Mary A. Bickerdyke, and for labor done and materials furnished on and for said buildings on said lots. Each of said defendants did within six months after the completion of said buildings, file a mechanic's lien on said buildings for said labor and materials, and each commenced his action within twelve months after the completion of said buildings.

"The following is a statement of the judgments obtained by said defendants: H. D. Rush, March term 1868, for $1289.93; Palmer, Fuller & Co., September term 1868, for $2510.15; A. B. Chapman, March term 1869, for $626.69; L. D. Bower, March term 1869, for $354.80; Benj. Howard, September term 1868, for $213.87; Oscar Seitz, September term 1868, for $165.89; Miller & Stevens, September term 1868, for $400; and Jacob DeWitt, September term 1868, for $227.57. Said judgments of H. D. Rush, and Palmer, Fuller & Co., have been sold and assigned to the plaintiff.

“It is agreed that the following claims and parts of claims, included in the foregoing judgments, namely, B. Howard, $213.87; Palmer, Fuller & Co., $359.43; A. B. Chapman, $68; L. D. Bower, $198; Oscar Seitz, $28.50; Miller & Stevens, $400, and Jacob De Witt, $169.87, originated since the date of the plaintiff's mortgage; and that all the claims of said defendants, as first above stated, exclusive of the several claims and amounts last above stated, originated before the date of the said mortgage.”

The district court held that the lien of the Railway Company was the first and paramount lien on the mortgaged premises, and a decree was entered that said premises be sold, “and the proceeds of said sale be first applied to the payment of the costs of suit; second, to the payment of the plaintiff's judgment and claim in full; and that the residue be applied to the payment of the claims and judgments of other lien-holders and judgment creditors pro rata,” specifying such other liens in order and amount as first stated in the agreed facts. From this decree defendants Seitz, Chapman, Howard, Miller & Stevens, and De Witt, appeal, and bring the case here on error. The Railway Company only is made defendant in error.

C. A. Hiller, for plaintiffs in error:

The mechanics' liens were prior to the defendant's mortgage. Defendant in error is estopped from denying the plaintiffs' claims. The liens of plaintiffs in error, prior and subsequent to defendant's mortgage, should be distinguished. The personalty should be deducted from the mortgage of defendant in error.

The mechanics' liens are prior to the mortgage-deed. The mechanics' liens were based on the law approved March 4th 1862, Comp. Laws, 680, ch. 187. Section 17 of this lien law says that the lien shall be a preferred claim on the building, and previous incumbrancers and creditors must look to the land. Defendant in error never took any steps under the lien law; hence it is a previous encumbrancer or creditor.

Brief of Plaintiffs in Error.

The general practice is, to give a liberal construction to the lien laws in favor of the mechanic or material-man. 10 Wend. 375; 2 Miss. 874; Houck on Liens, 85; 46 Mo. 595. The court below erred in applying the 14th section of the law to the case, and ignoring the 17th section. The case of Smith v. Moore, 26 Ill. 392, is precisely in point. And the building and lots should be divided, and sold only when it can be done without injury; otherwise the value of each should be found, and proceeds of the sale divided proportionably. Defendant Bickerdyke was the owner of the premises when the liens attached. 4 Scam. 531; 17 Ill. 301.

Defendant in error, by accepting a mortgage from Mrs. Bickerdyke is estopped from denying her title as against her and the lien-men claiming through her; and is further estopped by permitting the erection of this building, having knowledge thereof. A mortgage or other incumbrance may give rise to an estoppel; 14 Cal. 612. Now, defendant in error by accepting and placing on record its mortgage from defendant Bickerdyke, acknowledged her title to all the world, and cannot now contest it. But the case is still stronger against the railway company, if it is the owner, and permitted work to go on from which it alone obtains the benefits, and afterward sets up its title to defeat the mechanics' liens. The maxim, Qui tacet consentire videtur, applies here. Passive knowledge is sufficient in such cases. 14 Ill. 269; 1 Johns. Ch. 344; 23 Ill. 88; 14 Wis. 281; 3 Ohio St. 344; 14 Cal. 247.

If our rule of distribution be true, the claims admitted prior to the mortgage by the agreed statement, must be first satisfied: 2 Ohio St. 114. The other lien-men look to the building, and the mortgagee must look to the land for its claims. Yet no distinction between the lien-holders was made by the court below.

J. P. Usher, and C. E. Bretherton, for defendant in error:

1. The petition in error is brought by part only of the defendants below, and hence is defective. Bickerdyke, Rush, and others of the defendants, are not parties to the petition in error, either as plaintiff or defendant. It is well settled, that all parties interested in the judgment which it is sought to reverse, must be brought before the court, and if they are not, a motion to dismiss the petition will be sustained. Nash's Practice, 4th ed., 1258; 13 Ohio St. 568; 14 Ohio St. 287; 22 Ohio St. 131; 10 Kas. 204, 394.

2. It is evident that the plaintiffs in error can only sustain the substantial proposition of their case, which is thus stated in the fifth assignment in their petition, "That the court erred in its decision that the claims and interests of the defendants in error were prior and superior liens to the claims of the plaintiffs in error upon the buildings and additions upon said lands erected and constructed," by demonstrating that their liens gave them a better title against defendant in error than Bickerdyke herself possessed. Bickerdyke could only acquire title to the premises by performing her agreement or understanding with defendants, set forth in the findings of the court, to-wit, "On the understanding that on the erection of said building, and on payment of all her indebtedness to the plaintiff," (now defendant in error,) "said Mrs. M. A. Bickerdyke should have a title to said lots."

There is not in the case before us any question of priority between mortgagees and mechanic's-lien holders. The 17th section of the law of 1862 has no bearing on the questions involved in it. The debt of Bickerdyke to defendants in error was the very root of her title, and it is absurd that any one should claim under her and yet attempt to repudiate that debt. The lienholders' position, as against an owner having other than a fee-simple title, is defined by §14 of that act; and all they can claim is, to have sold "whatever right or estate such owner had in the land at the time of making the contract," and no more. The exact question we now discuss came before this court in Harsh v. Morgan, 1 Kas. 293, under the act of 1859, the 17th section of which is identical with §14 of the act of 1862.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: The petition in error in this case ought probably to be dismissed because of a defect of parties in this court. But as we think the judgment of the court below is correct, we shall pass over the question of dismissal, without deciding it, and proceed to consider such questions as are involved in the merits of the case. The facts of the case are substantially as follows: The Union Pacific Railway Company, Eastern Division, owned three lots in the city of Salina. Mrs. M. A. Bickerdyke desired to build a hotel on them. The parties thereupon agreed that Mrs. Bickerdyke should build and furnish said hotel, that the railway company should advance some money by way of a loan to assist her in building and furnishing the same, and that when she should build and furnish it, and pay back to the railway company the amount of money advanced by the company to her, the company would then execute a deed conveying to her the full legal title to the property. Under this contract the railway company furnished to Mrs. Bickerdyke the sum of $7,512.85, and she built and furnished said hotel. But she has never yet refunded said sum of money, or any part thereof, and the company has never yet executed to her a deed of said property. Said contract between the railway company and Mrs. Bickerdyke was originally entirely in parol. But subsequently, and on November 4th 1867, Mrs. Bickerdyke gave to the railway company her two promissory notes for said amount of money, and also gave a mortgage on the hotel property and on the furniture therein to secure the payment of said notes. The original parol contract was not however in any other manner disturbed or altered by these transactions. While Mrs. Bickerdyke was building said hotel she obtained labor and materials therefor from the defendants below, plaintiffs in error. The defendants below

afterward duly filed statements for mechanics' liens on said property under the provisions of the statutes of 1862. (Comp. Laws, 680, et seq.) These claims of the defendants have never been paid or satisfied. The court below held that these claims were valid liens upon the property, but also held that they were subsequent to the lien of the plaintiff (the railway company) thereon. When the contracts for furnishing said labor and materials were made, is not shown. Whether any of them were made before the railway company furnished said money, is not shown. Therefore, in support of the decision of the court below we should presume that said contracts for labor and materials were made after the money was furnished, although probably it would make no difference in the decision of this case whether they were made before or afterward. Some of the defendants furnished labor and materials before said mortgage was executed, and some of them afterward. The judgment of the court below was, that the property should be sold and that the claim of the railway company should be first paid from the proceeds thereof. Of this the defendants (plaintiffs in error) complain. They claim that their claims should be first paid. We think however that the judgment of the court below was correct. We think that it is not only supported by reason and justice, but it comes fairly within the spirit of the mechanics'-lien law itself. The defendants make their claim exclusively under §17 of that law. (Comp. Laws, 683.) But §17 must be read in connection with §14; and indeed, in connection with the whole of the law upon the subject of mechanics' liens. Then, taking the whole of the law together, and it undoubtedly means that a mechanic's lien shall operate upon the whole of the estate which the person procuring the labor and materials may have in and to the property for which he procures the same, whatever may be the character of that estate, but that such lien cannot operate upon anything more than such estate, and that so far as it does operate, it is the paramount lien upon the enhanced value given to such estate by the labor and materials. That is, it is the paramount lien upon the surplus value of the estate over and above what would have been the value of such estate without such labor and materials. In the present case Mrs. Bickerdyke had a contingent equitable estate in the property in question. The plaintiff had all the rest of the estate. Upon this contingent equitable estate of Mrs. Bickerdyke the defendants' liens operated, and upon that they were the paramount lien to the extent above mentioned; but they operated upon nothing more. They could not operate upon anything more. They could not reach something that Mrs. Bickerdyke did not have. They could not reach to the plaintiff's legal estate. A lien upon an estate cannot be greater than the estate itself. A stream cannot rise higher than its fountain. And therefore, we think that said liens did not in any manner affect the legal estate of the plaintiff, or its rights thereunder. But the plaintiff (as well as the defendants) had liens upon Mrs. Bickerdyke's equitable estate. It had a vendor's lien, (Stevens v. Chadwick, 10 Kas. 406,) and a mortgage lien, upon the same. But for the purposes of this case we shall consider that the defendants' liens were paramount to either of these liens of the plaintiff. Indeed, for the purposes of this case we shall consider the mechanics' liens of the defendants upon Mrs. Bickerdyke's equitable estate as paramount and stronger than any other liens could possibly be. But the plaintiff had more than the said vendor's lien and mortgage lien upon Mrs. Bickerdyke's equitable estate. It also had a lien upon the legal estate, and held such legal estate in its own hands as security for its own claim. And these last-mentioned rights of the plaintiff are rights not derived from Mrs. Bickerdyke, or from the defendants, or from any common grantor; but they are rights originally held by the plaintiff, reserved to it by the transactions with Mrs. Bickerdyke, and with which it has never parted. And these rights are governed more by the law relating to vendor and vendee than by any law relating to liens or incumbrances. Originally the plaintiff held the whole of the estate, both legal and equitable. It parted with the estate upon certain conditions. But it reserved to itself the legal estate, with a lien upon it to secure the payment of said debt of $7,512.85. Now, how can the plaintiff be divested of this legal estate except by the payment of said debt—except by the fulfillment of the terms and conditions upon which it agreed to divest itself of said legal estate? To take the legal title to said property from the railway company without paying said debt, against the consent of the company, and for no crime or fault of the company, would look very much like confiscation. If the judgment of the court below had merely ordered Mrs. Bickerdyke's equitable estate to be sold to satisfy the defendants' claims, then possibly there would have been no necessity for making any provision for the payment of the plaintiff's claim. But the purchaser of the property in such a case would have stood precisely in the place of Mrs. Bickerdyke. He would have obtained precisely her equitable estate; nothing more, and nothing less. And before he could have obtained the legal estate he would have had to fulfill all her obligations to the plaintiff. But the court below did not stop with ordering that the equitable estate of Mrs. Bickerdyke should be sold. The court ordered that the entire estate, legal as well as equitable, should be sold. And therefore, as the sale would divest the plaintiff of its legal estate, the court had to provide by its judgment for paying the plaintiff's claim. We see no error in this. On the contrary, it was eminently just and legal. We suppose that no one will claim that the giving of said promissory notes for the debt, and the giving of said mortgage upon Mrs. Bickerdyke's equitable estate and upon the furniture in the hotel to secure the payment of said notes, will in any manner change the plaintiff's rights with regard to the legal estate, when at the same time the legal estate was reserved as a further security for the payment of said debt.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

THE CITY OF SALINA V. OSCAR SEITZ.

LICENSES; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; SALES BY DRUGGISTS; Cities of Third Class; Ordinances; Powers and Jurisdiction. In July 1871, the city of Salina, a city of the third class, passed an ordinance providing for the issuance of licenses upon certain terms and conditions to persons to sell intoxicating liquors, and providing for punishing by fines such persons as should sell intoxicating liquors without taking out or having such a license. Said ordinance with some amendments is still in force. During the year 1874 the defendant was a druggist, and kept drugs, medicines and intoxicating liquors for sale in said city. He did not take out or have any license to sell intoxicating liquors. He employed a clerk for the drug store, and authorized said clerk to sell said drugs, medicines, and intoxicating liquors. On May 16th 1874, said clerk sold, in said drug store, one gallon of said intoxicating liquor. The city of Salina immediately commenced a prosecution against the defendant for selling said liquor in violation of said ordinance. The action was commenced before the police judge of said city. It was afterward taken on appeal to the district court, and there tried again on its merits. The defendant was found guilty in the district court, and sentenced to pay a fine of $50. Held, that said ordinance was and is valid [State v. Young, 17-414; City of Marion v. Toomy, 21-439; State v. Simmons, 21-685]; that each of said courts had jurisdiction to try the cause; that no error is perceived in the rulings of the court below; and that the defendant would have been liable even if said liquor had been sold for medical purposes only. [State v. Fleming, 32-588.]

Appeal from Saline District Court.

THE facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the opinion, infra. The provisions of the city ordinance under which Seitz was convicted, are sufficiently stated in the appellant's brief. Seitz was convicted at the June Term 1874, and he brings the case here on appeal.

J. G. Mohler, for appellant:

This prosecution was for an alleged violation of city ordinance No. 48, regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, passed by the city council of the city of Salina, and approved July 21st 1871. The section claimed to have been violated reads as follows:

"Sec. 4. Every person who shall without first taking out and

City of Salina v. Seitz.

having a license as aforesaid, [referring to preceding sections of said ordinance,] directly or indirectly sell or offer for sale any spiritous, vinous, fermented, or intoxicating liquors, within the limits of the city, shall upon conviction be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars."

Upon trial before the police judge a conviction was had, and an appeal was taken to the district court. In the district court appellant filed plea in abatement, raising the question of the authority of the city council to enact said ordinance No. 48. Upon the trial of the truth of said plea, evidence was submitted and said plea was by the court overruled, and exceptions taken by appellant. If the city council had no authority to enact said ordinance, as is claimed by appellant, then all proceedings in the case were without jurisdiction, and void, and the district court should have sustained the plea in abatement. The police judge of the city of Salina could have no jurisdiction if said ordinance was invalid; and if the police judge had no jurisdiction, the district court could have none: 19 Wis. 193; 24 Wis. 594; 27 Wis. 462.

Had the city council authority to enact ordinance No. 48? "The powers of all corporations are limited by the grants in their charters, and cannot extend beyond them." 21 Ill. 205; 1 Dill. Munic. Corp. 173, et seq. Courts adopt a strict rather than liberal construction of powers. Is power granted in ch. 60, Laws of Kansas 1871, to cities of the third class to enact ordinances such as No. 48 enacted by the city of Salina? Said ordinance is almost a verbatim copy of the Dramshop Act, (Gen. Stat. 399.) Sec. 4 of ordinance No. 48 is almost an exact copy of § 3 of the dramshop act. In § 3 of dramshop act it is provided, that any person selling liquor without license shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars. Sec. 4 of ordinance No. 48 provides a fine of not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars. The dramshop act is operative in all portions of the state. Cities of the third class are not exempt from the operation of its provisions: Alexander v. O'Donnell, 12 Kas. 608. Nowhere in the charter of cities of the third class is power to enact ordinances to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors expressly granted. This was not a prosecution for a violation of a city ordinance restraining, prohibiting, or suppressing tippling-shops. "Tippling-shop" has a well-known meaning in the law. City of Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kas. 622. Appellant was not charged with keeping a tippling-shop, but with a single sale of whisky. Ordinance No. 48 was manifestly not enacted to carry out any authority granted in § 50 of said city-charter act of 1871. In the court below authority for the enactment of ordinance No. 48 was claimed under § 66 of said act, the "general-welfare clause" of the charter. "A general grant of power, such as mere authority to make by-laws, or authority to make by-laws for the good government of the place, and the like, should not be held to confer authority upon the corporation to make an ordinance punishing an act—for example, an assault and battery—which is made punishable as a criminal offense by the laws of the state. The intention of the state, that the general laws shall not extend to the inhabitants of municipal corporations, or that these corporations shall have the power to supersede the state law, will not be inferred from grants of power general in their character; nor will such authority in the corporation be held to exist as an implied or incidental right." 1 Dill. Munic. Corp. 401; 1 Ark. 201; 88 N. H. 424.

Opinion of the Court.

The appellant insists that the city council had no authority to enact such ordinance, there being a general statute of the state—Dramshop Act—regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, and punishing a sale in violation of law; that the prosecution in this case should have been under the dramshop act before a justice of the peace, or in the district court, and not in the municipal court. 1 Dill. Munic. Corp. 89.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: The facts of this case are substantially as follows: On July 21st 1871 the city of Salina was and has since hitherto been a city of the third class. On that day said city passed an ordinance providing for the issuance of licenses upon certain terms and conditions to persons to sell intoxicating liquors, and providing for punishing by fine such persons as should sell intoxicating liquors without taking out or having such a license. Said ordinance with some amendments is still in force. During the year 1874 the defendant, Oscar Seitz, was a druggist, and kept drugs, medicines, and intoxicating liquors for sale in said city of Salina. He did not take out or have any license to sell intoxicating liquors. He employed one J. M. Champion as a clerk in the drug store, and authorized Champion to sell said drugs, medicines, and intoxicating liquors. On May 16th 1874 said clerk sold to one Claus Fair in said drug store one gallon of said intoxicating liquor. The city of Salina immediately commenced this prosecution against the defendant for selling said liquor in violation of said ordinance. The action was commenced before the police judge of said city. It was afterward taken on appeal to the district court, and there tried again on its merits. The defendant was found guilty in the district court, sentenced to pay a fine of $50, and he now appeals to this court.

The defendant claims that all the proceedings connected with this case from the beginning to the end were void; that the ordinance was void; that the proceedings before the police judge were void; that the proceedings in the district court were void; that neither court had any jurisdiction to try the defendant for such supposed offense; and that the district court committed other errors during the trial of the cause. Every claim of the defendant however we think is untenable, and therefore every question raised by him must be decided against him. The said ordinance is valid. (Dramshop Act, Gen. Stat., pp. 399, 400, §§ 1, 2, 3; Laws of 1869, pp. 86, 87, §§ 28 and 29, and especially subdivisions 4 and 5 of § 29; Laws of 1871, ch. 60, §§ 23, 48, 50, 66, 94; Laws of 1872, p. 234, § 2; The State v. Pittman, 10 Kas. 593; 597; City of Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kas. 622, 633; Neitzel v. City of Concordia, 14 Kas. 446; Williams & Pattee v. Louis, 14 Kas. 605.) And said courts had jurisdiction to try the cause. (Laws of 1871, ch. 60, art. 5, and especially §§ 72, 73, and 84, and cases above cited.) And we perceive no error in any of the proceedings.

Even if said liquor had been sold for medical purposes only, the defendant would still have been liable.

The judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

W. W. PAYNE v. FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

1. JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS; Residence of Parties. Where a cause of action is founded upon a promissory note, a district court of this state may obtain jurisdiction of both the subject-matter of the action and the parties to the suit, although the parties may be nonresidents of this state, and residents of the state of Missouri, and although the cause of action may have arisen in the latter state.
2. ——— Attachment. And in such a case, an order of attachment may be issued against the property of the defendant, on the ground that he is a nonresident of the state of Kansas, and no undertaking will be required of the plaintiff.
3. MOTION TO DISCHARGE ATTACHMENT; Uncertainty. Where a defendant moves the court to discharge an order of attachment "for the reason that the affidavit and proceedings for attachment are informal, defective, and not according to law," and defendant states no other reason, and states such reason in no other manner, held, that the defects and informalities of the "affidavit and proceedings" are not sufficiently pointed out to the court, and therefore that the court does not err in overruling the motion, and especially so, where the affidavit and proceedings appear to be sufficient.
4. CONTINUANCE; MOTION; Absent Witness; Diligence; Stating Facts. Where a motion for a continuance is made on account of the absence of evidence, the affidavit should show that the party applying for the continuance has used due diligence to obtain the evidence; and where the evidence desired is the testimony of an absent witness, it is not due diligence merely to have a subpoena issued for the witness, when it is known that the witness is a nonresident of the state, and that a subpoena cannot reach him.
5. ——— And in such case, where the evidence desired is the testimony of an absent witness, the party applying for the continuance should state the facts which he believes the witness would prove, in the same manner as he would state them if he were taking the deposition of the witness. [Swenson v. Aultman, et al., 14-273; Brown v. Johnson, 14-377; St. L. W. & W. Rld. Co. v. Ransom, 29-298.]

6. ——— The granting or refusing a continuance is largely within the discretion of the trial court; and unless it is shown that the trial court has abused its discretion in such a case, the appellate court will not reverse its rulings. [Ed. Ass'n Christian Churches v. Hitchcock, 4-36; Hottenstein v. Conrad, 9-435; Davis v. Wilson, 11-74; Swenson v. Aultman, et al., 14-273; Brown v. Johnson, 14-377; Wilkins v. Knapp, 33-752.]
7. ACTION ON NOTE; Practice, Where Execution of Note is not Denied Under Oath. Where the plaintiff sets forth in his petition a cause of action founded on a promissory note against two defendants as makers of the note, and duly alleges the execution of the note, and the defendants do not deny the execution of the note by an answer verified by affidavit, but one of them sets forth in his answer, as a defense to the action, that he was only a surety for his codefendant, and that by subsequent transactions between the plaintiff and his codefendant he was released and discharged from the payment of said note, it must be held, that the execution of the note is admitted by the defendants; that there is no necessity for introducing the note in evidence on the trial [Williams v. Norton, 3-295; Ferguson v. Tutt, 8-370; Mo. Riv. Ft. S. & Gulf Rld. Co. v. Wilson, 10-105]; that if no evidence were introduced on the trial, judgment should be rendered for the plaintiff for the amount of the note; and that the burden of proving said defense rests upon the defendant.
8. PARTY NOT PREJUDICED, Cannot Complain of Error. Where a judgment has been rendered against two defendants, and rightfully as against one of them, the one against whom the judgment has been rightfully rendered cannot complain that the judgment has been wrongfully rendered against the other defendant. [Burton, et al., v. Boyd, 7-17; Craft v. Bent, 8-328; DaLee v. Blackburn, 11-190.]

Error from Wyandotte District Court.

ACTION on promissory note, against two parties, as defendants. An order of attachment was obtained, and levied on property of defendants. The summons was returned "Not found," as to both defendants. Defendant Bowen made no appearance. Defendant Payne appeared and moved to dissolve the attachment, and he also filed a separate answer to the petition. Other facts and proceedings are stated in the opinion.

---

Trial at the September term 1874 of the district court. The plaintiff's petition set forth the note sued on, and alleged its due execution. No evidence was produced by plaintiff, the court holding that the note sued on need not be shown, and the affirmative of the issues was on defendants. Defendant Payne produced testimony tending to prove the truth of the matters alleged in his answer. The court found for plaintiff in the sum of $555, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against both defendants in the action for said sum. Defendant Payne brings the case here on error.

Frank Titus, for plaintiff in error:

1. The institution of this action is wholly unwarranted by law, and an abuse of the legal process of this state by a foreign corporation having its domicile in the state of Missouri. The statute governing attachments nowhere expressly gives this remedy to nonresident plaintiffs. By implication, in all the provisions of article 11 of the code, relating to attachments, the remedy is reserved to citizens of this state, or to matters arising within this state. There was no bond given in this action by plaintiff. Sec. 192 of the code expressly provides that a bond shall be given by plaintiff in all cases before an attachment shall issue, except when defendant is a nonresident, or a foreign corporation. Can that section be reasonably construed to mean, that a foreign corporation may institute attachments ad libitum against persons resident in different portions of the Union, and owning property in Kansas, without furnishing that indemnity, which all citizens of this state are required to furnish, save in excepted instances? The section obviously applies only to citizens of this state. Any other construction would seem unreasonable, as well as contrary to public policy.

2. The court below could only obtain jurisdiction, if at all, by consent of defendants in this action, which was not given. There is no rule of law which otherwise would warrant such assumption by the district court, the place of domicile of all parties being in Missouri, the subject-matter not being immovable property in Kansas, but the action being merely an ordinary personal one for the recovery of money, and the remedy sought being one which could not have been in contemplation of the parties to the contract, and which could not have been sustained in the place of their domicile. 2 Kent's Com. 463; Story Conf. of Laws, §§ 549 to 552; 9 Yerg. 244.

3. The motion to dismiss the attachment, and discharge the securities on the forthcoming bond, should have been sustained. The affidavit upon which the attachment issued was clearly informal and illegal in this, that it purports to have been subscribed and sworn to in Wyandotte county, Kansas, before a notary public of the state of Missouri, while the certificate of the officer shows that it was sworn to in Missouri. If verified out of the state it must be before some officer authorized to take depositions. It does not appear that the person before whom said affidavit was made was such officer, (code, § 330,) or that such person was an officer at all. 10 Kas. 88. Again, said affidavit should have been made by an officer of plaintiff, or its agent. It fails to show that Bancroft, the person who made the affidavit, was such agent, or in fact that the bank had appointed any agent for such purpose. It fails to set forth the reason why it is not made by some officer of plaintiff as required by law. Code, § 114.

4. The court erred in refusing defendant a continuance. The affidavit in support of the same fully complied with the statute, and this was the first application. The chief witness whose testimony was desired was defendant Bowen, whose interest it was to remain away, and to force Payne to pay the debt. Payne had used due diligence to ascertain the witness' whereabouts and take his deposition, and the affidavit fully discloses said fact; and if the witness could not be reached by process from the court below, it certainly did not become plaintiff to urge that as an objection, who by his own act had sought a jurisdiction foreign to all persons connected with the action. There were no counter affidavits filed. That the court should continue, when good cause shown, and that it is error to refuse, see 6 Mo. 444; 11 Cal. 21; Hill on New Trials, §§ 9,

Opinion of the Court.

10. There is a difference between arbitrary and judicial discretion, which the appellate court will notice.

5. It was error to put defendant at the trial on affirmation proof of the issues, without requiring the note sued on to be put in evidence. While the statute does not require the note sued on to be filed, yet it does not alter the general rule of law, that the instrument showing the liability claimed should be put in evidence. If there is a variance between the pleading and the evidence, defendant should not be deprived of his rights so arising, by this mode of practice. If plaintiff possesses the note, if anything is due on it, and to whom, if it was protested, there should be some testimony produced to show such facts, before putting defendant on his defense, where there is a denial of liability, as in this case.

6. The judgment in this case is invalid, being entered up against both defendants in the action, when Bowen was never brought into court, nor served with either actual or constructive process. If it had been intended to take judgment against Payne only, the suit should have been dismissed as to his co-defendant.

Cook & Sharp, for defendant in error. (No brief on file.)

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action on a promissory note. The note was executed in the state of Missouri by Emmer Bowen and W. W. Payne, as makers, to The First National Bank of Kansas City, Missouri, as payee, and the action was brought by the payee against the makers, in the district court of Wyandotte county, Kansas. All the parties reside in the state of Missouri. The plaintiff in error therefore claims that the district court did not have jurisdiction either of the parties or the subject-matter of the action, merely because the parties reside in Missouri, and because the cause of action arose there. We think however the court below had ample jurisdiction.

At the time of the commencement of the action an order of attachment was issued in the case against the property of the defendants below on the ground that they were nonresidents of the state of Kansas. (Code, §190.) No undertaking was given by the plaintiff below. (Code, §192.) The plaintiff in error also claims that these attachment proceedings are void, for the same reason that he claims that the court below had no jurisdiction of the cause of action. And in this we also think the plaintiff in error is mistaken. The plaintiff in error, one of the defendants below, moved the court below to discharge the attachment "for the reason," as he then claimed, "that the affidavit and proceedings for attachment are informal, defective, and not according to law." These are the only reasons he gives for his motion, and we give them in his exact words. The defects and informalities of "the affidavit and proceedings for attachment" were not sufficiently pointed out to the court below, and for that reason if for no other the court below did not err in overruling the defendant's motion. The affidavit and proceedings appear however to be sufficient, and of course then there could be no error. The supposed defects pointed out in the brief of plaintiff in error are not sustained by the record.

Payne v. National Bank.

The defendant Payne also moved the court below for a continuance of his case, and supported his motion by an affidavit. The court below overruled the motion, and said defendant now claims that this ruling was erroneous. The statute provides that—

"A motion for a continuance, on account of the absence of evidence, can be made only upon affidavit, showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained, and that due diligence has been used to obtain it, and where the evidence may be; and if it is for an absent witness, the affidavit must show where the witness resides, if his residence is known to the party, and the probability of procuring his testimony within a reasonable time, and what facts he believes the witness will prove, and that he believes them to be true. If, thereupon, the adverse party will consent that on the trial the facts alleged in the affidavit shall be read and treated as the deposition of the absent witness, or that the facts in relation to other evidence shall be taken as proved to the extent alleged in the affidavit, no continuance shall be granted on the ground of the absence of such evidence." (Gen. Stat. 689, Code, §317.)

---

Opinion of the Court.

The affidavit in this case was attempted to be made under this statute, but it is defective in several particulars. It does not show that the defendant Payne used due diligence to obtain the evidence for which he asked the continuance; and it does not state the evidence itself in any proper manner. The only supposed diligence that the defendant used was in having a subpoena issued by the clerk of the court below for the three absent witnesses whose testimony he desired to procure. But this was not diligence, for the defendant knew that said witnesses were all nonresidents of the state of Kansas, and that a subpoena from that court could not reach them. One of said witnesses was his codefendant, whose exact evidence or whereabouts he says he did not know. But it does not seem that he even attempted to learn his exact residence or whereabouts. The other two witnesses were persons whose residence he knew was in Missouri, and yet he made no effort to obtain their depositions. And he did not state what would be the testimony of these three witnesses. He stated the nature of certain evidence as tending to prove certain facts; but whether he intended to state that this evidence had any connection with the testimony of said absent witnesses, we cannot tell. His words with reference to said evidence are as follows: "Said evidence is of the following nature, to-wit: proving and tending to prove that defendant Payne was, at the time of the taking of the note herein sued on by plaintiff, only a surety or indorser on the same, and was so known to be at said time by said plaintiff; that said plaintiff, so as aforesaid knowing said party, released by its actions said defendant Payne from all liability thereunder; that plaintiff has accepted other security, and taken other notes in lieu of the one sued on." This is all the evidence attempted to be stated in the affidavit; and there is nothing in the affidavit that specially connects it with said witnesses. But we suppose that the defendant intended that the court should infer that it was to come from said witnesses, as there is nothing in the affidavit that tends to show that it was to come from any other source. Then, assuming that it was to come from said witnesses, it is still insufficient. First, the facts are not stated in sufficient detail. They should be stated with the same detail that they would be stated by the witness if he were on the stand testifying, or if his deposition was being taken. They are to be stated so that they may be read as the deposition of the absent witness if the court should consider the affidavit sufficient, and the opposite side should choose to admit them. Second, these facts are not stated to be the facts which the witnesses would prove by their direct testimony. They are not stated to be the facts which it is believed the witnesses would testify to if they were present. They are not in fact claimed to be the testimony or evidence of the witnesses; but they are stated to be the facts which it is believed the evidence of the witnesses would prove and tend to prove. They are not the primary or original facts coming within the knowledge of the witnesses, and to which the witnesses would testify, but they are secondary facts, inferences, or conclusions, drawn from the primary or original facts to which the witnesses would testify. They are not such facts as would fall from the lips of witnesses who might be on the stand testifying, but they are facts as they are usually alleged in pleadings, or are found by courts, juries, or referees. They are what are often known as conclusions of fact or conclusions of law. They are such as must be proved by other facts, or inferred from other facts, and are not themselves the primary, original, proving facts. The statute requires that the party asking a continuance shall state in his affidavit the "facts he believes the witness will prove." He is not authorized to state the facts which he believes will be proved by the facts which he believes the witness will prove. He must state the original primary facts as he would believe they would come from the witness, and not the conclusions or inferences which might be drawn from these facts. And he must state the facts in detail, so that they may be used as a deposition, and not in that general and comprehensive manner generally adopted for the statement of facts in pleadings, or in findings of courts or verdicts of juries. He should state the facts just as they would be stated by the witness in a deposition. This the defendant did not do. Now the granting or refusing of a continuance is largely within the discretion of a trial court; and unless it is shown that the trial court has abused its discretion in such a case, the appellate court will not reverse its rulings. (Swenson v. Aultman, 14 Kas. 273, and cases there cited.) We do not think that the court below has abused its discretion in this case. Probably however the court would not have abused its discretion if it had held the affidavit sufficient, notwithstanding the said defects.

Payne v. National Bank.

---

Opinion of the Court.

Where a plaintiff sets forth in his petition a cause of action founded on a promissory note against two defendants as makers of the note, and duly alleges the execution of the note, and the defendants do not deny the execution of the note by an answer verified by affidavit, but one of them sets forth in his answer as a defense to the action that he was only a surety for his codefendant, and that by subsequent transactions between the plaintiff and his codefendant he was released and discharged from the payment of said note, it must be held that the execution of the note is admitted by the defendants; that there is no necessity for introducing the note in evidence on the trial; that if no evidence were introduced on the trial, judgment should be rendered for the plaintiff for the amount of the note; and that the burden of proving said defense rests upon the defendant. (Reed v. Arnold, 10 Kas. 102, 104, and cases there cited.)

The defendant Payne has no cause for complaint because judgment was also rendered against his codefendant Bowen. (Craft v. Bent, 8 Kas. 328; DaLee v. Blackburn, 11 Kas. 190; Burton v. Boyd, 7 Kas. 17.) Bowen is not complaining of the judgment rendered against him.

We should have affirmed this judgment without any consideration of the record, as counsel for plaintiff in error has failed to refer us to the particular pages of the record which he wished to have us examine.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

A. & N. RAILROAD Co. v. P. L. HUBBARD, Judge, &c.

PRACTICE, SUPREME COURT; *Mandamus Refused. Where a majority of this court agree in the judgment that ought to be rendered, but disagree as to the reason for such judgment, such judgment must be entered, but it is useless to give the opinion of the several judges, for thereby no point of law is settled or decided. [Foltz v. Merrill, 11-479.]

Original Motion for a Mandamus.

THE Atchison & Nebraska Rld. Co., as relator, applied to this court, by original motion and verified petition, for a writ of mandamus against Hon. P. L. Hubbard, Judge of the Second Judicial District, to compel said judge to sign a bill of exceptions in an action tried and determined in the district court of Atchison county at the November term 1875, wherein Peter Wagner was plaintiff, and the "Atchison & Nebraska Rld. Co." was defendant. Judge Hubbard appeared and demurred to the petition.

W. W. Guthrie, for relator.

Horton & Waggener, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This is an application for a mandamus to compel the signing of a bill of exceptions. A majority of the court are of the opinion that the application should be refused, but they do not agree in the reasons therefor. It is useless therefore to give the separate reasons of the judges, for there is no point of law settled or decided by the judgment in this case. Foltz v. Merrill, 11 Kas. 479.

COMM'RS OF REPUBLIC COUNTY V. JOSIAH KINDT.

SHERIFF'S COMPENSATION FOR BOARDING PRISONERS; *Liability of County. A sheriff is not entitled, as a matter of right, to extra compensation over and above the amount fixed by law for boarding prisoners, although he may have to carry the provisions fifty rods, and the water one hundred and sixty rods, and, although the cells of the jail may be small and inconvenient, and, although the weather may be cold and disagreeable. [Comm'rs Atchison Co. v. Tomlinson, 9-167; Roberts v. Comm'rs Pottawatomie Co., 10-29; Comm'rs Pottawatomie Co. v. Morrall, 19-141; Smith v. Comm'rs Shawnee Co., 21-669; *Comm'rs Clay Co. v. Error from Republic District Court.

THE board of commissioners disallowed a claim presented by Kindt, the sheriff, and thereupon Kindt brought suit to recover the amount claimed. The nature of the plaintiff's claim, and the facts in the case, are stated in the opinion. Trial at the April Term 1874, and judgment in favor of plaintiff for $57 and costs. The Board of County Commissioners appeal, and bring the case here on error.

A. F. Heeley, for plaintiffs in error.

W. H. Pilkinton, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by Josiah Kindt, sheriff of Republic county, against the board of county commissioners of said county, "For extra work in carrying meals to prisoners confined in jail, and otherwise attending to their wants," during the winter and spring of 1874. The claim of the plaintiff is in fact for extra work in boarding prisoners. The plaintiff had to carry the provisions for the prisoners about fifty rods, and the water about one hundred and sixty rods. The cells of the jail were small, and inconvenient, and required extra work to keep them in good condition; and the weather was cold and disagreeable. Under the circumstances

Life Insurance Co. v. Dunklee.

we think the county board might in their discretion have allowed the plaintiff extra compensation for his extra trouble, but still we do not think that they were bound to do so. The plaintiff cannot claim extra compensation as a matter of right. The commissioners allowed the plaintiff compensation for boarding the prisoners at the rate of sixty cents per day for each prisoner. This is the amount fixed by law, (Gen. Stat. 477, § 3,) and the county board cannot be compelled to pay any more. (Atchison Co. v. Tomlinson, 9 Kas. 167.)

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and cause remanded with the order that judgment be rendered in favor of the defendant below, and against the plaintiff for costs.

All the Justices concurring.

MISSOURI VALLEY LIFE INS. CO. v. ISABEL W. DUNKLEE.

LIFE INSURANCE; Action on Policy; Contract for, and Payment of, Premiums; "Cash Premiums." On July 25th, 1870, the Missouri Valley Life Insurance Company insured the life of John Orson Dunklee for the benefit of his wife Isabel W., in the sum of $5,000. At the time of said insurance, and up to the time of the death of said John Orson Dunklee, he was a special agent in the employ of said insurance company. He collected large sums of money for them, paid the same over to them, and received commission thereon for his services. The company kept an account with him, and on two or more occasions charged him with the amounts of the premiums coming due on his insurance policy, and deducted the same from the amount of his compensation, although at the time the company so charged him he was owing the company about the sum of $1,318.28. After this, and while he was in such employment, said insurance company, by its president and agent did, in the first part of January 1872, promise said John Orson Dunklee and said Isabel, that said defendant would charge said John Orson Dunklee with the amount of the premiums in said policy mentioned, as the same should thereafter become due, and in consequence of which promise said John Orson Dunklee continued in the employment of and to serve said defendant as such special agent until his death; and in consequence of such promise, and upon the faith thereof, said Dunklee deceased did not pay the quarterly premiums which came due on the 25th of January 1872, and on the 25th of April 1872, in money; but said company did not charge said premiums against said Dunklee upon its books. On May 5th 1872, said Dunklee died, and afterward this suit was brought by his widow, said Isabel W. Dunklee, to recover the amount of said policy: Held, That said contract with the president of the company is not void, although there is a clause in the by-laws of the company providing that "all premiums shall be payable in cash;" and further held, that the present action of the plaintiff may be maintained. [N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. McGowan, 18-300.]

Appeal from Leavenworth District Court.

ACTION by Isabel W. Dunklee on a policy of insurance issued by plaintiff in error on the life of her deceased husband. Defense, that the quarterly premiums due in January and April 1872 were not paid when due, and never had been paid. The assured died in May 1872. Trial at the March Term 1874. A special verdict was returned, and is copied in full in the opinion, infra. Judgment for the plaintiff for $5,239, and costs, and the Insurance Company brings the case here on error.

T. A. Hurd, for plaintiff in error:

1. Section 3 of the charter, set out in full in the special verdict, expressly provides that all premiums are payable in cash. Sections 4, 5 and 6 prescribe the duties of the president, vice president and secretary. It nowhere appears in said sections, or by the charter and by-laws, that Mackay was authorized to make the contract found by the second finding of the verdict; but on the contrary, they all show that he had no such authority. Section 6 provides that the secretary shall collect and receive all moneys of the company. No renewal-receipt was issued; and without it the policy could not by its terms be continued in force. The sections found, and the whole of the charter and by-laws, show, that Mackay had no authority to make the contract that the jury have found he did make. The sixth finding is that Dunklee had copies of the charter and by-laws and knew the terms and provisions thereof; the jury also found that he was an agent of the company. Dunklee then knew, when Mackay made the promise or agreement found by the jury, that he had no authority to make it, and that the company was not bound by it. He also knew that by the terms of his policy it would lapse on January 25th 1872, unless he paid the premium due, in money, before that day. Mackay never reported his action to the company, and the policy was canceled on defendant's policy-register on January 25th 1872, for nonpayment of quarterly-premium due on that day. Mackay's act did not bind the defendant: 2 Penn. St. 318; 1 Met. (Ky.) 550; 4 Bibb. 17; 5 Denio, 567; 14 Mass. 62; 17 Mass. 1.

2. It was alleged and proved that Dunklee was and for a long time had been an agent of the defendant. He is presumed to know Mackay's authority, and knew that Mackay was not authorized to change the agreement between him and the company, or waive the payment of his premiums in money. He was not in a position to rely upon any implied authority on the part of Mackay. 14 Barb. 858; 19 N. Y. 207; 8 Metcalf, 306; 3 Duer, 241; 13 Gray, 73; 20 Vt. 425.

3. We contend that the action of the court and jury, as shown by the record, is unwarranted in law, and on the part of the court is such an abuse of discretion as the statute intends to guard against; and that the interview between the court and jury plainly shows, that, by reason of prejudice on the part of the jury the defendant did not have a fair trial. A new trial should be awarded for that reason, and because of the actions and rulings of the court.

The court discharged the jury without requiring a finding upon all the material questions of fact in the case. We insist that the defendant was entitled to a finding upon all the questions of fact stated in its proposed verdict, including the question of deceased's intemperance.

Clough & Wheat, for defendant in error:

There is nothing in the verdict or the company's charter which limits the general power of the president; and we claim that the insurance company, and its president, could lawfully waive the payment of the premiums in cash, and accept pay-

John Orson Dunklee was not agent of his wife, and could not cancel the policy, or release the insurance company therefrom by his consent, or by contract between him and the insurance company. Laws of 1871, p. 248, § 77; 34 Conn. 313; 26 N. Y. 9.

The court did not, as we understand the case, rule out any evidence tending to show that John Orson Dunklee was intemperate before or when the policy was issued. And as there is no pretense that the company paid or tendered in payment to Mrs. Dunklee the amount of the surrender value, (the existence of which surrender value was affirmatively shown by the evidence,) which, by the terms of the policy it had to do before it could take advantage of Dunklee's becoming intemperate subsequent to the time when the policy was issued—and as there was no evidence that Dunklee was intemperate when the policy was issued, therefore there was nothing to submit to the jury involving the "temperance" or "inebriate" question.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: Injustice may have been done to the plaintiff in error in this case by the judgment of the court below, and yet we do not think that the injustice could have originated from any ruling of that court. If injustice was done, it was caused by the false testimony of the plaintiff below (defendant in error,) and the disposition of the jury to find everything in favor of the plaintiff below, and everything against the defendant below, whether there was sufficient evidence, or indeed any evidence, to support such finding or not. If the court below had allowed the jury to find as the jury desired to find, the verdict would have been much worse for the plaintiff in error than it in fact is. The court however would not allow the jury to find against the defendant below where the evidence was all in its favor, unimpeached and uncontradicted. It was only where the evidence was contradictory and conflicting that the court allowed the jury to find (as they desired to find) in favor of the plaintiff below, and against the defendant below. Now taking the findings of the jury to be true, and we do not think the court below committed any error that would authorize a reversal of the judgment. The findings of the jury in connection with the admitted facts we think sustain the judgment. The findings are as follows:

(Title.) We, the jury, find the following facts, and this is our special verdict in this action:

1st. The plaintiff, Isabel W. Dunklee, mentioned in the policy sued on in this action, was the wife of said John Orson Dunklee at the time of his death, and at the time the said policy was executed; is the person mentioned in said policy as the beneficiary thereof. The said John Orson Dunklee died on the 5th of May 1872, and the defendant in this action, and its officers and agents knew and had due notice of said death on the 6th of May 1872; and on the 31st of January 1873 the said plaintiff again gave notice, and furnished proof to said defendant of the death of said Dunklee.

2d. The first six quarterly-premiums of $30.90 each in said policy were paid to said defendant, and credited on its policy-register as having been paid. Said John Orson Dunklee was a special agent of said defendant from the time said policy was made and executed to the time of his death, during which time he was in the employ of defendant for compensation by it to be paid to him for his services, and while he was in such employment, the said defendant, by H. D. Mackay, its president and agent in that behalf, did in the first part of January 1872, promise said John Orson Dunklee and said plaintiff, that said defendant would charge said John Orson Dunklee with the amount of the premiums in said policy mentioned, as the same should thereafter become due, and in consequence of which promise of said defendant said John Orson Dunklee continued in the employment of and to serve said defendant as special agent, until his death; and in consequence of such promise, and upon the faith thereof, said Dunklee deceased did not pay the quarterly-premiums which came due on the 25th of January 1872, and the 25th of April 1872, in money; but said company did not charge said premiums against said Dunklee upon its books. We find that said Mackay had the right and authority to make the aforesaid agreement with the assured and the plaintiff, unless the court shall be of opinion that his action was unauthorized and void, in consequence of the terms and provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the company relating thereto, which are as follows, viz.:

"Sec. 3. All policies issued by this company are non-forfeiting, and all premiums shall be payable in cash. In case any policy-holder shall omit to pay any premium due from him to the company, or violate any other condition of the policy of insurance, the board of directors may forfeit his policy, except that when said violation is neglect to pay premiums and that only. In such case the company shall issue such paid-up policy as is provided for by the original policy. The company may issue paid-up policies to its policy-holders for such proportion of the same as premiums paid will warrant, upon such basis as the company may from time to time adopt; or the company may, in lieu of issuing paid-up policies of insurance, or declaring the same forfeited as above provided, continue the same in force beyond a certain period to be determined as follows, to-wit: The net value of the policy, when the premium becomes due and is not paid, shall be ascertained according to the combined experience, or actuaries' rate of mortality, with interest at four-and-one-half per cent. per annum. After deducting from such net value any indebtedness to the company, held by the company against the assured, four-fifths of what remains shall be considered as a net single premium of temporary insurance; and the term for which it will insure shall be determined according to the age of the party at the time of the lapse of premium, and the assumptions of mortality and interest aforesaid.

"Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the president to preside at all meetings of the stockholders and directors; to exercise a supervision and superintendence over all the business and affairs of the company, and to report in writing, in a book to be kept for that purpose, at each meeting of the board of directors, the true condition, standing and affairs of the company; he shall have the safe-keeping of the seal and the attested charter of the company, and with the written consent of the finance committee may transfer stocks and other property held as investments or owned by the company; acknowledge deeds and other papers, satisfy mortgages, make and call in investments. He shall sign all policies, statements, contracts, and other papers necessary and proper for the interests of the company; and, with the secretary, issue all policies; and with the general agent and executive committee, establish agencies for insurance, and appoint agents therefor, at such places as the president, general agent and executive committee shall deem for the best interests of the company, and shall be ex officio chairman of the executive committee, finance committee, and committee on death-losses, and shall devote his entire time and energies to the interests and business of the company.

"Sec. 5. The vice president shall perform the duties of president during the absence of that officer, and in case the president ceases from any cause to act as such, the vice president shall act as president until a new president is elected and qualified. At other times he shall perform such duties, not otherwise provided for, as may be required of him by the board of directors, or executive committee.

"Sec. 8. The secretary shall be the clerk of the corporation; shall attend all the meetings of the board, and its standing committees; shall keep a full and true record of all the proceedings of the board of directors, stockholders, and standing committees; shall keep a record of every policy issued, and all endorsements thereon, and shall sign all policies and premium receipts, and, with the president, issue the same; and shall sign or countersign all papers when required by the board, or required to be signed by him by these by-laws, or by the statutes of the state; shall collect and receive all moneys due the company, or collected on its account, and forthwith pay the same over to the treasurer, and take and preserve his receipt therefor; and keep, subject to the order of the finance committee, all the securities and money-documents of the company. He shall have the charge and supervision of the books of accounts; see that just, true and correct cash and other suitable books are kept; particularly of all moneys received, drawn, or disbursed; for what, and of whom received; for what, and to whom paid; and of all money, demands, securities, assets, accounts, and property necessary to a clear and distinct exhibition of the affairs, standing, and business of the company, which shall at all times during business hours be open to the examination of the board, or any director thereof; to give notice of all meetings of the board, and to perform such other duties, not inconsistent with the duties of his office, as may be required by the board of directors, the president, or any of the standing committees of the company; and he shall also, with the assistance of the president and actuary, prepare and cause to be filed at the proper places all such statements, accounts and reports as are or may be required by the laws of the United States, or of any state in which the company may do business; and shall perform generally all the acts ordinarily pertaining to the office of secretary of like companies. In the absence of the secretary, the assistant secretary shall act as secretary. When the secretary is not absent the assistant secretary will perform such clerical duties as may be required of him by the secretary. The secretary and assistant secretary shall each give such bond as may be satisfactory to the finance committee, for the faithful discharge of their official duties."

3d. In the month of May 1873 said plaintiff, by Clough & Wheat her agents, demanded payment at the office of said defendant in the city of Leavenworth for the amount of the policy mentioned, which payment was refused, and has not since been paid.

4th. The aforesaid policy had, at the death of John Orson Dunklee, a surrender value.

5th. Said policy was not canceled on the 25th of January 1872, nor on the 25th of April, 1872, nor at any other time; nor did said John Orson Dunklee ever consent, contract or agree that said policy had been or should be canceled or lapsed.

6th. The said John Orson Dunklee had copies of the charter and by-laws of the said defendant, and was acquainted with the terms and provisions thereof.

Opinion of the Court.

---

7th. The defendant paid the plaintiff Mrs. Isabel W. Dunklee money at various times from the 1st of January 1872 to the 1st of April 1872, on account of the said John Orson Dunklee's salary.

8th. If on the foregoing facts the plaintiff is entitled to recover, then we find for her, and assess the damages against said defendant at the sum of $5,239.

JAS. S. CROW, Foreman.

We do not think that the contract between Mackay and the Dunklees was void, although the by-laws of the company required that all premiums should "be payable in cash." The payment provided for by the contract was substantially a payment in cash. Dunklee was at the time collecting large sums of money for the company. He paid such sums over to the company, and received his commissions and fees for his services therefrom. The company kept an account with him. And it would not be strange, that the company should charge him with the amount of his premiums as they became due, and should deduct such amounts from his said compensation. This is just what the company in fact did with reference to certain of the premiums which the company admit were in fact paid. The last two premiums, which the company admit were paid, were paid in that way, although Dunklee was then owing the company about the sum of $1,318.28. Said policy was for the sum of $5,000, was issued July 25th 1870, on the life of said John Orson Dunklee for the benefit of his wife, said Isabel W. Dunklee. The premiums were payable quarterly, and each premium was for the sum of $30.90.

There are some other questions in this case, but there are none that merit discussion.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

WILLIAM H. CLARK V. BENJAMIN F. AKERS, et al.

1. OTTAWA INDIAN TREATY OF 1862; Conveyances in Violation of Treaty. A deed made by an Ottawa Indian for land allotted and patented to him under the treaty of 1862, conveying such land to another Ottawa Indian, at any time prior to July 4th 1867, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, was absolutely void, and could not create even an equitable estate in the lands in favor of the grantee, even though he had paid the purchase-money. [Clark v. Libbey, 17-634. Other cases under Ottawa treaty: McCullagh v. Allen, 10-150; Clark v. Libbey, 14-435; Campbell v. Paramore, 17-639; Baldwin v. Squires, 20-280.]
2. DEED—DELIVERY; Evidence of Delivery. A deed of conveyance for lands takes effect only upon delivery; and ordinarily the date of a deed (admitted to have been delivered) is prima facie evidence of the time of its delivery. [Babbitt v. Johnson, 15-252.] But where a deed bears one date, and the acknowledgment thereof another and subsequent date, and the date of the recording of the deed is still subsequent to either, it will be held, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the deed was delivered at least as early as the day of acknowledgment; and especially so where the words "Sealed and delivered in presence of A.S.L.," are found on the face of the deed immediately succeeding the body of the deed, and preceding the acknowledgment.
3. CONVEYANCE; TITLE; Deeds Before and After Removal of Disability. Where an owner of land is legally disabled from selling, conveying, or incumbering the same, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, and where the law provides that "any conveyance or incumbrance of said lands done or suffered," except as provided, "shall be null and void," and such owner executes a deed without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, and subsequently, after all disabilities and restrictions are removed, said owner executes another deed to another grantee for said land, held, that the execution of the second deed, and "willingly putting the same in use as having been made in good faith," is not such a legal fraud upon the first grantee as to prevent the second deed from having full force and effect. [Stevens v. Smith, 2-243; Blue Jacket v. Comm'rs Johnson Co., 3-354; Scoffins v. Grandstaff, 12-467, Clark v. Libbey, 14-435; Campbell v. Paramore, 17-639; *Baldwin v. EJECTMENT, brought by Clark, as plaintiff, against Benj. F. Akers, Benj. Esterly, Jennie Nugent, and E. J. Nugent, to recover the possession of 120 acres of land. Trial, and judgment for defendants, at the March Term 1874. The facts and proceedings are fully stated in the opinion. The plaintiff brings the case here on error.

W. H. Clark, plaintiff in error, for himself.

John W. Deford, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action in the nature of an action of ejectment, brought by William H. Clark against Benjamin F. Akers, Benjamin Esterly, Jennie Nugent, and E. J. Nugent, for the recovery of certain real estate. Said real estate consists of 120 acres of land lying in a body, and described as follows: The W. $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 27, township 17, range 20, in Franklin county, and the N.E. $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N.E. $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, same township and range. John W. Early was the original patentee of said land. Early executed three separate deeds for this land or portions thereof, which we shall designate as deeds "B," "E," and "F," as they are so designated in the record and in counsel's briefs. The first deed was from Early to John T. Jones for the land in section 27, dated May 28d 1865. This deed we shall designate as deed "E." The next deed was from Early to John T. Jones and Joseph King for the land in section 28, dated May 8th 1866. This deed we shall designate as deed "F." The third deed was from Early to Charles Kinney for the whole of the land, dated December 11th 1871. This deed we shall designate as deed "B." The plaintiff claims title to said real estate under said deed "B." The defendants claim title under deeds "E" and "F." And this entire case depends upon the validity of these three deeds. The court below found in favor of the defendants, and against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff now brings the case to this court. The court below made two sets of findings in this case—the first with reference more especially to the rights of the parties under deed "F;" and the second more especially to the rights of the parties under deed "E;" and in each set of findings the court makes, first, findings of fact, second, findings of law, and

Clark v. Akers.

then, third, conclusions of law from these findings of fact and law. The first set of findings reads as follows:

And now comes the plaintiff by A. W. Benson his attorney, and the defendant B. F. Akers by H. P. Welsh his attorney, and Jennie Nugent and E. H. Nugent by John W. Deford their attorney: and this cause came on to be heard upon the pleadings and evidence, and to be decided by the court; and thereupon the court doth find the following conclusions of fact and law in this case. From the evidence presented the court finds the following facts:

1st. Under the provisions of the Ottawa Indian treaty of June 24th, 1862, the N.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, township 17, range 20 in this county, was allotted and patented to John W. Early, an Indian of the Ottawa Tribe.

2d. On the 8th of May 1866, John W. Early, for a consideration of $100, (without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior at any time,) executed and delivered to John T. Jones and Joseph King, Indians of the Ottawa Tribe, a warranty deed for the land herein described, which was recorded on the same day.

3d. On the 10th of November 1867, John T. Jones and Joseph King, for a consideration of $500, executed and delivered to Isaac S. Kalloch a warranty deed for the land herein described; and on the 1st of April 1870 Isaac S. Kalloch, for a consideration of $400, executed and delivered to Benjamin F. Akers a warranty deed for the same premises.

4th. On the 18th of August 1870, John T. Jones, for a consideration of $333.33, executed and delivered to Jennie Nugent a warranty deed for the land herein described; but at and before the execution of the deed, and payment of the consideration therefor, Jennie Nugent had actual notice of the conveyance mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

5th. In the year 1871, William H. Clark and M. E. Cheney, partners in the law business, arranged with Charles Kinney to take deeds for Indian lands in his name in cases where the Indians had attempted to convey their lands and such conveyances were of doubtful validity; and to enable Clark & Cheney to control the titles so taken, Kinney executed to Cheney a general power to convey real estate.

6th. On the 11th of December 1871, John W. Early with intent to defraud John T. Jones and his grantees, for a consideration of $2.50, paid by Clark & Cheney, executed and delivered to Clark & Cheney a quitclaim deed for the land herein described, with the name of Charles Kinney written therein as grantee, without Kinney's knowledge or solicitation, under the general arrangement hereinbefore mentioned.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

7th. On the 28d of April 1873, Charles Kinney, at the request of Clark, without any consideration paid, executed and delivered a quitclaim deed for the premises herein described to William H. Clark, who received the same with actual knowledge of all the conveyances herein described, and with intent to defraud John T. Jones and his grantees, and has willingly put the same in use as having been made in good faith.

The court finds the law applicable to the foregoing facts to be—1st, That the Ottawa Indian Treaty vested in the patentees an estate in fee in the lands allotted, with certain restrictions against alienation.

2d, That prior to July 16th 1867 the allottees and patentees under the treaty had no right whatever to alienate any portion of their lands except to each other, and then only with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

3d, That after the 16th of July 1867 all restrictions against alienation were removed, and the patentees became invested with a title in fee simple to their lands; but the removal of such restrictions gave no force to the prior void deeds or conveyances.

4th, A deed made by an Ottawa Indian at any time prior to July 16th 1867, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, was absolutely void, and could not create even an equitable interest in the land in favor of the grantee, even though he had paid the purchase-money, and taken actual possession.

5th, The statute provides "Every person who being a party to any conveyance of any estate or interest in real estate, with intent to defraud prior or subsequent purchasers, and any person being privy or knowing of any such conveyance who shall willingly put the same in use as having been made in good faith, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor."

6th, Where two persons claim title to the same land, and both claim from the same grantor, and where the oldest deed is the first recorded, the grantor named therein has the better or paramount title; and in an action of ejectment the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title; and unless he

Clark v. Akers.

---

shows a clear right to recover, he cannot evict the possessor, even where such possessor is a mere trespasser.

From the foregoing the court concludes—

1st, That William H. Clark, having actual notice of the prior conveyances from Early to Jones and King, and from Jones and King to Kalloch, and from Kalloch to Akers, could not obtain from Early an estate in the lands, and therefore cannot recover possession.

2d, That as between Akers and Nugent, both claiming to derive title from the same grantor, and the latter having notice of the prior deed to the former, Akers has shown the better title, and is entitled to the possession as against any claim set up by Nugent.

The second set of findings are substantially the same as the first, mutatis mutandis, except as follows: There is nothing in the second set of findings like the sixth finding of law, and the second final conclusion of law, found in the first set of findings. Deed "E" was not acknowledged and recorded on the day of its date, as deed "F" was, but it was dated May 23d 1865, acknowledged January 10th 1866, and recorded April 15th 1868. And because of this difference, the court below made (in the second set of findings) the fourth finding of law hereafter given, which last-mentioned finding and conclusion are not contained in the first set of findings. They, with the first final conclusion of law contained in the second set of findings, are as follows:

[Fourth finding of law:] "A deed of conveyance for lands takes effect only on delivery. The date in the deed is ordinarily prima facie evidence of the time of its delivery, but where the deed bears one date, and the acknowledgment one several months later, if recorded, the date of the record would prima facie be the date of the delivery."

[The final conclusion:] "From the foregoing the court concludes, First, That William H. Clark, having actual knowledge of the prior conveyances from Early to Jones, and from Jones to Nugent, could not obtain from Early any estate in the lands; for title cannot pass when the deed is malum prohibitum; and therefore in the case at bar Clark has no vested estate.

"2d, That the deed from Early to Jones, dated May 23d 1865, acknowledged January 10th 1866, and recorded April 15th 1868, was delivered at the last-mentioned date, and by such delivery took effect from that date, and vested in John T. Jones an estate in fee simple in and to the W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 27, township 17, range 20."

The sixth finding of fact in the first set of findings shows that the consideration for deed "B" was $2.50. The fifth finding of fact in the second set of findings, (which corresponds to the said sixth finding in the first set of findings,) shows that the consideration for said deed "B" was $5. The deed itself, upon its face, shows it to have been $100. And from the evidence we would infer that it was in fact $10. We think the foregoing is a sufficient statement of the facts of the case for the present. We shall however mention some other facts as we progress with the opinion.

We agree with the court below, that "A deed made by an Ottawa Indian at any time prior to July 16th 1867, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, was absolutely void, and could not create even an equitable interest in the land in favor of the grantee, even though he had paid the purchase-money and taken actual possession." Or, as stated in the second set of findings, "A deed made by an Ottawa Indian, of land allotted and patented to him under the treaty of 1862, conveying such land to another Ottawa Indian, at any time prior to July 16th 1867, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, was absolutely void, and could not create even an equitable estate in the lands in favor of the grantee, even though he had paid the purchase-money." And therefore we think the said deeds "E" and "F" were wholly void. They were void, not because of any accident, or mistake, or oversight in their execution, but they were void because of a want of power in Early to alienate or incumber the land in any form except with the consent of the United States, and King were Ottawa Indians. The question now in controversy by virtue of the treaty made with the Ottawa Indians of June 24th 1862, (No. 1237.) By that treaty the Ottawa Indians were ceded to the United States on July 16th 1867, however, the time for them to become citizens was extended two years, or until July 16th 1869. (15 U. S. Stat. at Large, 517, article 17.) By the terms of the treaty of 1862 it was provided that—

Clark v. Akers.

“Plats and records of all the sections and locations shall be made [by and for said Indians,] and upon their completion and approval proper patents by the United States shall be issued to each individual member of the tribe and person entitled for the lands selected and allotted to them, in which it shall be stipulated that no Indian, except as herein provided, to whom the same may be issued, shall alienate or incumber the land allotted to him or her in any manner, until they shall, by the terms of this treaty, become a citizen of the United States; and any conveyance or incumbrance of said lands, done or suffered, except as aforesaid, by any Ottawa Indian, of the lands allotted to him or her, made before they shall become a citizen, shall be null and void. And forty acres, including the houses and improvements of the allottee, shall be inalienable during the natural lifetime of the party receiving the title: Provided, that such of said Indians as are not under legal disabilities by the local laws may sell to each other such portions of their lands as are subject to sale, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior at any time.” (12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 1240; article 7.)

The patent issued to Early stipulates that the grant of the lands to him is “upon the express condition, and with the limitation, as required by the treaty aforesaid, that the said John W. Early shall not alienate or incumber the aforesaid tracts of land until he shall become by the terms of said treaty a citizen of the United States; and any conveyance or incumbrance of said land, done or suffered by said John W. Early, made before he shall become a citizen, shall be null and void.” The consent of the Secretary of the Interior was never given in this case, that Early should sell, convey, alienate, or in any manner incumber any part or portion of his said land. Therefore we think the said deeds “E” and “F” were void. (Far- rington v. Wilson, 29 Wis. 388; Stevens v. Smith, 2 Kas. 248; Smith v. Stevens, 10 Wall. 821; Blue Jacket v. Johnson Co., 3 Kas. 354; Scoffins v. Grandstaff, 12 Kas. 468; Clark v. Libbey, 14 Kas. 435.) This is wholly unlike the case where a party has the power to alienate or incumber his land, and in attempting to do so makes some mistake. In such a case the courts may rectify the mistake, or in many cases would hold that the title passed under the rule of equitable estoppel. But in this case, Early had no power to convey his land except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior; and as that consent was never obtained, said attempted conveyance must of course be void. But notwithstanding the want of power in Early to alienate or incumber his said land, it would seem that the court below considered said deeds "E" and "F" valid, and therefore that the deed "B" was void. One of the reasons for considering the deed "E" valid, is shown by the following conclusions of law made by the court below, to-wit: "A deed of conveyance for lands takes effect only on delivery. The date in the deed is ordinarily prima facie evidence of the time of its delivery, but where the deed bears one date, and the acknowledgment one several months later, if recorded, the date of the record would prima facie be the date of the delivery." And therefore, "That the deed from Early to Jones, dated May 23d 1865, acknowledged January 10th 1866, and recorded April 15th 1868, was delivered at the last-mentioned date, and by such delivery took effect from that date, and vested in John T. Jones an estate in fee simple in and to the west-half of the northwest quarter of section 27, township 17, range 20." Now it is true, that "A deed of conveyance for lands takes effect only upon delivery." And it is also true, that "The date in the deed is ordinarily prima facie evidence of the time of its delivery." But it has never been held, so far as we are informed, that the date of the record of a deed was prima facie evidence or any evidence of the date of its delivery. It has been held in some cases that the date of the acknowledgment of the deed was prima facie evidence of the date of its delivery. (Henry Co. v. Bradshaw, 20 Iowa, 355, 362; Loomis v. Pingree, 43 Maine, 299, 308.) But generally it is held that the date of the deed itself is prima facie evidence of the date of the delivery; and this is generally so, although the date of the acknowledgment may be subsequent to the date of the deed. (Jayne v. Gregg, 42 Ill. 413, 416; Blake v. Fash, 44 Ill. 302; Breckenridge v. Todd, 3 Monroe, 52, 55; Ford v. Gregory, 10 B. Mon. 175, 180; Smith v. Porter, 10 Gray, 66, 68, 69.) In the case reported in 10 B. Monroe, 180, the court says: "The delivery of a deed is always presumed to have been made on the day of its date, and its subsequent acknowledgment does not change this presumption; but the delivery may be proved to have occurred at a different time." In the case reported in 10 Gray, 68, 69, the court, after holding that the date of a deed is prima facie evidence of the time of its execution, says: "It is of little importance that the deed was not acknowledged on the same day on which it purports to have been executed." On the face of the deed which we are now considering, at the usual place for such a thing to be found, the following is found, to-wit: "Sealed and delivered in presence of Asa S. Lathrop." Many courts have held that from such words as these, on the face of the deed, a delivery may be inferred. And as these words come immediately after the body of the deed, and immediately before the acknowledgment, why not infer that the delivery was made at some time after the deed was executed, and at some time before the acknowledgment was taken? It is not necessary that a deed be acknowledged in order to be valid. (Simpson v. Munde, 8 Kas. 172; Gray v. Ulrich, 8 Kas. 112; Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kas. 291.) The acknowledgment of a deed constitutes no part of the execution thereof. It merely furnishes additional evidence of the execution thereof. And the recording of the deed is still further removed from any connection with the execution thereof. In the present case, if the deeds "E" and "F" were delivered on the day that they were acknowledged, or at any time previous thereto, they would be equally as void as though they were delivered on the day that they purported to have been executed. We shall hold that they were delivered at least as early as the day on which the acknowledgments were taken, and therefore that they are void.

---

Opinion of the Court.

But the main reason why the court below considered the deeds "E" and "F" valid, and the deed "B" void, would seem to be, that the court considered Clark and his grantors attempted to perpetrate a fraud upon John T. Jones and his grantees, and that Clark in so doing committed a misdemeanor. The following findings and conclusions of the court below will show this, to wit: The sixth and seventh findings of fact; the fifth finding of law, and the first final conclusion of law in both sets of findings. The statute supposed to have been violated is §98 of the crimes act, (Gen. Stat. 336.) The substance of this statute, so far as it is supposed to have any application to this case, is given by the court below in the fifth finding of law. It is a statute enacted for the purpose, among other things, of preventing fraudulent conveyances. Now whatever may be the character of the transactions between Early, Kinney, Cheney, and Clark, in their moral aspect, we are unable to discover that any legal fraud was perpetrated by such transactions. How was John T. Jones, or any of his grantees, defrauded? They never had any legal or equitable right to the property in controversy. They had nothing in law. And is it possible to take something from nothing? How could Clark, or any of his grantors, take something from Jones or any of his grantees which neither Jones nor any of his grantees ever possessed? The deeds "E" and "F" were wholly void. They were nothing in law. The rights of all the parties were precisely the same as though they had never existed. Early lost nothing by them, and Jones and King gained nothing by them. Therefore, suppose that Clark has obtained the full title to the land in controversy, then what has he obtained that Jones or King, or any grantee of either, ever possessed? What has he procured from either of them by any transaction, fraudulent or otherwise? They have lost no legal right, and are not in any danger of losing any such right from any act of Clark's, and are therefore not in any situation to call Clark's acts fraudulent. Such acts are certainly not legally fraudulent as to Jones and King and their grantees, whatever they may be in their moral aspect. The court below says that Clark has no title to said land, "for title cannot pass when the deed is malum prohibitum."

---

Sibert v. Wilder.

Now in the language of the court below, why are not the deeds "E" and "F" malum prohibitum? They were executed and put in operation in contravention of the provisions of the treaty of 1862. And can it be possible that the ineffectual attempt of Jones and King to obtain Early's land in contravention of the provisions of said treaty shall forever take away from Early all power to ever afterward dispose of his land? This is undoubtedly just what this particular proviso of the treaty was intended to guard against.

We agree with the court below that "In an action of ejectment the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title;" but if the said deeds "E" and "F" are void, then under the other facts of this case Clark's title must necessarily be good; and that said deeds "E" and "F" are void, we have already held.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and cause remanded with the order that judgment be rendered on the findings of the court below for the plaintiff for the recovery of the property in controversy.

GEORGE W. SIBERT v. JOHN H. WILDER, et al.

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; Statute of Repose. Statutes of limitations are now regarded, not as statutes of presumption, but as statutes of repose.
2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT, TO REVIVE DEBT—To Whom to be Made. An acknowledgment of a debt, to take the case out of the statute of limitations, must be made, not to a mere stranger, but to the creditor, or some one acting for or representing him. [Schmucker v. Sibert, 18-104.]

Error from Douglas District Court.

In December 1873 Sibert brought his action against Wilder & Palm, on a promissory note given by defendants to one

Brief of Plaintiff.

W. H. R. Lykins, in August 1867. Defendants paid Lykins $250 on said note, and afterward and in October 1867, after said note was due and payable, Lykins assigned the note to Sibert. In March 1868, one Chancellor Livingston commenced an action against said Lykins, and caused said Wilder & Palm to be summoned therein as garnishees of said Lykins. Said action was continued from term to term, and in October 1873, John H. Wilder, one of the firm of "Wilder & Palm," as garnishee, made his answer, under oath. A copy of such answer is annexed to and made a part of Sibert's petition in this case, and is relied upon by Sibert to take his action out of the statute of limitations. The defendants demurred to the petition. The district court, at the January Term 1874, sustained the demurrer, and gave judgment in favor of the defendants. Sibert appeals, and brings the case here on error.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff:

The affidavit of Wilder is an acknowledgment of a then subsisting claim. His language is, "There was due and owing on said note on the 25th of March 1868, the amount of said note, less $250. Said note it still outstanding and unpaid at this date, except that I claim an offset for $800." Before and independent of the code of procedure, any promise or acknowledgment of a subsisting indebtedness, whether by parol or in writing, was a revivor of the demand. If it is an acknowledgment, it is that the debt is still due. (5 Wend. 258.) At the time of the adoption of our statute, some of the states through their courts had established the rule that no demand should be revived except by an express promise, or such an acknowledgment as should be held equivalent thereto. In other states the doctrine has been held different, as in Massachusetts, in Whitney v. Bigelow, 4 Pick. 110. There the court made the distinction that where a promise is relied on, it must be made to the party, but where an acknowledgment of indebtedness was relied on, it might be made to any one. And so in Davis v. Stiner, 14 Penn. St. 278.

Sibert v. Wilder.

By § 24 of the code it is provided, "In any case founded on contract, when any part of the principal or interest shall have been paid, or an acknowledgment of an existing liability, debt, or claim, or any promise to pay the same, shall have been made, an action may be brought," etc., "but such acknowledgment or promise must be in writing, signed by the party." The proof shows clearly an acknowledgment of an existing liability, and the witness does not claim that the demand is barred. But it is claimed by defendants that when Wilder answered he was compelled to answer. He was not however compelled to acknowledge the existence of a debt which was barred by the statute. He was at liberty to state that, originally there was a cause of action, and that the same was barred by the statute. Instead of so doing he said, "Said note is still outstanding and unpaid at this date," etc. If this is not the admission of an existing liability of the amount of the note, less the reduction by payment and offset, we are unable to understand the force of language. The provision of the statute is, that either an acknowledgment, a promise, or a payment of a part, shall renew the obligation. A promise must of necessity be made to the party, or his representatives. An acknowledgment may be made to any one. Hence the provision of the statute. A payment is only an acknowledgment, and much less forcible than a written acknowledgment. It is in reality only an acknowledgment to the extent of the amount paid, unless it be paid as interest, in which case it would be an acknowledgment of the amount for which interest was paid; yet both the statute and the courts have held payment of part of the principal sufficient to take the case out of the statute for the residue. The court will not, by construction, do away with the statute, but will give effect to all parts of it when the intent of the lawmaker can be discovered. (Waller v. Harris, 20 Wend. 561.) Here it appears that the note was made by defendants to Lykins; that Lykins transferred the note to the plaintiff; that Livingston had brought suit against Lykins, and garnisheed defendants, and that in such proceeding the answer was made and signed by Wilder admitting the liability. And besides, the writing is made and signed when the very purpose of the inquiry is to ascertain whether anything and how much is owing.

S. A. Riggs, and Nevison, Simpson & Alford, for defendants in error.

1. The answers made in court by Wilder, when garnisheed by Livingston, do not constitute a cause of action in favor of Sibert against Wilder & Palm. The answers were not voluntary. Wilder was compelled to make answer to the questions propounded; and the answers were therefore given under duress. "By the general consent of the courts of this country and of England, a mere acknowledgment which does not contain, by any reasonable implication or construction, a new promise, is not sufficient." (Parsons' Mercantile Law, 235.) A promise cannot be inferred from an involuntary acknowledgment. Duress avoids all contracts. "As the acknowledgment should be voluntary, we doubt whether those made under process of law, as by a bankrupt, or by answers to interrogatories which could not be avoided, should ever have the effect of a new promise." Parsons' Merc. Law, 237; Metcalf on Contr. 142; 5 Selden, 91; 4 Selden, 367.

2. Even if Wilder's answers had been voluntary, they would not have constituted a cause of action. "A new promise is not now implied by the law itself, from a mere acknowledgment." Parsons' Merc. Law, 236. And see, 2 Greenl. Ev., §440. "The mere acknowledgement of a debt is not a promise to pay it. A man may acknowledge a debt which he knows he is incapable of paying, and it is contrary to all sound reasoning to presume from such acknowledgment that he promises to pay it." 1 Pet. 351; 4 Penn. St. 321; 14 N. H. 422; 9 Penn. St. 410; 15 N. H. 140; 22 Vt. 179.

The acknowledgment was not made to Sibert, but to Livingston. It is now settled, we believe, that the acknowledgment must be made to the creditor and not to a stranger. 2

Sibert v. Wilder.

Story's Eq., §1521a; 1 Phillips' Ev., note 140. A creditor cannot avail himself of a promise made to a stranger. There is no privity between them. Besides this, there would be no consideration to such a promise. 4 Seld. 367; 5 Seld. 91.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This action was brought to recover the amount of a promissory note given by the defendants August 29th 1867, and payable one day after date. The petition was filed December 17th 1873, and consequently the demand is barred by the statute unless the cause of action is saved by subsequent acknowledgment. The acknowledgment relied upon to take the case out of the statute is the affidavit of J. H. Wilder, one of the copartners, taken before the clerk of the court, October 30th 1873, one month and-a-half before suit brought. The language of said affidavit is, "There was due and owing on said note on the 25th day of March 1868, when notice of garnishment in this and other cases was served, the amount of said note as above stated, less the $250. Said note is still outstanding and unpaid at this date, except that I claim an offset on a certificate of deposit issued to said W. H. R. Lykins by one A. E. Baird, dated September 17th 1867, for $300, and on a counter-check by said Lykins to one B. W. Fitts, and transferred to me, accompanied by a written order upon Lykins for that amount dated October 9th 1867. The firm of Wilder & Palm, was and is composed of myself and Andrew Palm." This affidavit was signed by John H. Wilder. The defendant demurred to the petition, and the court below sustained the demurrer.

Three objections are made to this acknowledgment—that it was not voluntary, but enforced; that it is not the admission of a present and subsisting debt, which the party is liable for and willing to pay, and that it was not made to the creditor, or any one acting for him, but to an entire stranger. As the record appears before us we think the last point well taken; and without considering the others, upon that decide the case.

Opinion of the Court.

All that can be gathered from the record is, that this acknowledgment was made in an answer returned by Wilder as garnishee in an action brought against the assignor of the plaintiff. It was not therefore made to this plaintiff, or his assignor, or to any one acting for him, but to a party claiming adversely to such assignor. Is such an acknowledgment within the statute? We think not. It may be conceded that at one time the decisions of the courts were in favor of such a construction: Peters v. Brown, 4 Esp. N. P. R. 46; Clark v. Hougham, 2 Barn. & Cress. 153; Monstephen v. Brooky, 3 Barn. & Ald. 141; Halliday v. Ward, 3 Camp. 32; St. John v. Barrow, 4 Porter, (Ala.) 223; Whitney v. Bigelow, 4 Pick. 110. But these rulings grew out of the fact that the statute of limitations was regarded as a statute of presumptions rather than as one of repose. It is well said in 3 Pars. on Contr., 5th ed., p. 63, "A very little observation will show that these two views lead to results which are not only distinctly different, but antagonistic. This difference may be stated theoretically thus: If the statute of limitations be a statute of presumptions, then it is taken away by whatever will rebut the presumption, and this is anything which implies or amounts to an acknowledgment that the debt still exists; but if it be a statute of repose, then it remains in force unless the debtor renounces its benefit or protection, and voluntarily makes a new promise to pay the old debt." It is perhaps needless to add that the latter is to-day the accepted view. Under that view it is held that an acknowledgment to a mere stranger will not avoid the running of the statute. The acknowledgment of a debt, to take a case out of the statute of limitations, must be made, not to a mere stranger, but to the creditor, or some one acting for him, and upon which the creditor is to act or confide. 2 Story's Eq., §1521a. ### SHEPARD & PLAYFORD V. JOHN G. ALLEN & SON.

1. EVIDENCE; Immaterial Testimony. The admission of immaterial evidence is generally not sufficient to require a reversal of the judgment. It is never so except where it tends to prejudice the substantial rights of the party against whom it is introduced. [Greer v. Adams, 6-203; Palmer v. Meiners, 17-478; Moon v. Helfer, 25-139; L. T. & S. Rly. Co. v. Paul, 28-816.]
2. PROMISSORY NOTE—When Given for Preëxisting Debt; Payment, or Security. Where a promissory note is executed for a preëxisting debt, it is wholly within the control and direction of the parties themselves at the time the note is executed, whether it shall serve as the absolute payment and extinguishment of the original debt or not; and in such a case, where there was evidence introduced on the trial, on both sides of the question, and the finding thereon was general, and to the effect that the note was not executed in absolute payment of the debt, and the evidence was sufficient to sustain such finding, held, that such finding cannot be disturbed by the supreme court. [McCoy v. Hazlett, 14-430.]

Error from Osage District Court.

ALLEN & SON, as plaintiffs, recovered judgment against Shepard & Playford, at the April Term 1874, for $952.25, and costs. The defendants bring the case here on error. The facts and proceedings are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

James Rogers, for plaintiffs in error.

William Thomson, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by John G. Allen & Son against Shepard & Playford, on an account for goods sold and delivered. The judgment below was for the plaintiffs, and the defendants below, who are now plaintiffs in error, brought the case to this court. The only assignments of error are as follows:

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

“First, That the said court erred in admitting the evidence on the part of the said Allen & Son, to which the said Shepard & Playford at the time objected.

“Second, That the said judgment was given for the said Allen & Son when it ought to have been given for the said Shepard & Playford according to the evidence, and the law of the land.”

I. The only evidence of the plaintiffs below, objected to, was certain testimony of the witnesses F. G. Nelson and W. Thompson. This evidence was offered by the plaintiffs below in rebuttal, and was proper rebutting evidence. It had reference merely to an interview between said witnesses and the defendant Shepard concerning certain notes, and what Shepard said about them. The evidence was objected to on the ground that it was irrelevant and incompetent. Now if it was irrelevant or incompetent, it was so merely because it was immaterial in the case. And the admission of immaterial evidence is generally not sufficient to require a reversal of a judgment. It is never so except where it tends to prejudice the substantial rights of the party against whom it is introduced. It is certainly not so in this case.

II. The trial of the case was before the court without a jury; and the court made a general finding in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants; and upon this general finding the judgment of the court below was unquestionably correct. This substantially disposes of the second assignment of error.

III. But the main argument of the plaintiffs in error, as we find it in their brief, is founded upon the claim that the finding of the court below is erroneous, and not sustained by sufficient evidence. Certain notes were given for the amount of the account sued upon; and the principal question of fact contested in the court below was, whether said notes were given as absolute payment of said account, or whether they were given

Shepard v. Allen.

---

merely as conditional payment, as additional security, or as collateral evidence of the preëxisting debt for which they were given. That the whole matter was completely within the direction and control of the parties at the time the notes were executed, we suppose no one will question. The parties could have made the giving of said notes serve as the absolute payment and extinguishment of said debt if they had so chosen. (McCoy v. Hazlett, 14 Kas. 430.) Or they could have made the notes serve merely as additional evidence of the debt, and allowed the original debt still to subsist and continue in force, if they had so chosen. Kermeyer v. Newby, 14 Kas. 164; Cooper v. Condon, 15 Kas. 572, 578. Hence, the only thing for the court below to do was, to hear the evidence offered on each side, and then to decide the question in accordance with the preponderance of the evidence. This the court below did. There was evidence introduced on both sides, and the court below upon this evidence decided in favor of the plaintiffs below. We cannot disturb that decision. There was sufficient evidence to uphold the same. What the decision should have been, if there had been no evidence introduced on either side upon the subject, is a question which is not now before us. Or upon whom would rest the burden of proof in such a case, we need not now decide. The weight of authority however would seem to be that the original debt in such a case would, prima facie, continue to exist; that the burden of proof to show that it had been paid or extinguished by the execution of promissory notes therefor, would rest upon the debtor; and that if no evidence were introduced except that of the mere execution of the notes, it would be presumed that the original debt still continued in force, unpaid and unextinguished. (Kermeyer v. Newby, supra; 10 U. S. Dig., First Series, 61 to 74, and cases there cited.)

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

N. B. LORD v. A. L. ANDERSON.

JOINT DEBTORS; *Compromise; Release by Creditor of one of Several Joint Debtors.

Where a partner sues his two copartners for a final accounting and settlement of the copartnership affairs, and it appears that the two partners sued had previously received jointly $1,281 more than they were entitled to, and the plaintiff $1,281 less than he was entitled to, and while the action was pending, the plaintiff settled with and discharged from all further liability one of the defendants, held, that the judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the other defendant should be for one-half of $1,281, to-wit, $640.50.

Error from Franklin District Court.

ACTION by Anderson against Lord and another, to recover an alleged balance of $1,500. Plaintiff brought his action against two defendants, and prosecuted it to judgment against Lord alone. Trial at the September term 1874. Findings and judgment in favor of Anderson for $826.50, and interest, and costs. Lord appeals, and brings the case here on error. The principal facts are stated in the opinion.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff in error.

W. H. Maxwell, and C. R. Meigs, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action by one partner (A. L. Anderson) against two others (N. B. Lord and C. C. Smith) for a final accounting and settlement of the copartnership affairs. After the commencement of the action Anderson released Smith from all liability to him growing out of the partnership matters, and then prosecuted the action against Lord alone. There had been a settlement by the parties up to a certain time, and this action was to enforce that settlement, and for a further and final settlement of the copartnership affairs. The only assignment of error in this court is, that "the district court overruled the motion for a new trial made by the plaintiff in error," defendant below. The motion for a new trial reads as follows:

Lord v. Anderson.

“And now comes the defendant, and moves the court for a new trial for the reasons, 1st, The judgment is not sustained by the evidence; 2d, The decision of the court is against the evidence; 3d, The judgment of the court was rendered and entered for a larger amount than was due the plaintiff.”

This motion was overruled, and the defendant below excepted; and this was the only exception taken to any ruling of the court below. The judgment of the court below was in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Lord for $826.50 principal sum, and $175 as interest; total $1,001.50. The findings of the court below were as follows:

The assets of the company was the Ottawa lot, taken by Lord at,...	$4,500 00
Cash turned over to Smith by Anderson,.....	200 00

For which sum, with interest on $557.50 from October 3d 1870, and on $275 from May 24th 1873, making a total of $1,001.50, judgment should be entered in favor of Anderson and against Lord.

The evidence upon which these findings were made was conflicting and contradictory. But there was sufficient evidence to sustain every material finding of fact made by the court. We cannot, as we have many times decided, weigh the conflicting and contradictory evidence in a case, and determine on which side the preponderance lies. All that we can do is, to see whether the findings of the court are sustained by sufficient evidence without taking into consideration any of the contradictory or adverse evidence. Some of the foregoing findings however are not findings of fact from the evidence, but are merely conclusions from the other findings, or conclusions of law. These findings, or rather conclusions, if we should find them erroneous, we can correct from the other findings, and from the admitted facts. The partnership-firm consisted of Anderson, Lord and Smith. Anderson furnished all the capital, and all were to share equally in the profits. The court below finds that Anderson furnished $2,571.50. The evidence would have sustained a finding for a greater amount. The court also finds that the profits of the partnership were $2,128.50, making the total assets of the company $4,700. Of this amount Anderson should have received back his original capital, to-wit, $2,571.50, and one-third of the profits, to-wit, $709.50; total, $3,281; and each of the other partners should have received one-third of the profits, that is, $709.50 each, or $1,419 in the aggregate. Now Anderson in fact received only $2,000 in available funds, and therefore should have received $1,281 more. While his two partners received in available assets $2,700, or $1,281 more than they were entitled to receive. They in fact received all the available assets of the company, which were $4,700, and then paid back to Anderson $2,000. They received this jointly. They acted together in the partial settlement by which this was done, as one person. Now, as Lord and Smith received $1,281 more than they were entitled to, and Anderson $1,281 less, it would seem that in a suit by Anderson against them he should recover that amount from them. But after this suit was commenced Anderson received from Smith $100, and discharged Smith from all further liability. This certainly ought to discharge one-half of the joint, or joint and several, or several liability of Lord and Smith. (Gen. Stat. 183, §5; id., pp. 605, 606.) As Lord and Smith were liable in the aggregate to Anderson for $1,281, this compromise and settlement with Smith should have left Lord liable for only one-half of $1,281, or $640.50. On account of said compromise the court below did deduct $454.50 from said $1,281, leaving as the amount found due from Lord to Anderson, and for which, with interest, the court below rendered judgment for $826.50. One hundred dollars of said amount deducted, the court below says, is "what Anderson received from Smith per Richmond." And $254.50 of said amount, the court says, is "half of the balance due on advancement, because of release of Smith." Said $254.50 does not however seem to be one-half of any sum mentioned in the case. It, with the $100, paid by Smith, would however come within 25 cents of being one-half the share of the profits of each partner. The other hundred dollars deducted was probably deducted through a mistake in deducting $254.50 from $1,181, and calling the remainder $826.50. We think the court below decided correctly in determining that something more than the $100 paid by Smith to Anderson should be deducted on account of the discharge of Smith; but we think the court was mistaken in the rule it adopted to determine just how much should be deducted. We think that when Smith was discharged, just one-half of the amount due from Lord and Smith should have been deducted.* The uncontradicted evidence in the case shows, that Smith got his full share of the amount in value that went to Lord and Smith. That matter was arranged satisfactorily between Lord and Smith. We cannot say that the court below erred in determining that the amount due Anderson drew interest, and in fixing the time when the same commenced to draw interest. We have not scrutinized the question however very closely, as no possible error of the court in this respect could make much difference in the amount of the judgment that should be rendered. Anderson testifies that on October 8d 1870, he had already advanced $2,379.34 for the company. Lord at that time paid him $2,000 of the amount, and, as Anderson testifies, "said he would send balance of $379 to me [Anderson] next day." This $379 was evidently then due. There may have been other "unreasonable and vexatious delays of payment or settlement of accounts." (Gen. Stat. 525, ch. 51, §2.) We cannot even tell from the record brought to this court when this present action was commenced. And of course, it devolves upon the plaintiff in error to show error. It is now difficult for us to determine from the findings of the court below what amount should draw interest from October 3d 1870, and what amount from May 24th 1873, as we have come to the conclusion that the amount for which judgment should be rendered should be only $640.50 instead of $826.50 as found by the court below. The court below finds the "Balance due Anderson $826.50," "with interest on $557.50 from October 3d 1870, and on $275 from May 24th 1873." Now, the aggregate of these two last-mentioned sums is more than $640.50, and even more than $826.50; and hence we hardly know how to divide the sum of $640.50 so as to make the right amount draw interest from October 3d 1870, and the right amount from May 24th 1873. But as it is the duty of the plaintiff in error to show error, and as we think he has not done so in this respect, we shall allow the court below to render judgment for interest on any sum not exceeding $557.50 from October 3d 1870, and interest on the balance of $640.50 from May 24th 1873.

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

[ *THE amount due ($1,281) was not admitted by defendants, but was ascertained at the trial, and from the testimony. The amount paid to plaintiff before trial (by the released defendant, Smith,) was $100 only. Of course, the plaintiff was entitled to recover from Lord only the one-half of said $1,281 joint debt found due. He compromised with Smith for less than half at his peril. But take another case, (suggested by a referee's report recently made in an action in the Shawnee district court:) Suppose a plaintiff should claim that a specific sum, say $1,200, was due him from two defendants; that one defendant, without knowing what sum was in fact due, should pay one-half the amount claimed, ($600,) and should be thereupon released; that the other defendant should resist the plaintiff's claim, and on trial it should be ascertained that the amount actually due from both defendants at the commencement of the suit was $400, and no more, and it should be shown that the released defendant had paid plaintiff $600 since suit brought: how then? The plaintiff by his settlement with one defendant has received the whole debt due him from both, and $200 in excess! Would he be also entitled to a judgment against the remaining defendant for $200, the one-half of the ascertained actual joint debt of $400? If so, then he obtains $800 where only $400 were due. "A creditor is entitled to payment but once."—REPORTER.]

The judgment of the court below will not be reversed, but the cause will be remanded with the order that the judgment be modified so as to correspond with this opinion.

ACTION by Bent as plaintiff, against Philbrick and wife, to foreclose a mortgage. Trial at the August Term 1874. Verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $596. The amount claimed by plaintiff was $650, with interest, protest damages, and protest fees. And because the verdict and judgment were too small, plaintiff brings the case here on error. The facts and proceedings are stated in the opinion.

Pryor & Kager, for plaintiff.

H. T. Sumner, and A. J. Miller, for defendants.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action to foreclose a note and mortgage. The note was payable to Brown Bros., was indorsed by them to one R. B. Waite, and by him to the plaintiff. All this, as admitted by the pleadings, took place before maturity. The answer, admitting that $500 was due, (that being the amount actually borrowed and received by defendants,) and offering a judgment, alleged that the balance of the note, $150, was for illegal and usurious interest, and that the plaintiff "took and received said note with full and complete knowledge of the nature and terms of said usurious and illegal contract." As no reply appears in the record, it would seem as though there were nothing to try, and that the court, upon the pleadings, should have entered judgment for the $500 and twelve-per-cent. interest. (Laws of 1872, p. 284, §§ 1 and 2.) But the case was tried by both parties as though the allegations of new matter in the answer was denied; and we shall take the case upon that basis, as in our judgment, upon that basis, there was such error as requires a reversal. If there really be no reply on file, the trial court can in its discretion permit the filing of a reply upon such terms as may be just and proper.

Counsel for plaintiff in error call our attention to a dozen or more matters in which they claim the court erred. It is unnecessary for us to notice all these in detail. It is obvious that, upon the supposition that the reply was a simple denial, the defendants were called upon to establish two propositions—first, that the amount of the note in excess of $500 was for illegal and usurious interest, and second, that the plaintiff bought with knowledge. And testimony which tended to prove either fact was competent, irrespective of the question whether the other fact were proven or not. Counsel on the trial objected to the admission of a good deal of testimony tending to prove the first fact, as incompetent, because the second fact was not proved; and now present these matters to this court as points of error. It seems unnecessary to more than state the facts to show the correctness of the ruling.

Again, counsel insist that the court improperly permitted the jury to separate during the progress of the trial. As it does not appear that they were permitted to separate except during the intervals of the session of the court, and before retiring to consider of their verdict, it is difficult to see wherein there was any improper separation.

It appears that in addition to the general verdict the plaintiff requested the court to submit to the jury certain questions of fact, and require answers thereto. This the court refused. It seems to us that these questions were pertinent and appropriate, and should have been submitted. The first ran directly to the point of plaintiff's knowledge of the usurious contract at the time of receiving the note. This was one of the essential matters in dispute; and a specific question in reference thereto the court had no discretion to refuse. The law in force at the time is to be found in ch. 91 of the Laws of 1874. That provides that, "in all cases the jury shall render a general verdict; and the court shall, in any case, at the request of the parties thereto, or either of them, in addition to the general verdict, direct the jury to find upon particular questions of fact, to be stated in writing by the party or parties requesting the same." This does not give a discretion to the court, but a right to the parties. We do not of course understand the law as compelling the court to submit every question presented, even though irrelevant, immaterial, or frivolous; but where a question is submitted as to a particular fact which is pertinent to the issues, and necessarily to be determined by the jury, the court has no discretion to refuse. *L. FORECLOSURE of mortgage, brought by "John Sarahass, William Johnson, and George Peacock, Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Wyandotte and Quindaro Mission, Kansas Conference, plaintiffs," against Lucy B. Armstrong, defendant. Defendant gave to John Sarahass, Jacob Whitecrow, William Johnson and John Brown, as trustees, etc., her note for $1,100 and interest, on which she had paid $62 as interest. The defense was, that "said plaintiffs are not the trustees of the M. E. Church, Wyandotte and Quindaro Mission, Kansas Conference, nor have they any power or authority to collect any money or transact any business for said church." Trial at the March Term 1874. The court found, as a conclusion of fact, "that the plaintiffs Sarahass, Johnson and Peacock are not the lawful trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church for the Wyandottes, to sue for and collect the note set out in their petition against defendant, for the reason that they had all emigrated beyond the bounds of the Kansas Conference, and away from the locality where they resided in Wyandotte county, Kansas, at the time said note and mortgage were executed by defendant"—and thereupon gave judgment in favor of the defendant for costs. The plaintiffs appeal, and bring the case here on error.

D. B. Hadley, for plaintiffs.

Cook & Sharp, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: In July 1866, congress enacted as follows: "That for refunding to Jacob Whitecrow, John Sarahass, and others, trustees and stewards of the Wyandotte and Quindaro Mission of the Kansas Conference of Methodist Episcopal Church, for the destruction of their church-building and library, $4,680, to be applied in rebuilding said buildings, and inclosing the graveyards of the Wyandotte Indians in the state of Kansas, and that the sum hereby appropriated be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated." (14 U. S. Stat. at Large, 309.) In 1868 the said trustees loaned a portion of the money to defendant, and took her note and mortgage as security therefor. Subsequently the Wyandotte nation removed to the Indian territory. The same religious organization was preserved there, and these plaintiffs are the successors in office as trustees of those who made the loan, at least they are so recognized by the Wyandotte Indians. Prior to the removal the organization had two places of worship, one in Quindaro, and the other in Wyandotte, and kept up services in both. It owned the building in the former place, but not in the latter place. It sold the building it owned, and from that time the preaching and meetings in Quindaro have ceased. It does not appear in whom the title to the building in Wyandotte was vested; but since the removal, the society in Wyandotte is wholly a white society, and known as the "Wyandotte Methodist Episcopal Church North." It preserves the book of records kept by the W. & Q. Mission of the Kansas Conference, and that record shows an election prior to the commencement of this action, of five trustees, all white men, and two of them residents in Wyandotte county. It does not appear that the money granted by congress was ever used in the erection of a church-building in lieu of the one destroyed, nor does it appear what disposition was made of the balance of the money granted.

This is about as full a statement of the facts as can be gathered from the case made. And upon these we remark, that the argument of the counsel for defendant in error, as to the general organization of the Methodist Episcopal church, its administration and control over local churches of that denomination, and their property, cannot be considered by us, for the facts concerning the same are not in the case made, and they are not matters of which the court can take judicial notice.

It seems to us that the grant from congress was to a church organization among and of Wyandotte Indians, and by virtue of the governmental protection over these wards of the nation; that it was in no sense a grant to the great Methodist church to assist it in its missionary work. The Wyandotte church, as an Indian church, and not as a member of the Methodist denomination, was the beneficiary. The grant was not local, to the Methodist church in Wyandotte county, but tribal to the Wyandotte Indian church, whether that society remained in Kansas, or moved elsewhere. It was something which attached to and vested in an organization of the Wyandotte tribe of Indians. Whoever therefore are recognized by the Wyandotte nation as the official representatives of that organization, are entitled to the possession of this fund, and may maintain an action to recover it.

A. T. & Santa Fe Rld. Co. v. Williams.

For these reasons the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded with instructions to grant a new trial.

A. T. & S. F. RAILROAD CO. v. JOS. WILLIAMS, Treasurer.

SCHOOL-DISTRICT TAXES, To Pay Bonds, and Interest; Tax of 55 Mills held Valid.

On March 5th 1873, the county superintendent of public instruction of Butler county reduced School District No. 58 of said county, by a change of its boundaries, so that it contained only $14,672 worth of taxable property. On June 14th 1873 a school-district bond of said district, and interest on it and other bonds, became due, amounting in the aggregate to $300, for the payment of which bond and interest $67.39 had been provided by the taxation of the previous year. On June 14th 1874, another bond of said district, and other interest, would become due, amounting to the sum of $280. On the first Monday of September 1873, the county board of said county levied a tax of 55 mills on the dollar, on the taxable property of said school district, to raise funds with which to pay the said bonds and interest coming due in 1873 and 1874, and to provide for delinquencies: Held, That such taxation is not void.

INJUNCTION, brought by the Railroad Company, to restrain the collection of a tax. The district court, at the August Term 1874, overruled a demurrer to the answer of the defendant, and gave judgment against the plaintiff for costs. The plaintiff brings the case here for review. The material facts are stated in the opinion.

Ross Burns, and J. G. Waters, for plaintiff.

A. L. Redden, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company against Joseph Williams, county treasurer of Butler county, to restrain the collection of certain taxes. It appears from the record that on June 14th 1872, School District No. 58 of said county issued five bonds for $200 each, to become due in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, and to draw interest from date at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. On March 5th 1873, the county superintendent of public instruction detached a portion of the territory of said school district from the district and attached the same to another district. By so doing school district No. 58 was left with only $14,672 worth of taxable property within its boundaries; and a two-per-cent. tax levied thereon would raise only $293.44. In 1872 a tax of $67.39 (and only that amount) was levied with which to pay the amount of the bond and interest coming due on June 14th 1873. In 1873 a tax of 55 mills on the dollar was levied on the property of said school district for the purpose of raising funds with which to pay the balance of said amount coming due June 14th 1873, and also to pay the amount coming due June 14th 1874. This 55-mill tax is the tax of which the railroad company now complains. They claim that said tax is void for the following reasons: They claim that the county superintendent of public instruction had no authority, under any circumstances whatever, to diminish the territorial area of said school district to such an extent that it would require a tax to be levied on the property of the district for any given year of more than two per cent. on the taxable property of such district to raise funds for the payment of all bonded indebtedness due and coming due against such district for that and previous years. They claim that the county superintendent did so diminish or attempt to diminish said school district, and that said 55-mill tax was levied on only the property of such diminished district. And therefore, as the tax was not levied on all the property of the district, as the district existed before the change, they claim that the tax is void. They also claim that said 55-mill tax was excessive; that it was more than enough to pay all the bonded indebtedness of the district for the years 1873 and 1874; and therefore, that it was void. We think they are mistaken in their legal conclusions. If the superintendent when he diminished the district had looked to the year 1873, and that year only, he would have found that during that year the amount of the bond and interest coming due would have been $300, and that $67.39 of that amount had been provided for by a tax of the previous year, leaving only $232.61 to be provided for by a tax for the year 1873. But if the superintendent had looked to the year 1874, and to that year only, then he would have found that the amount of the bond and interest coming due during that year would have been only $280. Now, a tax of two per cent. on the taxable property of the diminished district would have raised, as we have before stated, $293.44, more than enough to pay the amount to be provided for for either of said years. We think however that the superintendent should have looked to the year 1874, and to that year only. It was the duty of the board of county commissioners of Butler county to have levied on the first Monday of September 1872 a tax on the taxable property of said school district sufficient to pay the amount coming due in 1873, to-wit, the said sum of $300, which sum was to become due June 14th 1873. (Gen. Stat. 1044, § 72; Laws of 1872, p. 172, § 3.)

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

A. T. & Santa Fé Rld. Co. v. Williams.

They should not have waited until September 1873 to levy a tax to pay a bond and interest which were to become due on June 14th 1873. On the first Monday of September 1873 they should have levied a tax on the then taxable property of the district to pay the amount of the bond and interest coming due on June 14th 1874. And this is the tax and taxable property that the superintendent should have looked to when he changed the boundaries of the district in March 1873. The amount coming due on June 14th 1874, was, as we have before stated, $280, and a two-per-cent. tax on the taxable property of the diminished district would have raised that amount. We therefore think that the action of the county superintendent in diminishing said district was not void, and therefore the said tax of 55 mills on the dollar is not void.

For the purposes of this case we shall assume that said 55-mill tax was levied by the board of county commissioners on the taxable property of said school district on the first Monday of September 1873, although the record does not show definitely when it was levied, nor by whom. Said tax may possibly be slightly excessive, but still it is certainly not so much so as to render the tax void. It would take about 20 mills on the dollar to raise an amount sufficient to pay the indebtedness becoming due in 1873, and about 20 mills more to raise an amount sufficient to pay the indebtedness becoming due in 1874; and it would probably take about 10 mills more to cover delinquencies. If an amount more than necessary to pay the amount of the bonds and interest coming due in 1873 and 1874 should be collected before such last-mentioned amounts became due, which is not probable, the excess could and would be applied in payments of the other bonds and the interest as the same should afterward become due. Sec. 5 of "An act to enable school districts in the state of Kansas to issue bonds," approved February 26th 1866, (Gen. Stat. 940,) is § 1 of "An act to amend an act to enable school districts in the state of Kansas to issue bonds," approved February 27th 1871, (Laws of 1871, page 80,) and is § 101 of the School Laws of 1871. (Supt. McCarty's Edition, p. 29;) and it was repeated

Opinion of the Court.

February 29th—March 21st—1872; (Laws of 1872, p. 173, § 6.) Hence said § 5, or § 1, or § 101, whichever it may be called, ~~can have~~ but little force or influence ~~in the~~ decision of this case. We suppose that § 1, chapter 110, of the Laws of 1872, (page 248,) amending § 10 of article 2, ch. 92 of the Gen. Stat., (page 915,) was, on March 5th 1873, and still is, in force. Said section provides that the county superintendent shall not reduce the territory of any school district so that more than two per cent. "upon its property-valuation shall be required to meet accruing interest and matured bonds." This is a guide purely to the county superintendent. The § 101 mentioned in that section, which relates to the duties of certain other officers, was repealed March 21st 1872, as we have already stated, by the act of February 29th 1872. Since March 21st 1872, there has been no statute limiting the amount of the tax which the county commissioners might or could levy on the property of a school district to pay the maturing bonds and interest of the district. (Laws of 1872, ch. 94, pp. 172, 173.)

There are several questions involved in this case which we have not discussed or decided, some of which might perhaps be equally fatal to the plaintiff's cause of action.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

1. NEGLIGENCE; *Fires Set by Locomotive Engine; Condition and Management of Engine. In an action to recover damages for property destroyed by fire communicated from an engine, in which it appears that the engine in passing over a distance of a few miles, with an ordinary load, set the adjacent grass and stubble on fire several times; that though this engine had been backward and forward over the same road during all of that fall, and though other engines were passing and repassing, some upon the same day, yet no fires had been communicated other than these upon this day from this engine; that engines in good order, and properly supplied with precautions to prevent the escape of fire, and properly and carefully managed, seldom communicate fire to the adjacent grass and stubble; and where it appears that something seemingly heavier than the smoke, and separating from it, was seen to be thrown out of the smoke-stack, and fall into the neighboring stubble, and almost immediately the stubble was in a blaze, and thereafter in this burnt stubble a piece of coal is found surrounded by ashes, and apparently the remnant of a piece of coal six inches in diameter which had been there burning; and where the conductor of the train, at the first station after passing these fires, telegraphed to the assistant superintendent of the road "that the engine was setting the country on fire;" and where it appears from the testimony of experts that where an engine starts a succession of fires, and others operated along the same road under similar circumstances of wind and weather do not start any, the difference can be reasonably accounted for only upon the supposition of defect in the construction, condition, or management of the engine doing the damage: Held, That a verdict finding negligence would be sustained, although it appeared that a very strong wind was blowing at the time of the fires, that several competent witnesses who examined the engine at and shortly after the fire testified that it was in perfect order and supplied with the best appliances for preventing the escape of fire, that as many testified that the engineer was a competent and careful engineer, and that he testified that he used all possible care and precautions to prevent the escape of sparks and fire upon that day, and although there was no direct testimony contradicting these witnesses, and that it was impossible for any one from the testimony to point out in what respect, if at all, the engine was defective, or out of order, or the engineer guilty of negligence. testimony, it is the duty of the court to compel an answer, and refuse to receive a verdict until one is made, yet, where the question is not as to one of the issuable, essential, and principal facts, but runs to one of the minor and subdivided facts into which every principal fact may be resolved and reresolved almost indefinitely, and the entire testimony leaves in uncertainty the existence of several of such minor facts (including the one inquired about) either of which would be sufficient to sustain the general conclusion reached, the court may sometimes properly receive and sustain a verdict where the only answer to the question is, that the jury do not know. [Morrow v. Comm'rs Saline Co., 21-484; Map Co. v. Jones, 27-184.] But it should never do so when it is evident that a determination of the fact is essential to the conclusion reached in the general verdict, nor where it is apparent that the jury by improperly professing ignorance have sought to leave the facts in such uncertainty as unduly to hinder any subsequent inquiry into the correctness of their verdict.

Error from Lyon District Court.

CAMPBELL sued the Railroad Company, claiming in his petition that, on the 12th of October 1871, the defendant while running a train of cars through the county of Lyon on its line of railroad, propelled by a steam locomotive, by reason of the negligent and careless management of said locomotive, and by reason of said locomotive being out of repair, and in an unsafe condition, fire was set to the grass on plaintiff's land in said county adjoining the track, and burned up and destroyed 250 rods of fence, 75 tons of hay, 80 tons of straw, 37 apple trees, and a grove of cottonwood trees, to his damage $1,100. The answer of the company is a general denial, with a special averment that, on the day of the injury complained of, the locomotive alleged to have set out the fire was in good condition and operated in a careful manner by competent and careful servants of defendant. Trial at the June Term 1874. The case was tried by a jury. The following is the charge to the jury, referred to in the opinion:

“Gentlemen of the Jury: This is an action for damages caused by fire originating from sparks emitted from one of the locomotive engines of the defendant, on the 12th of October 1871, by reason, as plaintiff alleges, of the said engine being out of repair, and being in an unsafe and dangerous condition, and by the unskillful, negligent and careless manner in which said engine was managed by defendant's servants. The defendant company answers by a general denial.

"You are the exclusive judges of the evidence, and of the facts proved; also, of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight to be given to their testimony.

"In order to recover in this action; the plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of testimony, first, that his property was, on the 12th of October 1871, damaged by fire originating from one of the locomotive engines of the defendant; second, that said fire was caused, either by the engine causing said fire being out of repair, or from being in dangerous or an unsafe condition, or that said fire was caused either by the careless, unskillful, incompetent, or negligent manner in which said engine was managed by the servants of said defendant at the time of the occurrence of said fire. The gist of the action is, negligence on the part of defendant; and unless the plaintiff satisfies you by competent evidence, that the fire complained of was caused by the negligent conduct of the defendant's servants, or some one of them, or by a defective engine, he cannot recover.

"Negligence may be shown by circumstances; and in this case it would be unreasonable to require the plaintiff to show by direct evidence a defect in the engine, or mismanagement of the same, these facts being peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant. Therefore, if you are satisfied from the evidence that the defendant's engine causing the fire complained of caused two or more other fires on the same day, and under similar circumstances as to wind and weather, and that the ordinary working of an engine under like circumstances does not ordinarily produce such results, or that engines properly constructed and properly managed do not ordinarily under like circumstances produce such results, or that other engines of the defendant passed over the same road where the fires were set, on the same day, and under similar circumstances as to wind and weather, and caused no fires, these facts and circumstances would be sufficient to establish, prima facie, negligence; and unless the defendant satisfies you from the evidence that its engine causing the fires was properly constructed, in good order, and properly managed, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover his damages caused by said fire, as shown by the evidence.

"If you believe from the evidence that the fire complained of was caused by reason of the defendant's engine being out of repair, or in an unsafe condition, or by the careless or unskillful manner in which it was managed by the servants of defendant, you will find for the plaintiff.

"If you believe from the evidence that at the time the fire complained of was set by the defendant's engine, that said engine was properly constructed, in good repair, and skillfully and carefully managed by competent servants, you will be justified in attributing the cause of said fire to some unavoidable accident, and will find for the defendant."

Verdict and judgment in favor of Campbell for full amount claimed. New trial refused, and the Railroad Company brings the case here on error.

Ruggles & Sterry, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action by defendant in error to recover damages for property consumed by fire, claimed to have been started from one of the engines of the railroad company. The fire was the same as that which destroyed the property of Wm. M. Stanford, a judgment in whose favor therefor was in 1874 sustained by this court. (A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kas. 354.) There are also three other actions now pending in this court to recover damages done by the same fire, or fires from the same engine upon the same day. Of course, as to all questions then decided, nothing need now be said. Many of the questions in that case do not arise in this; and some additional matters are here presented.

And the first question we shall examine is, as to whether the verdict is contrary to the evidence. And here the only matter of difficulty is as to negligence on the part of the company. The evidence thereon may be briefly stated as follows: There is the testimony of some fifteen witnesses who saw the train drawn by the engine No. 9 passing from Emporia westward, and immediately after it passed along saw fires starting in the prairie grass beside the track. The exact number of fires started, as seen by the witnesses, does not clearly appear; but there were quite a number—one at Emporia, several near the county line between Lyon and Chase counties, and one at least near Cottonwood station. Though trains were passing and repassing over this road during that fall, some upon the same day, it appears that they started no fires. Several competent witnesses testified that an engine in good condition, and well managed, seldom throws out sparks so as to start fires along the road, and that if two engines passed over a road upon the same day, under the same conditions of wind and weather, and one started no fires while the other started a succession of them, this difference could be reasonably accounted for only on the supposition that the latter was badly constructed or managed. One witness testified to seeing something coming from the smoke-stack of this engine, a little heavier than smoke, separating from the smoke and falling into a field, and almost immediately thereafter a fire starting up in the surrounding stubble. He thought this object looked like a string of dust, as he expressed it. He was at the time standing some little distance from the engine, but in plain view. Another witness who went into this field, after the fire, found there a burnt piece of coal about the size of half a dollar, surrounded by ashes and apparently the remnant of a larger piece of coal, one (say six inches in diameter) which had there been burning. The conductor of the train, who had noticed the fires, when it reached Cottonwood Falls telegraphed the assistant superintendent of the road that the engine was setting the country on fire, and asked what he should do, and was told to go ahead. On the other hand, it appeared that a strong wind was blowing that day, the engineer thinking it the strongest he had ever run a train against. Some five witnesses, apparently experts, and competent, who examined the engine at or shortly after these fires, testified that she was in good order, and supplied with all the best appliances for preventing the escape of fire. As many testified that the engineer was a competent and careful engineer; and he testified that he took all possible precautions on that day to prevent injury from escaping sparks. No defect in the engine was suggested by any witness; nothing pointed out as wanting to complete the most perfect arrangement for guarding against accidents or injury. There was not a syllable of testimony denying the competency and prudence of the engineer, and nothing tending to show wherein he failed of the utmost possible care upon that occasion. Upon this testimony can a finding of negligence be supported? That the evidence of the plaintiff established a prima facie case of negligence, will not, under the prior rulings of this court, be doubted; but it is insisted strenuously that this raises a mere presumption which may be sufficient in the absence of other testimony, but which falls to the ground when opposed by clear and positive testimony as to the actual condition and management. Presumptions may be good in the absence of testimony, but cannot overthrow it. Here all the testimony is to the effect that the engine was in good condition, and supplied with all known appliances for preventing injury. Upon what may a jury find that it was not in such condition, and so supplied? Who can name a thing that was wanting? Who can tell what was out of order? Is a jury at liberty to find against the only direct and positive testimony? And if so, of what avail is it to introduce testimony? And so as to the conduct of the engineer: who can name anything which he ought to have done and did not do? in what respect did he omit care? in what was he negligent? In other words, what more could the company, if possessed of all the facts it now possesses, have done to prevent the injury? What do the jury say ought or could have been done? Must not the conclusion be inevitable, that this injury was the result of accident, and not of negligence? Something which could not have been foreseen nor guarded against, and is not now known? On the other hand, it is said that all or nearly all of the witnesses for the defendant are or were in its employ, and may be presumed to be influenced to some extent thereby; that the sole witness as to the care and prudence of the engineer, is the engineer himself; the one upon whom all blame must rest, if blame there be, and whose strong interest therefore would be to show no negligence; one too, who would be least likely to see negligence in any act of his—for it is not in human nature for one readily to perceive faults or omissions in one's own conduct; that his own testimony shows that he is not perfectly clear and accurate in all his recollections, and that a jury might properly hesitate to give the fullest credence to his statements as to his own care and conduct. More than that, the marked difference between the results that followed the passage of this engine upon this day, and those that followed its passage upon other days, and that of other engines upon the same and other days, is too great to be fairly and reasonably attributable to accident, and that too in the very judgment of the experts called by defendant. While the testimony may not show in what particular the company was guilty of negligence, yet the results of the running of the engine are clear and satisfactory evidence of negligence somewhere; and a jury was clearly justified in so finding. We have given the testimony, which is quite voluminous, a careful examination, and notwithstanding the undoubted fact that ordinarily direct and positive testimony as to actual condition and conduct is entitled to more weight than mere presumptions from results, we are compelled to hold that there is abundant testimony to uphold this verdict. We cannot be otherwise than strongly impressed with the belief that there was negligence in the running of engine No. 9 upon that day, although unable to point out the particular matter of negligence.

A. T. & Santa Fé Rld. Co. v. Campbell.

The suggestions already made are decisive of the second question we shall consider. In addition to the general verdict certain questions were presented to the jury, and they were instructed to answer them. Six questions were thus presented by the plaintiff, and thirty by the defendant. The six were fully and specifically answered, while some six or seven of the thirty received only the answer, "Don't know." The following are the questions thus answered:

"5th. Was said engine No. 9 in good repair on October 12th 1871, and provided with all the most approved appliances then in use for preventing injuries, by the escape of fire and sparks therefrom, to property or combustible material upon or adjacent to the line of the railroad?" Answer—"Don't know."

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

"6th. If engine No. 9 was not in good repair on October 12th 1871, and was not provided with such appliances mentioned in question No. 5, wherein was said engine out of repair, or defective, or wanting as to such appliances?" Answer—"Don't know."

"24th. If the fire was started from engine No. 9, how was it so started? by sparks from the stack, or in some other way?" Answer—"Don't know."

"25th. If by other means than sparks, what? Answer—"Don't know."

"26th. If the engineer of No. 9 reduced the speed of his train to about 10 miles per hour, ran with a slow or dead fire, and with one of the dampers shut and closed all day on October 12th 1871, were these precautions all that careful management required him to take?" Answer—"No."

"27th. If no, what other precaution should he have taken?" Answer—"Don't know."

"29th. Was engine No. 9 properly and carefully managed at the time of passing the place of fire, on October 12th 1871?" Answer—"No."

"30th. If no, in what particular?" Answer—"Don't know."

Now, if a jury may properly find negligence on the part of the company, without being able to specify in what particular the negligence consisted, it follows that the only answer which sometimes they can give to a question as to negligence in a particular matter is, that they do not know. And the fact that testimony has been received as to that particular matter may not affect the propriety of the answer. In this very case, we think the jury might properly say that they were satisfied that this injury resulted from negligence, and still, after hearing defendant's witnesses in reference to the condition of the engine, and conduct of the engineer, be unable to decide whether the fault was with the engine, or the engineer. True, all the direct testimony points to an engine in good order, and suitably supplied; but the jury are not limited to this direct testimony, and upon it bound to find the fact accordingly. Suppose, for instance, the question were as to the sanity of a party at the time of a particular act, and half a dozen experts, more or less interested, testify as to his sanity: must a jury find a party sane, upon this, the only direct testimony upon the question, when the act itself carries upon its face the most satisfactory evidence of the actor's derangement? Or suppose one's field or grass is burned with fire from a neighbor's premises, and it appears that that neighbor was, prior to the fire, smoking a cigar, and also having a bonfire; and it is evident to the jury that by reason of distance and other facts the fire could not have been communicated without gross negligence on the neighbor's part, and yet it does not appear whether the fire was communicated by the cigar, or the bonfire: may not the jury find the neighbor guilty of negligence, and yet in response to a question as to whether the fire was communicated from the cigar, answer that they do not know? While the rule is general, that wherever a question of fact is pertinent, and an answer can be deduced from the testimony, it is the duty of the court to compel an answer, and refuse to receive a verdict until one is made, yet, where the question is not as to one of the issuable, essential, and principal facts, but runs to one of the minor and subdivided facts into which every principal fact may be resolved and reresolved almost indefinitely, and the entire testimony leaves in uncertainty the existence of several facts, including the one inquired about, either of which would be sufficient to sustain the general conclusion reached, there may be cases in which a court may properly receive and sustain a verdict where the only answer to a question is, that the jury do not know. These cases are not common, and a court should always scrutinize with great care a verdict accompanied by such answers to questions, and should never receive or sustain one when it is evident that a determination of the fact is essential to the conclusion reached in the general verdict, nor where it is apparent that the jury by improperly professing ignorance have sought to leave the facts in such uncertainty as unduly to hinder any subsequent inquiry into the correctness of their verdict.

In reference to the instructions we deem it unnecessary to notice them in detail. The court presented its views of the law in a charge of its own preparation, and refused to give any of the instructions asked by either side. In this charge we think the law is correctly stated, and with sufficient fullness and detail. Upon the whole case we see no error justifying a reversal, and the judgment must be affirmed.

An examination of the records in the cases of the same plaintiff in error against Joseph Rickabaugh, and against Stephen Shaw, shows that they are so nearly like the case at bar that no separate opinion is required for them, and they also will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

H. D. SHEPARD v. O. H. PRATT, et al.

1. TESTIMONY; Facts; Opinions of Witness. A witness should state the facts, and not his conclusions from the facts. So, where in a deposition a witness, after testifying that he heard a conversation between certain parties, proceeds as follows: "From such conversation I learned," and then gives, not his recollection of what the parties stated, but what he understood was the result of the conversation, held, that there was no error in ruling out that portion of the deposition. [City of Atchison v. King, 9-550; DaLee v. Blackburn, 11-190; Eagle Manf. Co. v. Jennings, 29-657.]
2. LOST PAPERS; Diligence; Secondary Evidence. Where secondary evidence is sought to be introduced of the contents of an instrument claimed to be lost, it is not sufficient for a witness to give his opinion as to the character and extent of the search made for it; he should disclose the facts concerning the search, that the court may determine whether a sufficient one has been made. [Lee v. Birmingham, 30-312; and see Guthrie v. Merrill, 4-187; Johnson v. Mathews, 5-118; Shaw v. Mason, 10-184; Grant v. Pendery, 15-236; City of Waterville v. Hugan, et al., 18-473; Brock v. Cottingham, et al., 23-383; C. B. U. P. Rld. Co. v. Waters, 24-504; Stainbrook v. Drawyer, 25-383.]
3. PARTNERSHIP; Sharing Profits. A sharing of the profits is not always conclusive evidence of a partnership.
4. ——— Profits, as Compensation for Services. Where a party without any interest in the property is, by agreement, to receive as compensation for his services, and only as compensation therefor, a certain proportion of the profits, and is neither held out to the world as a partner, nor through the negligence of the owner permitted to hold himself out as partner, he is not a partner, either as to the owner or third parties.

Shepard v. Pratt.

5. INTEREST; PLEADING; Liquidated Demands. Wherever a demand is liquidated, and a sum certain is claimed, no interest is recoverable unless claimed, and unless the time from which it is to be computed is stated in the petition. [Green v. Dunn, 5-254; Wyandotte & K. C. Gas Co. v. Schliefer, 22-468; Hiatt v. Parker, 29-771.]
6. ——— Unliquidated Demands. It is unnecessary in most actions where the demand is unliquidated, and sounds wholly in damages, and where there is but a single cause of action, to state specifically and in amounts the different elements or items which go to make up the sum total of the damages. It is enough to claim so much in gross, as damages for the wrongs done.
7. ——— Verdict; Measure of Damages. In such a case, the only limitations upon the size of the verdict are, that it shall not exceed the gross amount claimed, and that the jury in arriving at it shall have had regard to the true measure of damages.
8. TROVER; Measure of Damages. In actions in the nature of trover for the conversion of personal property, the measure of damages is ordinarily the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with interest thereon to the date of the verdict.
9. ——— When Interest is Not Recoverable. Where a petition alleges the conversion of a definite number of cattle, and that said cattle were of a given average value, and that by such conversion the plaintiffs were damaged in a specified amount which is the product of the average value multiplied by the number of cattle for which amount judgment is asked, and makes no claim for interest, and where upon the trial it appears that only a portion of the cattle charged in the petition were taken and converted by the defendant, and that the cattle taken were of the average value charged, and there is no testimony tending to show that they were of a higher value, held, that the jury were not warranted in a verdict for an amount larger than the product of the average value multiplied by the number taken, even though said amount was reached by computing interest, and that a verdict for such larger amount was excessive.

Error from Morris District Court.

TROVER, brought by C. H. Pratt and D. A. Painter, to recover for the taking and conversion of cattle. All the necessary facts are stated in the opinion. The plaintiffs had judgment, at the October Term 1874, for $3,998.81, and costs, and Shepard brings the case here on error.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

James Rogers, and McClure & Humphrey, for plaintiff in error.

Ruggles & Sterry, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The defendants in error brought their action against plaintiff in error to recover the value of certain cattle claimed to belong to them, and to have been converted by him to his own use. That the cattle at one time belonged to them, and that Shepard did get possession of and convert them, are undisputed facts. It appears that they made an arrangement with one Joseph Wheat to take the cattle and winter them. While so in possession, Wheat transferred them to Shepard. Shepard claims that Wheat was a partner of theirs, with perfect legal right therefore to dispose of the cattle; or at the least, that they so acted and held him out to the world that he and others were justified in regarding him as a partner, and treating with him as such. Pratt and Painter claim that Wheat was simply employed to take care of and feed the cattle through the winter, was not a partner, and had no right of disposal. Three classes of questions are presented by counsel for plaintiff in error.

I. It is insisted that the court erred in ruling out portions of two depositions. In the deposition of R. A. Wheat the witness testified that he was present at a conversation between the plaintiffs and Joseph Wheat, and then the deposition reads: "From the conversation I learned that the said Pratt and Painter and Joseph Wheat had entered into a partnership," etc. This was stricken out, and properly so. It does not purport to be his recollection of the conversation, but his conclusions from it. The use of the word, "learned," might not of itself be decisive; but the further language shows that the witness is not trying to give the language of the various parties to that conversation, or the substance of it, but is simply giving the results, as he understood them. This is manifestly wrong. City of Atchison v. King, 9 Kas. 550; DeLes v. Black- burn, 11 Kas. 190. Again, as to the deposition of John F. Gregory these are the facts: The witness had testified substantially that in April 1872, Joseph Wheat brought him an order signed Pratt & Painter, to the best of his recollection, which was written by and in the handwriting of D. A. Painter, one of defendants in error; and then follows the part objected to and ruled out, as follows:

Shepard v. Pratt.

"I have made strict and diligent search for said order, but cannot find the same; and as far as I can ascertain, it is lost. Said order was directed to me as agent for the firm of Gregory, Strader & Co., who were at that time engaged in the live-stock commission business, and said order was in substance as follows:" [Here follows witness' description of the contents of the order, also stricken out.]

Here too we see no error. The witness has substituted his own opinion of the character of the search for those facts upon which alone the court can determine whether a sufficient search has been made. No one can tell from this statement where the witness searched; when, or how long he searched; where and when he last saw the order; or any other facts concerning its loss. No sufficient foundation was laid for secondary evidence of its contents. Johnson v. Mathews, 5 Kas. 118.

II. A second class of objections runs to the instructions. It is said that the court erred in refusing instructions Nos. 5, 6 and 7 asked by defendant, and in giving instruction No. 1 asked by plaintiffs. With reference to the instructions refused, it may be said, that inasmuch as the record does not purport to contain all the instructions this court cannot affirm error, because they may have been refused because already once given. DaLee v. Blackburn, 11 Kas. 190; Ferguson v. Graves, 12 Kas. 39. Again, as a matter of fact, said fifth and seventh instructions had already been given in substance, though not in the same language, and the court was under no duty to repeat them, or to clothe the same ideas in different language and then present them. By so doing, it is sometimes true, that the principles of law or their application to the case in hearing are made clearer to the jury; but as often, if not oftener, such practice tends to confuse rather than instruct. At any rate, it is well settled that the court commits no error in refusing to present a principle of law to the jury a second time, or in different language. Gillett v. Corum, 7 Kas. 156; Kansas Ins. Co. v. Berry, 8 Kas. 159; Abeles v. Cohen, 8 Kas. 180. As to said 6th instruction, it is not true that an equal division of the profits always and under all circumstances constitute a partnership. While such may be one of the tests of a partnership, yet it is only one of several tests, and is sometimes overborne by other and controlling facts. In the case at bar, such an instruction given, without any qualifications or limitations, would have been apt to mislead. We think therefore that if this refusal was fully and properly before us we could not hold that there was error therein.

---

Opinion of the Court.

In reference to the instruction given at the instance of the plaintiffs: It assumes nothing as to the facts proved or disproved, but simply charges the jury in substance, that if from all the evidence they believe that the defendants in error were, in the fall of 1871, the owners of and in the possession of certain Texas cattle, and then made an arrangement with Joseph Wheat whereby he was to winter them, and that they should pay him for the fodder consumed and necessary help employed, and that upon the sale of the same they were to pay Wheat one-third of the increase in value over and above the price at which they were valued at the time of delivery to him, less the expenses of wintering, as and for the purpose only of compensating Wheat for taking charge and care of and wintering said cattle, and that said defendants in error did not hold out said Wheat to the world as a partner, nor by their negligence had permitted or allowed him to be so held out, and thereby plaintiff in error was misled to his prejudice, then and in said case Wheat would not be a partner in such cattle. That this states the law as it is now generally recognized, seems hardly to admit of doubt. See among others the following authorities: Loomis v. Marshall, 12 Conn. 69; Denny v. Cabot, 6 Met. (Mass.) 82; Burchle v. Eckart, 1 Denio, 337; same case, 8 N. Y. 132; Lewis

Shepard v. Pratt.

v. Gruder, 51 N. Y. 281; Parker v. Fergus, 48 Ill. 439; Eastman v. Clark, 58 N. H. 276.

III. The remaining objection is to the verdict. It is insisted that it is contrary to the evidence, and that if it can be sustained for the plaintiffs at all, that the damages are excessive. In reference to the first proposition, it is unnecessary to say more than that there is abundant testimony to support the verdict, and that though the preponderance may seem to be on the defendant's side, yet, after the jury and the district court have both passed upon the question of fact, it is, by well-settled rules, beyond the province of this court to interfere.

The other claim, that the damages are excessive, presents a question of some difficulty. The verdict was for $3,998.81. No witness values the cattle at over $85 per head, and no testimony shows over 99 cattle in the defendant's possession, except perhaps a general statement of Joseph Wheat that Shepard "got something over 100 head." It would seem extremely probable that there were only 98 head taken by Shepard, and that $85 per head was in excess of their actual value. But still the jury were the triers of these questions, and they were at liberty to take the highest valuation and the largest number if such was their judgment upon the testimony. But the highest value and the largest number would only make a verdict of $3,500. The difference, say counsel for defendants in error, is the interest. To this counsel for plaintiff in error replies, that no interest is recoverable because none is claimed, and cites as authority, Gen. Stat. 647, (code, § 87;) Graves v. Dunn, 5 Kas. 254, 261. Unquestionably the excess over $3,500 was intended for interest, probably more than that. Was it recoverable? The section cited is one describing what the petition must contain; and the third essential is, "a demand of the relief to which the party supposes himself entitled." Then follows this provision: "If the recovery of money be demanded, the amount thereof shall be stated; and if interest thereon be claimed, the time for which interest is to be computed shall be also stated." And in the case cited, this court, where no interest was claimed in the petition, and the judgment included interest, modified the judgment by striking out the interest. That was an action upon a note, and establishes the proposition that where the demand is liquidated no interest is recoverable unless claimed in the petition. "But here," say counsel for defendants in error, "the demand is unliquidated; the amount is to be ascertained by the verdict. It is claimed as damages, while in the other class of cases it is claimed as debt. It is sufficient in a case like this, and where there is but a single cause of action, to allege generally a sum as damages without specifying the separate items or elements which enter in to make up the sum total of the damages, and then the only limitation is that the verdict shall not exceed the amount claimed, and that the jury in arriving at such verdict shall follow the established rules for determining the amount of damages. In actions of trover the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of conversion, with interest to the date of the verdict. And the jury, in adding interest to the value only pursued the true measure of damages." There is doubtless truth in these claims, and we think these propositions upon the general subject may be laid down as correct:

Opinion of the Court.

---

1st. Wherever a demand is liquidated, no interest is recoverable unless claimed, and unless the time from which it is to be computed is stated in the petition.

2d. It is unnecessary in most cases where the demand is unliquidated, and sounds wholly in damages, and where there is but a single cause of action, to state specifically and in amounts the different elements or items which go to make up the sum total of the damages. It is enough to claim so much in gross, as damages for the wrongs done.

3d. In such a case the only limitations upon the size of the verdict are, that it shall not exceed the gross amount claimed, and that the jury in arriving at it shall have had regard to the true measure of damages.

4th. In actions in the nature of trover for the conversion of personal property, the measure of damages is ordinarily the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with interest to the date of the verdict.

Shepard v. Pratt.

But these propositions, though decisive in most cases, do not meet the entire difficulty in this. The petition does not allege generally that the plaintiffs have been damaged so much by the wrongs of the defendant, but enters into some specifications. It alleges that the plaintiffs were the owners of 225 head of cattle; that they were and are of the value of $7,875; that they cannot state the precise value of each animal, but that they were and are of the average value of $35 per head; that the defendant took possession of said cattle and converted them to his own use, to their damage $7,875, for which sum they claim judgment. This is all that bears upon the question. Here the plaintiffs have specified the items of damage. Are they not limited to their specification? Suppose for instance the testimony had shown a conversion by defendant of the 225 head and average value equal to the amount stated, $35, could the jury, under the petition, have added interest? None is claimed. The damages stated, $7,875, are the product of the value per head, $35, multiplied by the number converted, 225. By what right could the jury add more? So, when the testimony shows that only 100 head have been converted, and that they were of the value of $85 per head, are not the jury limited to the value stated per head, multiplied by the number proved to have been converted? If the plaintiffs had made the allegations less definite, or had added a claim for interest, no question could be raised upon the verdict. If the allegation had been, for instance, that defendant had converted a large number of cattle, without specifying any number, to the plaintiffs' damage, etc.; or, if it had alleged the conversion of 225 head, to the damage, etc., without specifying any value per head; or, if it had alleged both number and average value, and the testimony had shown the value of the 100 above the alleged average value; or, if it had alleged both number and value, and claimed interest, then we think the verdict must have been upheld. But where the number and average value are both stated, and no testimony shows the value of those proved to have been taken above this average value, and no claim for interest is made, then we think a verdict in excess of the value multiplied by the number taken, cannot be sustained. In many cases it might be proper to permit an amendment by inserting a claim for interest; but an examination of the testimony does not lead us to consider this a case where the interests of justice require an amendment. If the plaintiffs below elect to remit such portion of the judgment as is plainly for interest, it may stand; otherwise a new trial must be ordered.

J. C. & Ft. K. Rly. Co. v. Wingfield.

The case will therefore be remanded, with instructions that if within sixty days after filing of the mandate in the court below the plaintiffs remit $498, thus reducing the judgment to $3,500, the judgment will be affirmed, otherwise it will be reversed and a new trial ordered. The costs of this court will be divided.

WINGFIELD brought his suit against the Railway Company to recover the value of a lot of ties which he alleged he furnished at the request of said company. The amount claimed was $207.99. Answer, payment. Trial at the March Term 1874. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. The Railway Company undertook to obtain a "case made," and afterward brought the case here by petition in error. The proceedings are fully stated in the opinion.

J. P. Usher, for plaintiff in error.

McClure & Humphrey, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This case is presented to the supreme court on petition in error, and what is termed a "case made for the supreme court." The defendant in error now raises the question that said "case made" was not properly served and settled as provided by law. Section 548 of the civil code provides, that—

"The case so made, or a copy thereof, shall, within three days after the judgment or order is entered, be served upon the opposite party or his attorney, who may within three days thereafter suggest amendments thereto in writing, and present the same to the party making the case, or his attorney. The case and amendments shall be submitted to the judge, who shall settle and sign the same, and cause it to be attested by the clerk, and the seal of the court to be thereto attached. It shall then be filed with the papers in the case. A certified copy thereof shall be filed with the petition in error," etc. (Laws of 1871, page 274.)

Section 549 of the code provides, that—

"The court or judge may, upon good cause shown, extend the time for making a case, and the time within which the case may be served; and may also direct notice to be given of the time when a case may be presented for settlement after the same has been made and served, and amendments suggested, which, when so presented, shall be settled, certified, and signed by the judge who tried the cause; and the case so settled and made shall thereupon be filed with the papers in the case; * * * and if no amendments are suggested by the opposing party, as above provided, said case shall be taken as true and containing a full record of the cause, and certified accordingly." (Laws of 1870, page 168.)

After this case was disposed of in the court below, the court then made an order that the defendant (plaintiff in error) have "leave to make, serve, and file a 'case made' in sixty days from the 17th of March 1874." When the case was made is not shown. But it was not served or filed until May 19th—sixty-three days from March 17th, instead of sixty. This case should have been served, under the order of the court, at furthest as early as May 16th. Then the plaintiff below (defendant in error) should have had at least three days after such service within which to suggest amendments; and if the plaintiff had suggested any amendments within that time, then the case should not have been settled until due notice of the time thereof had first been given to the plaintiff below. But in the present case the "case made" was not served on the plaintiff until three days after the time within which it could legally be served, and then, instead of giving the plaintiff three days within which to suggest amendments, and giving him due notice of the time when the case would be presented for settlement, the case was immediately presented for settlement, without any suggestion of amendments on the part of the plaintiff, without notice to him of the time for settlement, and without any appearance on his part; and on that same day the case was "settled, certified, and signed by the judge who tried the cause," was "attested by the clerk, and the seal of the court attached," and was "filed with the papers in the case." We think the failure to serve the "case made" within the proper time was fatal to its validity, and that nothing was afterward done that could give it any vitality.

We have examined the "case made," and find that even if we should consider it as having been properly served, settled, certified, attested, sealed, and filed, still we would have to affirm the judgment below; but as the "case made" was not properly served and settled, we shall have to dismiss the petition in error.

W. S. SHORT V. E. J. NOONER.

1. JUDGMENT, AND DECREE, in Foreclosure Actions. In this state, in the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate made to secure a debt, no judgment barring any person's right, title, interest or equity in or to the mortgaged property should be rendered until a judgment for the sale of such property is first rendered; and the judgment barring such rights and interests should be made to operate only in connection with such sale and after such sale had been made; and no judgment for a sale of the mortgaged property can regularly be rendered until a judgment for the amount of the debt due and secured has first been rendered in favor of the holder of the debt and mortgage. [Delahay v. Goldie, 17-263; Nooner v. Short, 20-624.]
2. FINAL ORDER. The question of what is a final order, discussed, and the decision in case of McCulloch v. Dodge, 8 Kas. 476, approved. [Savage v. Challiss, 4-319; Hottenstein v. Conrad, 5-249.]
3. PLEADING; PETITION; Foreclosure of Mortgage; Statement of Interest of Defendants. The plaintiff, Short, commenced an action against Fletcher and wife and E. J. Nooner, on a promissory note and a real-estate mortgage made to secure said note, alleging in his petition that Fletcher executed the note, that Fletcher and wife executed the mortgage, and "That the said defendant Nooner has, or claims to have some interest in or lien upon said premises as described in said mortgage-deed, but plaintiff is ignorant of the nature and extent thereof, and does not know whether the said defendant Nooner has at this time any subsisting lien upon said premises, and he demands proof of the same;" and plaintiff then prayed for a judgment against Fletcher for the amount of the note, and "for a decree" against all the defendants "for the foreclosure of said mortgage-deed, and that the premises be sold," etc. There were no other allegations in the petition against Nooner. Held, that said petition does not state facts sufficient to sustain or uphold any judgment against Nooner, and especially not a judgment barring all right, title and interest of Nooner in and to said premises. It lacks an allegation showing that Nooner's claim is junior, or inferior, to the mortgage-lien of the plaintiff.

Error from Neosho District Court.

FORECLOSURE of mortgage executed by one Fletcher and wife, to secure a note executed by Fletcher alone. The petition was filed in April 1873. E. J. Nooner was joined with the Fletchers as a defendant. The only allegation in the petition relating to Nooner is copied in full in the opinion, infra. At the July Term 1873 of the district court the following decree was entered:

(Title.) "Now comes the plaintiff, by Allen & Allen, his attorneys, and the defendants Amanda M. Fletcher and E. J. Nooner having failed to answer or demur to the petition of the plaintiff filed herein, it is thereupon considered and adjudged that said defendants Amanda M. Fletcher and E. J. Nooner be forever debarred and foreclosed of any and all right, title and interest in and to the premises or any part thereof in plaintiff's petition described, to-wit: All that part of the N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 22, lying on the east side of Big creek, and the S.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of N.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 22, in township 27 south, range 19 east, in said Neosho county."

At the December Term 1873 "said action came on for trial, and was tried," (says the transcript,) and judgment was rendered against Jonas L. Fletcher for $735.58 debt, and for costs, and a decree was made that the mortgaged premises be sold, etc. An order of sale was issued, the premises advertised and sold, (plaintiff Short being the purchaser,) report of sale made, and, at April Term 1874, said sale was confirmed, and a sheriff's deed was executed to the purchaser. In June 1874 Nooner filed his motion to vacate and set aside the decree entered in July 1873. This motion, and the proceedings thereon, are sufficiently stated in the opinion, infra. Said decree was set aside as to Nooner, at the July Term 1874, and Short brings the case here on error.

C. F. Hutchings, for plaintiff in error:

1. Nooner's motion to set aside the judgment against him was served, in the language of the officer, "By leaving a true and certified copy hereof at the usual place of residence of the within-named W. S. Short." Constructive notice is not sufficient. The court should have sustained Short's motion to set aside the service. The legislature has provided that actual notice shall be given. Sec. 569 of the code provides that motions of this kind shall be "upon reasonable notice to the adverse party or his attorney in the action." This is a wise provision, and the courts cannot disregard it. It was never intended that judgments upon which rights to property have been built should be set aside by ex parte proceedings.

Short v. Nooner.

2. The district court held that the petition stated no cause of action against Nooner, and for that reason the judgment rendered against him was absolutely void. The learned judge thought it was necessary for the plaintiff to set forth in his petition the quantum of interest, and the exact nature of the claim or lien of the defendant, and to aver that such claim or lien was inferior to plaintiff's lien. If such reasoning be correct, a party cannot bring an action to foreclose a mortgage and make persons having adverse paramount liens parties for the purpose of determining such adverse interest, unless the plaintiff will aver what he knows to be false, and where the plaintiff is not informed of the exact nature of an adverse claim he cannot have it determined. It has always been held sufficient in the courts of chancery in such cases, to aver that the plaintiff is not informed of the exact nature of a defendant's interest, and to demand a discovery and proof of the same. Swan's Prec., Form 142; 4 Paige, 85; Story's Eq. Pl. §§ 36, 37, 255; Metc. on Pl. 45; Nash's Pl., Form 18; 2 Estee's Pl. § 42, and Form 450; 16 How. Pr. Rep. 424; 32 Cal. 289; 9 N. Y. 502; 11 Ves. 296, 373.

Stillwell & Baylies, for defendant in error:

1. Short, by his conduct in the court below, has waived his right to complain of the rulings of that court. The record shows that after the making and entering of the order vacating the former judgment against Nooner, plaintiff entered a general appearance in the original case by taking leave to amend his petition. The case then stood as though no trial had ever been had, or judgment rendered. It shows an election on the part of plaintiff to reform his pleading, and try the case upon such pleading when amended; and we submit that after he has thus treated the original judgment as legally vacated, and been permitted on his own motion to amend a pleading which the court has decided defective, that he will be deemed to have waived all errors, if any, in the previous rulings of the court, and the case will be treated as if there had been no trial.

---

2. The errors complained of are not reviewable in this court, with the case in the condition disclosed by the record. Said supposed errors do not attach to or appear upon "the record of a judgment," within the meaning of that term as used in § 542 of code. A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action. (Code, § 395.) Hence the journal-entry showing the action of the court in sustaining the motion to vacate, cannot be a "judgment," as it is not a final determination, in any sense, of the rights of the parties in the action. This entry simply follows the motion, which is an application for an order, (code, § 532;) and an order can only be reviewed when it falls within the limits of §§ 542 and 543 of the code. McCulloch v. Dodge, 8 Kas. 476.

3. The judgment rendered against Nooner at the July Term 1873, was void, and should have been vacated on motion at any time. (Code, § 575.) This pretended judgment was rendered upon default. Was it his duty to make an appearance in order to protect his rights? We think it was not, for the reason that no rights of his were assailed in the petition. The petition stated no facts constituting a cause of action against him, as is required in all cases in order to entitle a party to judgment; and a judgment rendered against a party without a cause of action being alleged against him in the petition is void. Greer v. Adams, 6 Kas. 203; School District v. Carson, 10 Kas. 238.

We insist further, that the judgment vacated was not only void for want of a sufficient petition to sustain it, but for the reason also that there was no ground under plaintiff's showing for such a judgment at the time it was rendered. The plain-tiff's right to any judgment against defendant in error depended entirely upon the result of the suit against J. L. Fletcher. The right to relief against Nooner depended upon the question whether Fletcher was indebted to plaintiff. Fletcher's answer on file pleaded payment in full on the note to Short. Here was an issue to be tried. If Fletcher was not indebted, Short could have no interest in the mortgaged premises, the mortgage being given to secure such debt; and with no interest in the premises he could not maintain an action against Nooner.

Short v. Nooner.

---

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by W. S. Short against Jonas L. Fletcher and wife, and E. J. Nooner, on a promissory note and mortgage. The petition shows that Fletcher executed the note; and that he and his wife executed the mortgage. The only allegation in the petition with respect to Nooner is as follows: "That the said defendant E. J. Nooner has or claims to have some interest in or lien upon said premises as described in said mortgage-deed, but plaintiff is ignorant of the nature and extent thereof, and does not know whether the said defendant Nooner has at this time any subsisting lien upon said premises, and he demands proof of the same." The petition then prayed for a judgment against Fletcher for the amount of the note, and "for a decree" against all the defendants "for the foreclosure of said mortgage-deed, and that the said premises be sold," etc. Fletcher answered to said petition, pleading payment; but neither of the other defendants made any appearance in the case. Afterward, the following judgment was rendered, to-wit: "That said defendants Amanda M. Fletcher and E. J. Nooner be forever debarred and foreclosed of any and all right, title and interest in and to the premises, or any part thereof, in plaintiff's petition described." This was the only judgment rendered in the case at that term of the court, and such judgment had no connection whatever with any personal judgment for money, or for any judgment for a sale of the mortgaged premises. It was absolute in its terms. The case was then continued as to Jonas L. Fletcher, and afterward, and at the next term of the court, a personal judgment was rendered in favor of Short and against Fletcher for the amount of said note, and that the mortgaged property be sold to satisfy said judgment. Afterward, Nooner filed a motion to set aside the judgment rendered against him. When the motion came on to be heard plaintiff Short appeared specially and objected to the service of the notice of the motion on him, and moved the court to set such motion aside. The court however overruled his objection and motion, and the plaintiff excepted. And Nooner's motion again coming on to be heard, both of the parties made a general appearance, "the plaintiff Short in person and by his attorney C. F. Hutchings"; and said motion was duly heard, and argued by counsel; in consideration of the premises, and the evidence submitted, the court does [did] sustain the motion of said defendant Nooner;" and the plaintiff again excepted. The plaintiff then asked leave of the court to amend his petition, which was granted. Here was another general appearance by the plaintiff. Time was given to the plaintiff in which to make such amendment, and time was also given to the defendant Nooner in which to answer to the amended petition. This case for the supreme court was immediately made, and settled and signed while the action was still pending in the court below in the exact condition above specified.

---

Opinion of the Court.

It was evidently irregular and erroneous to render a judgment against Nooner at the time said judgment was so rendered against him; and this would be so even if the allegations of the plaintiff's petition were considered sufficient in every respect. In this state, in the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate made to secure a debt, no judgment barring any person's right, title, interest or equity in or to the mortgaged property should be rendered until a judgment for the sale of such property has first been rendered; and the judgment barring such rights and interests should be made to operate only in connection with such sale and after such sale has been made; and no judgment for the sale of the mortgaged property can regularly be rendered until a judgment for the amount of the debt due and secured has first been rendered in favor of the holder of the note and mortgage. The judgment rendered against Nooner was not a contingent judgment, depending for finality upon some other action or event to take place in the future. It was absolute in its terms, and barred Nooner of all right to the property, whatever that right might be, and whatever might take place in the future. The court below may have set aside said judgment merely because it was rendered before it properly could be rendered. If so, then the order setting the judgment aside was not a final order, and cannot at this time be reviewed by this court. (McCulloch v. Dodge, 8 Kas. 476.) But it is claimed by plaintiff in error that the court below set said judgment aside principally upon the ground that the plaintiff's petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against Nooner; that the petition was so defective that it could not sustain or uphold any judgment as against Nooner; and plaintiff in error therefore claims, that the order setting aside said judgment is final; that it in effect determines the action as between himself and Nooner, and prevents any judgment from being rendered between them; and he therefore claims that the action of the court is reviewable at this time. (Code, §§ 542, 543.) He claims that his right to have the same reviewed was complete as soon as the judgment was set aside, and before he asked leave to amend his petition, and that he did not waive or suspend such right by asking and obtaining such leave. But passing over all these preliminary questions, we think the decision of the court below upon the main question, and upon the merits of the case, was correct. We have already quoted all the allegations of the petition that are supposed to state any cause of action as against Nooner, and we do not think they state any such cause of action. What did Nooner admit by his default, by not answering to said petition? He merely admitted the truth of the allegation therein contained—nothing more, and nothing less. He admitted that he “Nooner has or claims to have some interest in or lien upon said premises as described in said mortgage-deed;" that "plaintiff is ignorant of the nature and extent thereof, and does not know whether Nooner has at this time any subsisting lien upon said premises, and he [plaintiff] demands proof of the same." These allegations are certainly not sufficient to sustain or uphold any judgment. The usual allegations in cases of this kind are substantially as follows: "That the defendant G. H. has or claims some interest in or lien upon the said real property; but the same, whatever it may be, is subject to the lien of the said mortgage." This form is taken from 2 Estee's Pleading and Forms, 265, No. 450. See also, Miller's Pl. & Pr. 610, No. 208; 5 Wait's Pr. 199; 1 Nash Pl. & Pr. (4 ed.) 737, No. 5; 2 Van Santvoord's Pl. (2 ed.) No. 55; 2 Monell's Pr. 390, No. 147; Curtis' Eq. Prac. 59 to 62, Nos. 18 and 19. This form of pleading, or of allegation, in this particular class of cases, (as above quoted from 2 Estee's Pl. & Forms,) has been held to be sufficient; (Drury v. Clark, 16 How. Pr. 424; Frost v. Koon, 30 N. Y. 428, 448;) and we think it is sufficient. But the form adopted by the plaintiff below we think has never been held to be sufficient by any court, and we do not think that it is sufficient. And we do not think that such a form ever was sufficient in any case, either in law or equity. Every word of the plaintiff's petition may have been true, and yet Nooner may have been the absolute owner of the property in controversy, holding the same free and clear from all incumbrances. There is no allegation in the petition that Fletcher, the mortgagor, ever owned or had any interest in the property. And Nooner claims that he himself is the owner thereof. There should have been some allegation in the petition showing that Nooner's claim to the property was junior, or inferior, to the mortgage-lien of the plaintiff. And it will be noticed that the said judgment against Nooner was not a judgment barring only such rights and interests of Nooner as were subsequent to the mortgage-lien, but it was a judgment that barred all of Nooner's rights and interests in and to the property.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

McConnell v. Hamm.

In connection with this subject, and as to who are proper parties in foreclosure suits, and as to what defendants confess by a default in such suits, see Frost v. Koon, supra; Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502; same case, 11 Barb. 152. The form given by Judge Swan in his work on Pleading and Precedents (No. 142, page 416,) we think is hardly sufficient.

Counsel for plaintiff in error has made a point in this court, as well as in the court below, that the service of the notice of the motion to set aside said judgment was not sufficient. We suppose it is not necessary to say anything further upon this question.

The order of the court below setting aside said judgment will be affirmed.

W. P. McCONNELL v. R. P. HAMM, Treasurer.

MUNICIPAL BONDS, Issued for a Private Purpose, are Void; Disposal of Money Collected as Taxes to Pay Such Bonds and Coupons. The city of Neosho Falls issued certain bonds to a private individual to aid a purely private enterprise, and which were therefore wholly ultra vires and void. [C. B. U. P. Rld. Co. v. Smith, et al., 23-745.] Afterward the city council passed an ordinance providing for a levy of taxes to pay certain coupons on these bonds. The amount of this levy was reduced by the city clerk without authority, and as reduced transmitted to the county clerk, and entered by him in a separate column on the county tax-roll, and then the roll turned over to the county treasurer. The county treasurer thereafter, at the usual tax-paying time, without the issue of any personal tax-warrants, or any attempt to sell the real estate, received from the taxpayers this tax and paid it over to the city treasurer. The city treasurer refused to pay it over on demand to the holder of the coupons: Held, That the holder could not maintain an action against the treasurer for the money thus received.

Error from Woodson District Court.

ACTION by McConnell against Hamm, to recover $140 alleged to be in his hands as treasurer of the city of Neosho Falls, legally and properly payable to plaintiff as owner and holder of certain bonds and coupons. All the necessary facts appear in the opinion. The district court, at the June Term 1874, gave judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brings the case here on error.

C. B. Graves, for plaintiff:

The answer of Hamm presents no defense to the petition. It simply alleges the illegality of the bonds and coupons. But McConnell did not sue upon the bonds or coupons, and does not rely upon their validity. The publication of the ordinance under and by virtue of which the bonds and coupons were issued; the publication of the ordinance levying the tax; the fact that the tax was a specific one, charged separately, not blended or mixed with any other; the fact that the payment of the tax was not preceded by any legal act or process tending to jeopardize either person or property, together with the presumption that every man knows the law, show that the tax was paid voluntarily, and cannot be recovered by the taxpayers. (5 Kas. 412; 8 Kas. 431; 1 Ohio St. 265, 535.

To whom then does the money belong? McConnell held a claim against the taxpayers, one which was charged up against each of them proportionately—a claim which they were under no legal obligation to pay, perhaps, but nevertheless one which they did pay with a full knowledge of all the facts, and therefore with the intention and desire that McConnell, or whoever should be the owner and holder of such claim when the same became due, should receive the money. This seems conclusive, since the payment was unaccompanied by any instruction to the contrary. Certainly, the taxpayers had a right to make such a disposition of their money. Evidently they tried to make such disposition of it; and how any one can rightfully interfere with such disposal, does not seem clear. Can Hamm question their legal liability for the payment of such claim, by interposing in his own behalf a defense available only to the taxpayers, and one which they have expressly waived by refusing to take advantage of it? The money was not paid to the city in liquidation of any claim, or contributed to any fund: hence the city has no more right to or interest in it than a mere stranger. The same is true of Hamm, and every other person save McConnell. The money was received by Hamm in trust for the use and benefit of McConnell, and he cannot divert or appropriate it to any other purpose, or refuse to apply it to the use intended by the taxpayers. 3 Blk. Com. 432; 4 Kent Com. 307; Story's Eq., §§ 972, 1041, 1196; 2 Kas. 61; 8 Kas. 458; 5 Am. L. Reg. 98.

McConnell v. Hamm.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This case was tried by the court, in the court below, on an agreed statement of facts, which may be briefly stated as follows: To aid in the construction of a mill for the manufacture of wool in the city of Neosho Falls, Woodson county, said city on the 20th of June 1872, issued and donated to R. P. & R. W. Pilling & Bro. its bonds in the sum of $11,000, in denominations of $100 each, numbered successively from 1 to 110, inclusive, payable in ten years, and bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum, with coupons attached, numbered successively from No. 1 to 20, inclusive, payable on the first day of February and August of each year respectively. On the 30th of August 1872, said city, by ordinance duly published, levied a tax for the express purpose of providing for the payment of interest-coupons Nos. 2 and 8 of so many of said bonds as were numbered from No. 37 to No. 50, and from No. 85 to No. 110, inclusive. Between the passage and publication of said ordinance the amount of said levy was changed by the city clerk, and reduced in amount, without authority. Said levy was then transmitted by the city clerk to the county clerk, and by him charged on the tax-roll of said county, in a separate column. Between November 1st 1872, and January 15th 1873, the taxpayers of said city, without any legal process or compulsion, paid to the treasurer of said county the tax levied as aforesaid for the purpose of redeeming said coupons Nos. 2 and 3. On the 15th of January 1873, the treasurer of said county paid said tax to Hamm, who was and is the treasurer of the city of Neosho Falls, and who now has the same in his possession and under his control. McConnell, at and before the date of said tax levy, was, and he is now, the owner and holder of said coupon No. 3, which he duly presented to Hamm on the 31st of January 1874, and demanded the payment of said money, which Hamm refused and still refuses to make, either in whole or in part. Those of said bonds numbering from No. 37 to No. 50, inclusive, were registered in the state auditor's office August 24th 1872, and those numbering from No. 85 to No. 110, inclusive, were so registered on the 9th of October 1872.

---

Opinion of the Court.

Upon these facts the district court found for the defendant. Was there error in this? It is not disputed but that these bonds were illegal and void, as issued for a purely private purpose; but the claim is, that the taxpayers voluntarily paid this money over for the purpose of paying the coupons, and that the city treasurer has no right to detain the money and prevent the accomplishment of this purpose, and that he holds the money in trust for the owner of the coupons, and must pay it over on demand. All men are presumed to know the law, and it must be presumed that the taxpayers knew that these bonds were illegal—knew that the ordinance providing for a levy was without authority, and the tax void. And still, with all this knowledge, they each take so much money and place it in the hands of the treasurer to pay over to the holder of these coupons. It is said that this is merely the application of a familiar principle of law, that if A. hands to B. money, and requests him to pay it to C., and B. accepts the money on that request, there is an implied promise to pay it to C., and C. can maintain an action against him for it. We are of opinion that such a principle is inapplicable to the facts in this case. We are not justified in holding that the taxpayers voluntarily paid this money over to the treasurer with the request that he pay it to the coupon-holders, nor that there was any implied promise on the part of the treasurer to pay it to anybody. The money was paid, not because they wished to pay it, but as a tax. Granted, that the tax was without legal warrant, still it had all the forms of legality. Certain instruments, in form promises to pay, had been issued by the municipality. To pay those instruments the city council, the proper authority, passed an ordinance directing the levy of a tax. The city clerk, the proper officer, transmitted this as a legal and proper levy to the county clerk. True, he reduced the amount of the levy, but whether that was known to the taxpayers or not, is not stated; and whether, if known, it would have invalidated the tax if otherwise legal, may well be doubted. The county clerk accepted the levy as legal and proper, and entered it upon the county tax-roll, and passed the roll over to the county treasurer. At the accustomed tax-paying time the taxpayers come, and finding this tax on the tax-roll, pay it. They pay it because it appears in form at least a charge against their property, and for the purpose of removing that charge. The county treasurer received it as tax-money, and as such paid it over to the city treasurer. Now, because all these parties, officers, authorities, and taxpayers erred in their judgment of the legal rights, duties, and obligations of the city, and the taxpayers, and without proof of any express request or actual wish of the taxpayers, shall it be held that when they went through the form of paying taxes they were not paying taxes, but simply engaged in a voluntary private transaction of handing money to one private individual with the request that he pay it to another, and that the treasurer when receiving taxes as treasurer, and receiving only such moneys as appear upon his books due as taxes, is nevertheless entering into a private engagement with the taxpayer to carry out his personal wish in respect to the receipt and payment of money? The maxim, that every one is presumed to know the law, is, as every one really knows, a pure fiction. True, public policy requires its recognition, and general application; but when the question arises as to the actual state of a man's mind, this legal fiction does not compel the court to find the fact to be what the testimony clearly shows it not to be. Here, there was no express request from the taxpayers to the treasurer to receive the money and pay it over to the coupon-holders, and no express agreement of the treasurer that he would so do; and the circumstances clearly negative any such implied request or promise. To sum the matter up, a party to whom neither the taxpayers nor the city owes a dollar asks the court to compel the official custodian of the city's funds to pay him a portion of the money in his hands received in the form and through the processes of taxation, upon the claim that these taxpayers placed these moneys in the treasurer's hands, and the treasurer received them upon the request on the one hand and the promise on the other to receive the moneys and pay them over to the claimant, when there is no proof of any such express promise or request, or that the parties acted otherwise than in obedience to the supposed obligations of the taxing process and official station. We see no error in the ruling of the court. Whether this money, thus erroneously paid, is the property of the municipality, or of the parties paying it to the treasurer, is a question to be decided whenever properly presented. It is enough now to decide that it does not belong to the plaintiff.

McConnell v. Hamm.

---

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The judgment will be affirmed.

KINGMAN, C. J., concurring.

VALENTINE, J., concurring as follows: I concur in the judgment rendered in this case. The bonds mentioned in the case are unquestionably void for reasons stronger than those mentioned in the foregoing opinion, and therefore the tax levied to raise a fund with which to pay interest on such bonds is also void. The tax however was levied by the city; it was collected for the city; it was paid to city treasurer Hamm for the city, and it is the city that apparently owes the plaintiff McConnell.

Vanausdeln v. Crenshaw.

---

Hamm is under no obligation nor apparent obligation to the plaintiff McConnell, nor to any other one of the bondholders, but only to the city. He does not hold the fund in trust for the bondholders, but for the city. And he should pay it out only as the city directs. The city has never directed that the treasurer shall pay any portion of the fund to McConnell, and hence the plaintiff has no cause of action for the same against the treasurer.

Judgment affirmed.

J. L. VANAUSDELN, et al., v. D. L. CRENSHAW.

CONTRACT OF SALE; Time for Performance; Failure; Rights of Vendor and Vendee. Where A., on April 27th, contracts to sell and deliver to B., within three weeks, a combined reaper and mower, and in ten days delivers the mower without the reaping attachment, receiving a small payment thereon, and does not deliver the reaping attachment for more than seven weeks thereafter, and then offers it to B., who refuses to accept it, and thereupon A. offers to take back the mower and return all money received, with interest, which proposition B. declines to accept, and refuses to return the mower, and it does not appear what amount of damages, if any, B. has sustained by the failure to deliver the reaping attachment within the three weeks as agreed, held, that a judgment in favor of A. for the unpaid value of the mower will not be disturbed.

Error from Crawford District Court.

ACTION by Crenshaw as plaintiff against Vanausdeln and A. Camblen to recover balance due on sale of reaper. The facts are fully stated in the opinion. The district court, at the September Term 1874, gave judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring the case here on error.

M. A. Wood, and J. T. Bridgens, for plaintiffs in error.

Opinion of the Court.

---

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action brought by defendant in error to recover for a mowing machine sold and delivered to plaintiffs in error. The case was tried by the court without a jury. The testimony is not before us, but only the findings of fact, and conclusions of law; and the only question presented is, whether upon the findings the proper judgment was entered. The findings are, that Crenshaw on April 27th 1874 sold to the defendants a combined reaper and mower for $150, to be delivered within three weeks; that in ten days thereafter the mower was delivered without the reaping attachment, and $25 paid; that the reaping attachment was not delivered nor tendered until June 18th; that on June 16th the defendants thinking they could wait no longer purchased two machines of other parties, and refused to receive the reaping attachment when tendered; that on the 19th of June 1874 the plaintiff offered to take back the mowing machine, return the money received with 25 per cent. interest, and to pay the defendants for one trip to Girard, and to release them from all obligations on the contract; that this offer the defendants refused unless plaintiff would pay them for six trips to Girard which they had taken to secure the reaping attachment, and which they claimed to be worth $2.50 per trip; that the defendants still keep the mowing machine, and that it is worth $100.

Upon these findings was a judgment for $75 in favor of Crenshaw erroneous? We think not. True, the contract was for a combined reaper and mower; but the mower had been delivered, and when the reaping attachment was tendered the defendants refused to receive it. It does not lie in their mouths therefore to say that the plaintiff has not completed his contract. They refuse to receive the reaping attachment, and refuse to return the mower. This mower is worth $100. They have paid but $25. What right have they to the plaintiff's property without paying for it? But, say the defendants, the plaintiff did not perform his contract in time; he was to deliver it in three weeks from April 27th, and did not offer to deliver until June 18th, more than seven weeks thereafter. Concede all that, and if they have suffered any damage by reason of the plaintiff's delay, and time was of the essence of the contract, they could recoup such damages. But no damages are found. True, they bought other machines; but it does not appear what they paid for them; or that they paid more than their actual value; or that they could not turn round and sell them immediately at a profit. It does not appear that they are damaged to the amount of a farthing by this. They took six trips to Girard, which they claim were worth $2.50 per trip, but there is no finding that they were worth a cent, or had cost a cent, or that they had lost anything thereby. Surely, there is nothing from which we can say what damages, if any, they sustained by reason of the delay.

City of Emporia v. Norton.

Upon the facts therefore as found, we do not see that there was any error in the judgment, and it must be affirmed.

1. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES; General Rule as to Repeals; Qualification. The rule of construction, (Gen. Stat. p. 999,) that "The provisions of any statute so far as they are the same as those of any prior enactment, shall be construed as a continuation of such provisions and not as an amendment," is subject to the qualification, "unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the legislature, or repugnant to the context of the statute."
2. ——— Legislative Intent, Ascertained. In determining the intent of the legislature, the court is not limited to a mere consideration of the words employed, but may properly look to the purpose to be accomplished, the necessity and effect of the statute, under the different constructions suggested. [Jones v. State, 1-273; Dudley v. Reynolds, 1-285; Fitzpatrick v. Gehart, 7-85.]
3. ——— It will not be imputed to the legislature that it intended to go through the form and time and expense of legislation to accomplish nothing, or to do that already fully and completely done. [Prohibitory-Amendment Cases, 24-716.]

4. ——— Reënactment of Laws. It may be stated as a general rule, that where the legislature enacts a law which is the same in terms as a former statute, if such former statute has prior thereto wholly accomplished its purpose, and exhausted its force, the latter law must be held, notwithstanding the rule of construction quoted in the first paragraph of this syllabus, to be a new enactment, and not merely a continuation of the former.

Motion for Rehearing.

THE action of Norton and others was for an injunction against the treasurer of Lyon county, the City of Emporia, and others, to restrain the collection of certain "assessments" levied by the city of Emporia in 1871 on the lots of the plaintiffs to pay contractors for macadamizing, curbing and guttering Commercial street in said city. The case was in this court first at the July Term 1872, and is reported in 10 Kas. 491, as Gilmore v. Norton. It came here again, and is reported in 13 Kas. 569, as City of Emporia v. Norton. In each instance the district court had decreed a perpetual injunction in favor of Norton and others, and in each this court reversed the decree of the district court. Norton and others now move for a rehearing in the case last mentioned—City of Emporia v. Norton, 13 Kas. 569. The work for which the special taxes or "assessments" were levied on the lots of the adjacent lot-owners was done in 1871, under a contract with the city. When this contract was let, the city of Emporia was governed by the city-charter act of 1868, (Gen. Stat., ch. 19,) and the amendatory act passed and approved March 2d 1871, (ch. 62, Laws 1871, p. 144.) Said act of 1868 contained the following provision:

"SEC. 31. Before the city council shall make any contract for building bridges or sidewalks, or for any work on streets, or for any other work or improvement, an estimate of the cost thereof shall be made by the city engineer, and submitted to the council, and no contract shall be entered into for any work or improvement for a price exceeding such estimate, and in advertising for bids for any such work, the council shall cause

City of Emporia v. Norton.

the amount of such estimate to be published therewith." (Gen. Stat., p. 169.)

The district court decided that this section had not been complied with in this, that no estimate had been made of the cost of the improvements before the contract was made. Said ch. 62, laws of 1871, is entitled "An act relating to the powers and government of cities of the second class," etc., and it contains the following curative provision:

"SEC. 20. In case the corporate authorities of any city have attempted to levy or assess any taxes for improvement, or for the payment of any bonds or other evidences of debt, which taxes or bonds are or may have been informal, illegal or void, for the want of sufficient authority or other cause, the council of such city, at the time fixed for levying general taxes, shall relevy and reassess any such taxes in the manner provided in this act, or shall bond such taxes and assessments as herein provided for their city indebtedness."

Said acts of 1868 and 1871 were in force when the action below was commenced in October 1871. While said act was pending, and before it was decided in this court, when first here, the legislature passed ch. 100, laws of 1872, entitled "An act to incorporate cities of the second class, and to repeal former acts." (Laws of 1872, p. 192.) Said act contains most of the provisions of the charter-acts of 1868 and 1871. It also contains this section:

"SEC. 41. In case the corporate authorities of any city have attempted to levy any taxes or assessments for improvement, or for the payment of any bonds or other evidence of debt, which taxes, assessments or bonds are or may have been informal, illegal or void, for the want of sufficient authority or other cause, the council of such city at the time fixed for levying general taxes shall relevy and reassess any such assessments or taxes in the manner provided in this act." (Laws of 1872, p. 204.)

In 13 Kas. 569, 588, this court held that said § 41 was constitutional and valid, and its effect was to cure the defect in the original levy of the taxes or assessments complained of. The motion for a rehearing is addressed mainly to the construction and effect of the several provisions above quoted.

R. M. Ruggles, for Norton and others, in support of the motion for rehearing.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: A motion for a rehearing in this case has been made, and an extended written argument filed in support thereof. The point made is this: The court in the prior opinion rested the decision upon the curative effect of the 41st section of ch. 100 of the laws of 1872. The work, payment for which the city was seeking to collect, was done in 1871. This curative section was enacted subsequently, in 1872, and we held it valid, and applicable to the proceedings in question. Now counsel contends that this 41st section is substantially the same as the 20th section of ch. 62 of the laws of 1871, and must therefore be considered as enacted in 1871, and before instead of after the work. He rests this claim upon a rule for the construction of statutes found on page 999 of the Gen. Stat., which reads:

“The provisions of any statute, so far as they are the same as those of any prior enactment, shall be construed as a continuation of such provisions, and not as a new enactment.”

This, as are all the other rules of construction, is subject however to this important qualification which prefaces them: “In the construction of the statutes of this state the following rules shall be observed, unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the legislature, or repugnant to the context of the statute.” Now in determining the intent of the legislature we are not limited to a mere consideration of the language employed. We may properly look to the purposes to be accomplished, the necessity and effect of the enactment under the different constructions suggested. Thus, if the legislature should pass at one session an act for raising revenue, which should specify no year, but simply direct the levy of a certain tax, and the succeeding legislature should pass an act in exactly the same language, no one would contend that the second was a mere continuation of the first, taking effect as of its date, and providing for no new levy. For the manifest intent of the legislature, an intent not manifested by the form of words, but by the purposes to be accomplished, and the surrounding circumstances, repudiates such a construction. So, if in 1875 the legislature had passed an act in exactly the same language as ch. 20 of the laws of 1874, appropriating $7,000 to the Leavenworth Protestant Orphan Asylum, is it not plain that the same would have accomplished a new donation? So again, if year by year we found the legislature passing acts in the same terms, validating defective tax proceedings, and curing irregularities therein, would not every one be constrained to say that these successive acts should be construed as separate enactments, each operating upon all defects and irregularities prior to it, and not as simply a continuation of the first and operating only upon matters prior to that? For otherwise, why this repetition of laws? In the illustration last cited the first enactment would cure (so far as remedial legislation can cure) all the preëxisting irregularities and defects; and a mere repetition would add nothing to its curative power. And to impute to the legislature an intent to go through the form and time and expense of legislation to do that already fully and completely done, is unwarranted.

City of Emporia v. Norton.

Now, is there any principle underlying these several cases of legislation which serves to indicate the legislative intent—any fact which makes plain its purpose? This fact is evident in reference to them all. The earlier act had accomplished its purpose, and spent its force prior to the enactment of the second. Much of legislation, perhaps most, is prospective in its reach, and, so to speak, of continuing operation. That is, it establishes a rule of action for future and indefinite time, operating upon all matters which may thereafter arise coming within its terms. Thus, the crimes act, defining what shall constitute certain offenses, and prescribing penalties therefor, operates upon all acts thereafter done coming within its terms. In case of a repetition of such legislation it may well be held, in view of the rule of construction above quoted, that in the absence of any particular matters indicating a contrary intent, the second enactment simply keeps alive and continues in force the prior. This preserves that continuity in legislation which is the evident purpose of the rule. It prevents those unfortunate breaks and interruptions, with their deplorable results, which in the absence of such a rule have been so often felt and so frequently noticed by courts here and in other states. But there is some legislation which, though prospective, operates only for the performance of a single definite act; and some retrospective, operating upon existing and past circumstances, and defining the rights and obligations derived therefrom. In both such cases the law is without any continuing force. In the first case, when the act authorized or required has been done, the law has exhausted its purpose, and spent its force. And in the second, it accomplishes its purpose at the very moment of its passage. In a certain sense it dies at the moment of its birth. Thus, an act authorizing an appropriation, accomplishes its purpose and exhausts its force when the appropriation has actually been made; and an act validating prior defective acknowledgements, or irregular tax proceedings, accomplishes its purposes as soon as it is passed. It becomes no stronger by lapse of time, and reaches and operates upon no other matters. Now in such cases, if a succeeding legislature enacts a similar law it cannot be that the legislature intended simply a continuation of the prior law, for there is really nothing to continue—that law has ceased to have force. It has no living, present operation, nothing to be continued. And the only way in which an intent to accomplish anything can be established is by construing the later law as a new enactment. It must be presumed that the legislature was familiar with the rules it had laid down for the construction of its own enactments, understood the scope and effect of its legislation, and by every law intended to accomplish something. We think therefore that this may be stated as a general rule, that where the legislature enacts a law which is the same in terms as a prior statute, if such prior statute has wholly accomplished its purpose, and spent its force, the latter law must be held, notwithstanding the rule of construction quoted, to be a new enactment, and not merely a continuation of the former. We have given this subject careful thought, for our first impression, after reading the brief of counsel, was, that his point was a good one. But the disastrous results which would flow from making this rule one of general application caused us to hesitate and reëxamine the matter. That reëxamination has satisfied us of the soundness of the distinction we have drawn between the classes of legislation as affected by this rule. Upon that, this motion is decided. We may be pardoned also for suggesting this query: Does the rule in any case prevent the later law from operating as a law of the date of its passage upon all matters within its terms? Is it not satisfied when it preserves a continuing force to the legislative command, a continuing operation to the legislative rule, leaving to each law to act as a present expression of legislative intent upon all matters within its terms? Must both laws in effect bear date as of the time of the enactment of the first? We have assumed in this case that the law of 1871 was purely retrospective in its operations; that it applied only to prior defects and irregularities, and was not intended to apply to defects that might thereafter arise in subsequent tax proceedings. Such is the claim of counsel, and for the purposes of this case and argument we do not question the claim. We have also assumed that there is such a similarity between the two statutes as to bring them within the terms of the quoted rule, although the latter law speaks of "taxes and assessments for improvements," while the language of the former is "taxes for improvements." The claim of counsel is, that the context makes it plain that this expression was intended to include both taxes and assessments in the sense that these terms are generally used. To sustain this claim he has devoted a large portion of his argument. Yet conceding both these matters to be as counsel claims, we are constrained, for the reasons given, to decide adversely upon the main question, and must overrule his motion.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

City of Emporia v. Norton.

O. H. P. POLK, et al., v. JEHIL ANDERSON.WRITTEN CONTRACT; Terms and Conditions; Contemporaneous Parol Contract.

On December 22d 1873, Anderson received of P. and another 203 Texas steers, to be taken care of and fed by him for P. until July 10th 1874, and Anderson was to receive, as compensation therefor, five cents for each pound which each steer should, at the end of that time, weigh over and above eight hundred and fifty pounds. Afterward, and on March 4th 1874, said contract was superseded, as both parties admit, by another contract, under which second contract P. received back all of said steers except 100 head. At the time this second contract was entered into a written instrument was executed by Anderson, which reads as follows: "This agreement, witnesseth, that whereas we have become satisfied we cannot carry out and fulfill our contract made and entered into with P. on the 22d of December 1873, about feeding their cattle, we therefore hereby agree to release to them all but 100 head of heaviest steers. which we agree to take at 1,000 pounds each and feed according to our original contract at five cents per pound for all they may gain by the first of July next." Held, that notwithstanding said written instrument, the plaintiff Anderson might show that P. by a parol contract entered into at the time or before the execution of said written instrument, agreed to pay the plaintiff as compensation for taking care of and feeding said 203 head of steers from December 22d 1873 until March 4th 1874, what was reasonable and right, to-wit, compensation for the admitted gain of the 100 head which Anderson was to keep after March 4th, and reasonable compensation for feeding and taking care of the others, less what P. had already paid him. favor of Anderson for $1,700, and the defendants bring the case here on error.

W. R. Wagstaff, and V. D. Craig, for plaintiffs in error:

Anderson claims reasonable compensation for feed and care of cattle. Polks deny, and set up two written contracts, covering the subject-matter in the petition. Anderson in reply admits the execution of the written contracts. Then there can be no issue as to damages as set up in the petition. The issues for trial to jury are on the new matter in the answer and reply. There can be no issue on the first written contract, because that was mutually adjusted by the parties, as shown by the second contract. The remaining issues of fact arise on the second contract, and the new matter in the third defense, and the new matter set up in the reply. All the evidence proves the written contracts, and none contradicts; all the evidence shows a settlement under the second contract, and none contradicts; all the evidence shows that Anderson commenced feeding the 101 head under the second contract on the 4th of March, and none contradicts; all the evidence shows that the Polks took the 101 head of cattle into custody on the 20th of March, and none contradicts; all the evidence shows that after March 20th, Anderson never expended either time or money in caring for said stock, and none contradicts; all the evidence shows that Anderson had the charge, care and feeding of said stock—101 head—16 days and no more; all the evidence shows that before the 20th of March, Anderson sent word to the Polks that he would feed the cattle no more corn than he had on hand, unless Polks would send him more money; all the evidence shows that Anderson had not sufficient feed on hand to provide for said cattle under said contract without making additional purchases; all the evidence shows that the 101 head of cattle, from March 4th to March 20th, had not increased in weight; all the evidence shows that Anderson by contract was to receive five cents per pound for increase of weight over 1,000 pounds on each steer, and no more. There is no evidence to show the reasonable and probable increase of each steer with proper feed under the contract to March 20th. It seems clear from a general view of the pleadings and the evidence, that the jury, in making up a verdict in the sum of $1,700, disregarded all the issues made up in the case, disregarded the binding obligations of the written contracts, and attempted to and did make up their verdict on the theory of a reasonable compensation as alleged in the petition, not upon issues joined, and in violation of the established rules of the courts of law. 12 Kas. 152; 8 Kas. 497; 12 Am. L. Reg. 442; 12 Ohio St. 360.

---

Opinion of the Court.

The verdict and judgment ought to be set aside and a new trial granted, on the ground of newly-discovered evidence; for misconduct on the part of officers of the court pending the trial; for misconduct and unlawful combinations of witnesses on the part of the defendant in error pending the trial, by which the rights of the plaintiffs in error were prejudiced.

Simpson & Brayman, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by Jehil Anderson against O. H. P. Polk and John W. Polk, for taking care of and feeding 203 head of cattle from December 22d 1873 to March 22d 1874. We do not think that the issues in the court below were what the plaintiffs in error (defendants below) now seem to claim them to have been. The case was certainly not tried in the court below as though such were the issues, but was tried upon a very different theory. By the original contract between Anderson and the Polks, Anderson was to receive as compensation for taking care of and feeding said cattle, from December 22d 1873 until July 10th 1874, five cents for each pound which each steer (for they were all Texas steers) should at the end of that time weigh over and above eight hundred and fifty pounds. Afterward, and on March

Polk v. Anderson.

4th 1874, this contract was superseded, as both parties admit, by another contract, under which second contract the Polks received back all of said cattle except 100 head. The Polks claim that said original contract was superseded by a contract wholly in writing. Anderson claims that it was not. This issue we think was sufficiently raised by the pleadings; and the whole case was tried in the court below upon the theory that this question was put in issue by the pleadings. It is admitted by the pleadings that at the time said second contract was made the following written instrument was executed, to-wit:

"THIS agreement, signed and delivered this 4th day of March 1874, witnesseth; that whereas, we have become satisfied we cannot carry out and fulfill our contract made and entered into with John W. Polk and O. H. P. Polk on the 22d December 1874 about feeding their cattle, we therefore hereby agree to release to them all but 100 head of heaviest of steers, which we agree to take at 1,000 pounds each, and feed according to our original contract at five cents per pound for all they may gain by the first of July next. Witness our hands.

JEHIL ANDERSON."

The Polks claim that this embodied the whole of the second contract, and that by virtue of it Anderson was to have nothing for feeding said 203 head of cattle from December 22d 1873 to March 4th 1874. Anderson on the contrary claims that this did not embody the whole of said second contract; but by virtue of the terms of said second contract, as it was in fact made, he was to receive as compensation for feeding said cattle from December 22d to March 4th what was reasonable and right, to-wit: he was to receive compensation for the admitted gain of the 100 head which he was to keep after March 4th, and reasonable compensation for feeding and taking care of the others, less what the Polks had already paid him. This, the pleadings as well as the evidence show. But the question arises, could Anderson show this, either by the pleading or the evidence, after he had admitted the execution of said written instrument. We think he could. It would not tend to vary

---

Opinion of the Court.

or contradict the terms of said written instrument. Said written instrument evidently does not contain the whole of the contract as made by the parties. It does not show what the Polks agreed to do. All that they agreed to do rests wholly in parol. They admit that they agreed to receive the cattle which Anderson released; and to dispense with said original contract; but this is not shown by said written instrument. It rests wholly in parol. And why may not the balance of Polk's agreement, as claimed by Anderson, rest in parol? The written instrument does not pretend to show that Anderson was to receive no compensation for his care and feed furnished to the cattle prior to March 4th. And Anderson claims that the Polks agreed that he should. Besides, it is shown both by the pleadings and Anderson's evidence that Anderson is an illiterate man, that he cannot read, that he relied upon the statements of the Polks, or rather upon the statements of Polks' agents, as to what said written instrument contained, and that, from such statements he believed at the time he authorized his name to be signed to said written instrument that it contained all that he now claims was included in said second contract as it was in fact made by the parties. But, however said written instrument might be construed, still the verdict should have been for Anderson and against the Polks for some amount; for, taking the second contract as the Polks claim that it was, they violated even it. They drove away said 100 head of cattle on March 20th without the consent of Anderson. This substantially disposes of this case in this court. It is wholly unnecessary to discuss the points made, that the verdict is against the evidence, or is excessive, for it is certainly not more so than numerous verdicts which this court has already sustained.

The plaintiffs in error also moved for a new trial because of newly-discovered evidence. Now so far as the newly-discovered evidence was relevant and competent, it was merely cumulative, and we think by the exercise of reasonable diligence it could have been obtained for the trial. The testimony of Ira Allison would have been merely cumulative.

Simpson v. Boring.

---

It would have had scarcely any weight in the case, and probably by the exercise of the slightest diligence it could have been procured. It would seem from the evidence that Allison was a half-witted boy; that he came to Paola, and into the court-room, without a subpoena, for the purpose of testifying for the Polks; that some of the witnesses for Anderson, and one of the bailiffs of the court, played what they considered a practical joke upon him, and scared him out of town. Now this conduct may have been reprehensible, but the plaintiff Anderson was not responsible for it. He knew nothing of it till after the trial.

We think there was no error or irregularities in any of the proceedings that would authorize a reversal of the judgment below.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

mount title in himself; third, "that the matter in dispute was res adjudicata, having once been litigated and decided in an action between the same parties in the same court," making a profert and an exhibit of the record in an action of trespass formerly tried in said court, wherein "said William Simpson was plaintiff, and said E. J. Boring was defendant." [Said "exhibit" shows among other things that Simpson, in September 1872, filed a petition in trespass, which petition contains two counts—the first, alleging that Simpson in and previous to the year 1871 was in the possession of certain lands, (being the same lands in controversy in this action,) and that Boring in March 1871, and on divers days since that date, had broken and entered his (Simpson's) close, and committed injuries to the grass growing thereon, and had broken and destroyed the fences, etc. In the second count, Simpson alleged that he was "the owner of certain boards, rails, posts and stakes, and other fencing materials, which property was in March 1871" on said lands, and that Boring had "seized, taken, broken, cut, knocked down, injured and destroyed said personal property, to the damage," etc. To said petition, (as shown by the record,) Boring, in October 1872, filed an answer, which contained, first, a general denial; second, that he at the time of the alleged trespasses was "in the actual and lawful possession of the lands described in plaintiff's petition;" and third, that he (Boring) "is, and at the times mentioned was, the rightful owner of said premises," etc. A reply was filed, and the record shows that said action of "Simpson against Boring," for alleged trespasses, was tried at the July Term 1873 of the Bourbon district court, and that judgment therein was rendered in favor of said Simpson for one cent damages.] To the answer in this case, setting up said matters in defense of plaintiff's right to recover the possession of the land, Boring replied, a general denial. that at the commencement of this action the said plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the land described in the petition, and that the defendant, Wm. Simpson, wrongfully withheld possession thereof from the plaintiff. And we assess plaintiff's damages for injuries sustained to said premises at the sum of one cent."

New trial refused, and judgment on the verdict. Simpson brings the case here on error.

McComas & McKeighan, for plaintiff in error.

W. C. Webb, and W. J. Bawden, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action in the nature of ejectment, brought by Ezekiel J. Boring against William Simpson to recover certain land in Bourbon county. The pleadings show that the title to the land passed originally from the government of the United States to the Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Company, and that the plaintiff claims title under and through said railroad company. The pleadings also show that the defendant claims adversely to both the plaintiff and the railroad company. He claims that at the time the patent for the land was issued by the government to said railroad company, one Alexander Haskins had the right under the Cherokee treaty of July 19th 1866, (14 U. S. Stat. at Large, 799, 804, § 17,) to purchase said land from the government, and that he (the defendant) has succeeded to the rights of Haskins, and that therefore the railroad company holds said property in trust for him, the defendant. The defendant set forth in his answer all the facts of his claim, fully and specifically, and upon the truth of these facts the plaintiff took issue by denying the same generally in his reply. The issues of fact thus made were submitted to a jury, and the jury on the merits of the case found in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant. This is about all there is of the case. The defendant failed upon the facts of the case, and not upon the law. His allegations of fact were found by the jury not to be true; and hence there is no question of law now involved in the case that merits much consideration from this court. If the defendant's facts had been found to be true, he would have recovered so far as the law is concerned. The case was very fairly submitted to the jury. The jury found against the defendant, and their verdict is unquestionably correct. It is true, the plaintiff did not hold the legal title (as contradistinguished from the equitable title) to the property in dispute; but that was not necessary. (Gen. Stat. 747, § 595; Duffey v. Rafferty, 15 Kas. 9.) The railroad company held the legal title, and the plaintiff claimed by virtue of a written contract of purchase of said property from the railroad company. Under said contract the plaintiff had the right of possession of the property as against the railroad company, or as against any person holding under the railroad company. The contract was still subsisting and in full force when this action was commenced, and when it was tried; and this we think was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to recover. The defendant had no interest whatever in the property as against the railroad company, or the plaintiff. And any kind of an estate in land, legal or equitable, is sufficient to enable a plaintiff to recover in this kind of action as against a party who has no interest in the property. The question of who shall recover in this kind of action depends entirely upon the question who has the paramount right to the property. (Duffey v. Rafferty, supra. See also, K. P. Rly. Co. v. McBratney, 10 Kas. 415; The State v. Stringfellow, 2 Kas. 263.)

The former case of Simpson v. Boring can have no possible bearing upon the present case. Simpson might have recovered in that case upon the second count of his petition for the "boards, rails, posts and stakes, and other fencing materials," "personal property," which he alleges Boring injured and destroyed, without showing that he (Simpson) ever had the least interest in the real estate now in controversy, or that he had ever been in the possession thereof, or even that he had ever seen or heard of the same.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

And these are all questions of fact entirely for the jury to consider and determine under proper instructions from the court. [A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. v. Stanford, 12-354; *A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. v. company. He alleged in his petition that the engine was old and out of repair, that the servants of the company were careless in the management of such engine, and by such careless management fires were set to the prairie every few rods between Topeka and Newton; that at least a dozen fires were set by said engine in Chase county, and by reason of said fires as aforesaid certain property of plaintiff's, 80 rods of post-and-rail fence, three corrals, one granary, fifty tons of hay, one stable, 125 bushels of corn, 150 bushels of oats, etc., etc., was burned up, to his damage $1,094. The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: This is another of those actions brought against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company for damages claimed to have resulted from the negligence of the company in permitting fire to escape from its engine No. 9, on October 12th 1871. We have already decided four of those cases, to-wit, that of William M. Stanford, (12 Kas. 354,) of Neil Campbell, of Joseph Rickabaugh, and of Stephen Shaw, (ante, 200, 209.) In deciding those cases we have decided every question involved in this case, and several others besides. In fact, only the main questions involved in those other cases are involved in this, to-wit: 1st, May negligence on the part of the railway company in permitting fire to escape from its engines, be shown wholly by circumstantial evidence, or must it be shown by some direct proof of some particular act of negligence? 2d, Where the fire which is negligently permitted to escape from the engines of the railway company, does not fall upon the plaintiff's property, but falls on the property of another, setting it on fire, and then spreads by means of dry grass, stubble and other combustible materials, and passes over the lands of several different persons before it reaches the property of the plaintiff, and finally reaching the property of the plaintiff, at a great distance from where the fire was first kindled, sets it on fire, and consumes it, is the negligence of the railway company in such a case too remote from the injury to the plaintiff's property to constitute the basis of a cause of action against the company?

As to the first question, we have decided that circumstantial evidence is sufficient; as to the second question, we have decided that the injury is not too remote to constitute the basis of a cause of action; and we are entirely satisfied with our decision of both of these questions. As to the first question, this case furnishes the strongest kind of evidence of the correctness of the decision. It was not within the power of the plaintiff to furnish any direct evidence of any particular act of negligence. It was shown by the defendant's witnesses that the engine from which the fire escaped was a first-class engine, that it was in good order and condition, and that it was operated by a careful and skillful engineer, to the best of his knowledge and ability. Now for the purposes of this case we will suppose that all this is true, except the mere fact of operating the engine; and indeed the jury so find. The only negligence that they find is carelessness on the part of the engineer in operating the engine. Now how could the plaintiff prove this carelessness or negligence on the part of the engineer by any direct evidence? If the engineer was guilty of any carelessness or negligence, probably he alone knew it; and possibly even he himself would not have been fully aware of his own carelessness or negligence. Now the plaintiff proved that said engine on said 12th of October caused a large number of fires, a dozen or more; that other engines operated over the same track on the same day, and before and since, did not produce any such result; and that good engines properly managed would not under the same circumstances be likely to produce any such result. Now it would seem to us that such evidence would lead irresistibly to the conclusion that there was negligence somewhere. Of course it would not locate the negligence. It would not show whether the fault was with the engine, or with the engineer; whether the engine was good, but was out of order; or bad, though in order; whether the engineer was competent, but acted carelessly; or incompetent, though he acted as well as he knew. And if the engine was bad or out of order, it would not show in what particular it was bad or out of order. And if the engineer acted unskillfully or carelessly, it would not show in what particular he acted unskillfully or carelessly. Yet such evidence is competent, and it would be about the best that the plaintiff could from the nature of the case produce. Now when the jury found that the engine was good, and in proper condition, then they had to weigh the foregoing circumstantial evidence with the direct testimony of the engineer who testified that he managed the engine skillfully and carefully. And the jury had the unquestionable right to weigh both, and determine the value of each. If they believed from all the circumstances of the case that the testimony of the engineer was wholly unworthy of credit or belief, they had the undoubted right to so find, and to wholly disregard it. They had the right to say that the circumstantial evidence of the plaintiff tending to prove negligence immeasurably outweighed the direct and positive testimony of the engineer declaring that there was no negligence. The court could not weigh the evidence. The law does not undertake to define what such evidence is worth. But the whole matter comes within the legitimate scope and province of the jury. We would further refer to the case of the A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kas. 370-372, and cases there cited. The decisions in Missouri are peculiar, and to some extent conflicting. (Smith v. H. & St. J. Rld. Co., 37 Mo. 287, 391, et seq.; Fitch v. Pacific Rld. Co., 45 Mo. 322, 325, et seq.; Coates v. M. K. & T. Rld. Co., 61 Mo. 36; same case, 8 Central Law Journal, 209.)

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

As to the second question, it is scarcely necessary to do more than to refer to the decision of this court in the case of the A. T. & S. F. Rld. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kas. 375 to 379, where the question is discussed at length, and the authorities cited. We would however refer to the following additional authorities: Annapolis & Elkridge Rld. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 116; Balt. & Ohio Rld. Co. v. Shipley, 39 Md. 252; Penn. Rld. Co. v. Hope, 1 Law & Eq. Rep. 272, case decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, Feb. 1876; Webb v. R. W. & O. Rld. Co., 49 N. Y. 420; Pallett v. Long, 56 N. Y. 200.

Since the promulgation of the decision in the Stanford case, an elaborate article on this same question has been written by Dr. Francis Wharton, and published in the Southern Law Review, (Vol. 1, New Series, page 729.) That article controverts the doctrine enunciated in the Stanford case. But we think the argument of the learned Doctor will be found to be wholly unsatisfactory, and the conclusion reached by him not founded upon either reason or authority. Even the decisions which he refers to, with some exceptions, do not as we think sustain his views. With reference to the irrelevant matters discussed by the Doctor we do not take issue. It is only upon the main proposition, that is, that the railroad company is responsible only for property destroyed by it by fire where the company directly communicates the fire to such property, that we take issue. He claims that where the railroad company does not directly set fire to the plaintiff's property, but sets fire to some other person's property, and that sets fire to the plaintiff's, that the act of the railroad company is too remote a cause of the burning of the plaintiff's property to constitute the basis for an action against the railroad company. Now, the word "cause" has various meanings, and shades of meaning. Philosophically speaking, the sum of all the antecedents of any event, constitutes its cause. Ordinarily however we consider each separate antecedent of an event as a cause for such event, provided however that the event could not have happened except for such antecedent. Taking this view of cause and effect, there may be many causes conjointly and consecutively

Opinion of the Court.

---

contributing to produce one and the same final result. And these causes may differ vastly in their proximity or remoteness to or from such final result. But still, any one of them may, as we think, be selected as the responsible cause for such final result, provided it be selected in accordance with the rules of law settled and established by the numerous adjudications of the courts. In the first place, such antecedent cause must be wrongful. For the rightful and bona fide exercise of a lawful power or authority can never be considered as the basis for a cause of action. Even if the fire from a railroad engine should fall directly upon the plaintiff's property and consume it, the railroad company would not be responsible unless such company were guilty of some wrong. If the company should exercise reasonable diligence in procuring a good engine, and then should carefully manage the same, it would not be responsible for any unforeseen and fortuitous event which might result from the escape of fire from such engine, however disastrous the same might be to the interests of individual persons. The company can in no case be held liable for the escape of fire from its engines unless it is guilty of negligence in permitting the fire to escape. Secondly, the circumstances of the case should be such that the author of such wrongful cause could by the exercise of reasonable diligence be able to anticipate the final injurious result as likely to occur, and as the natural and probable consequence of his wrongful act. For if some new cause, not the result of the first wrongful cause, not under the control of the wrongdoer, not such as he could by the exercise of reasonable diligence anticipate as likely to occur, and except for which the final injurious result could not happen, should intervene between the first wrongful cause and the final injurious result, such wrongdoer would not be liable. His cause would be too remote to constitute the basis of a cause of action against him. It would be placed back of and behind another efficient cause, which he could not have had in contemplation when he put into operation his cause. Observing these rules and limitations, an unlimited number of causes and effects may intervene between the first wrongful cause and the final injurious result, and still the author of such wrongful cause be held responsible for the last as well as the first, and for every intermediate result. In the burning of prairie grass, like the case at bar, the number of causes and effects that may intervene between the first cause and the final result is illimitable. Each blade of grass is a separate and distinct entity, and the burning of each blade is both an effect and a cause. It is the effect of the burning of the blades immediately preceding it, and the cause, along with other blades, of the burning of the blades immediately succeeding it. And yet all these causes and effects are so intimately interlinked and blended with each other that we look upon the whole of them as constituting but one grand, united, continuous and single whole. We look upon the whole fire as only one fire, and the whole of these separate causes as merely one cause. The question then of liability in cases of this kind does not depend upon the number of causes contributing to produce the final result, nor upon the location of these causes with reference to each other in any grand concatenation or net-work of causes coöperating consecutively or conjointly, or both, to produce the final result; but it depends upon whether the cause put in operation by the defendant was wrongful, whether it was efficient, and whether the author thereof could at the time of putting it in operation have anticipated the final injurious result as likely to occur.

---

The questions in this case are as follows: 1st, Was the railroad company negligent in permitting the fire to escape? 2d, Would the plaintiff's property have been destroyed by fire as it was destroyed, except for the fire which the railroad company permitted to escape? 3d, Could the railroad company by the exercise of reasonable diligence at or before the time of permitting said fire to escape have anticipated the burning of the plaintiff's property as likely to occur, and as the natural and probable consequence of permitting said fire to escape? If the first and third of these questions should be answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative, the company would be held liable. And these are questions of fact entirely

HENRY WRIGHT V. ALLIE B. BACHELLER.

1. AMENDMENTS TO PLEADINGS; *Error to Refuse. Courts may sometimes commit substantial error by refusing to permit amendments to be made to pleadings during the progress of the trial [Hunt v. Fyffe, McC.-75; Gaylord v. Stebbins, 4-42]; and held, under the circumstances of this case, that the court below did commit substantial error, by refusing, during the trial, to permit the plaintiff below to so amend his reply as to put in issue the truth of certain portions of the defendant's answer.
2. DEFENSES—*Inconsistent. Inconsistent pleas should not be encouraged. [Munn v. Taulman, 1-254; Auld, et al., v. Butcher, et al., 2-136; Butler v. Kaulback, 8-672; Map Co. v. Jones, 27-177; Cole v. Woodson, 32-272; Bierer v. Fritz, 32-330; see cases cited in K. P. Rly. v. Kunkel, 17-145.]
3. CROSS-PETITION—*To be Full and Complete. Where defendant sets forth in his answer a cause of action of his own, by way of counter-claim, and asks affirmative relief thereon, he must set forth such cause of action with the same particularity, completeness and exactness that he would if he were the plaintiff, and were setting it forth in his petition. [Mallory v. Leiby, 1-97; Allen v. Douglass, 29-412.] Hence, it is not sufficient for a defendant, when sued on a mortgage, to allege, for the purpose of obtaining affirmative relief thereon, that he never executed any mortgage, but if he did it was done under duress.

Error from Lyon District Court.

FORCLOSURE of mortgage, brought by Wright against C. B. Bacheller and Allie B. Bacheller. The material facts, pleadings, issues and proceedings, are sufficiently stated in the opinion. At the March Term 1874 of the district court, Wright recovered judgment in personam against C. B. Bacheller for the amount of the note, but the court made a decree in favor of Allie B. Bacheller setting aside and canceling the mortgage. From this decree Wright appeals, and brings the case here on error.

---

Wright v. Bacheller.

---

John V. Saunders, for plaintiff.

Ruggles & Sterry, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action upon a promissory note and a real-estate mortgage made to secure said note. The action was commenced by Henry Wright against C. B. Bacheller and Allie B. Bacheller. The court below rendered a personal judgment in favor of Wright and against C. B. Bacheller for the amount of the note; but rendered a judgment in favor of the other defendant, the said Allie B., that said mortgage should be delivered up and canceled, and held to be no cloud upon the mortgaged premises. It is this latter judgment of which the plaintiff in error now complains. The principal questions involved in the case are, whether the court below erred in refusing to allow Wright to amend his replication, and whether the answer of the defendant Allie B. is sufficient to sustain the judgment rendered in her favor. There are several other questions however involved in the case, which we may consider as we pass along. The discussion of the first question will require that we shall give substantially a history of the proceedings in the court below. The petition was an ordinary petition on a note and mortgage. It described the note and mortgage, alleging the execution of the note by the defendant C. B. Bacheller, and the execution of the mortgage by both defendants, and giving a copy of the note, but not giving a copy of the mortgage. The defendant C. B. Bacheller never filed any pleading or motion in the case, or made any appearance as a party therein. The defendant Allie B. contested the plaintiff's cause of action. She filed an answer, but before doing so moved the court below "to compel the plaintiff to file with and make a part of his said petition a copy of said mortgage-deed mentioned in said plaintiff's petition." The court sustained the motion, and a copy of said mortgage was so filed. There was a clerical mistake however made in the petition in describing said mortgage. In one place, where the word "exchange" occurred in the original mortgage the word "chenange" was written in the petition. In all other respects the mortgage seems to have been correctly described. But the copy of the mortgage filed in the case in pursuance of said motion of the defendant, and of the order of the court below, seems to have been an exact and literal copy in every particular of the original mortgage as the same was executed by the two defendants. Afterward, the defendant Allie B. filed an answer to the plaintiff's petition, containing two defenses. The first defense was substantially a denial of the very existence of said mortgage. It reads as follows, (omitting the heading,) "That she denies each and every allegation in plaintiff's petition contained, so far as the same in any manner refers to the mortgage-deed mentioned in plaintiff's petition." This defense was verified by the oath of said Allie B. Bacheller, and of course put in issue the execution of said mortgage, and threw the burden of proving its execution and its existence upon the plaintiff. The second defense reads as follows:

"The defendant Allie B. Bacheller, further answering, separately, for herself, and for a cross-petition says: That if she ever executed any mortgage-deed (which she denies,) to said plaintiff, either separately or conjointly with her husband C. B. Bacheller, the execution of the same was while the married relation between her and the defendant C. B. Bacheller subsisted, and she, this defendant, was a feme covert; and that said mortgage-deed, if any was given (which she denies,) was given to secure the payment of a pretended promissory note to the consideration of which said pretended promissory note this defendant was an entire stranger, (if there was any consideration for the said note, which this defendant denies;) and that said mortgage-deed (if any was executed, which she denies,) was for the premises which were used and occupied at the time as a homestead by this defendant and her family, and which said premises has ever since been and now is used and occupied as a homestead by this defendant and her said family, (consisting of three minor children;) that said mortgage-deed (if any there was executed by this defendant, which she denies,) the execution of the same was not the voluntary act and deed of this defendant, but the execution of the same

(if any execution there was,) was extorted from and forced upon her, this defendant, by her said husband, said C. B. Bacheller, while the marriage relation existed as aforesaid, by threats and intimidations by the said C. B. Bacheller to her (this defendant) made, that he the said C. B. Bacheller would kill her, the said defendant, if she, the said defendant, did not execute the same; and that he, the said C. B. Bacheller, would do this defendant grievous and great bodily harm unless she, the said defendant, did execute the said mortgage-deed to said plaintiff for the said premises, and that he the said C. B. Bacheller would turn this defendant, then his lawful wife, out of house and home, unless she, the said defendant, would execute the said mortgage deed, (if said mortgage-deed ever was executed,) and that he the said C. B. Bacheller would drive her, the said defendant, from her said home and send her to her father in the state of Kentucky, unless she the said defendant would execute the said mortgage-deed to said plaintiff; and that he the said C. B. Bacheller, who was at that time the lawful husband of this defendant, would separate himself from and abandon this defendant, together with her children, unless she the said defendant would execute said mortgage-deed; and that this defendant, believing that the said C. B. Bacheller would put his said threats and intimidations into execution if she the said defendant should not execute the same, and by reason thereof, and out of fear that he would do so, she the said defendant was constrained, forced, and compelled, by fear of great bodily harm, to execute the same against her (the said defendant's) will and consent, and contrary to her expressed wishes; and this defendant paid out of her own private earnings, and her separate property, a great portion of the purchase-money of said premises.

"Wherefore this defendant prays that said pretended mortgage-deed (if any there was executed,) be set aside and held for naught, and this defendant's title to said premises so as aforesaid occupied by her as a homestead be forever quieted against any claim of the said plaintiff thereto, and for such other and further relief as to the court, in equity and good conscience, may seem just and proper, besides the cost of this action."

Afterward, on the 27th of April 1873, the plaintiff filed his reply to this answer, which reads as follows:

(Title.) "And now comes the plaintiff by O. M. his attorney, and for reply to the defendant Allie B. Bacheller's answer herein, denies each and every allegation therein."

On the 28d of May the plaintiff filed his motion for leave to file an amended replication in said action, which motion was granted, and the court entered an order allowing the plaintiff to file an amended reply; and on the same day the plaintiff filed an amended reply, which is duly entitled in the name of the court, and names of plaintiff and both defendants, and which then reads as follows:

"And now comes the said plaintiff, Henry Wright, and for his amended and special replication herein, (leave of court first had,) says, first, he admits that at the time of the execution of the mortgage in question the said Allie B. Bacheller was the lawful wife of the defendant C. B. Bacheller.

"The plaintiff for a further special replication to the second defense of defendant Allie B. Bacheller stated in her answer filed herein, states that on the 24th of December 1872, and after the execution of the mortgage in dispute, the defendant C. B. Bacheller, by a judgment rendered in this court, obtained a divorce from the defendant Allie B. Bacheller; that a judgment was rendered in said divorce suit, directing the said C. B. Bacheller to convey to the said Allie B. Bacheller the house and lot mentioned in plaintiff's petition, said conveyance to be by quitclaim deed, which the defendant C. B. Bacheller did execute and deliver to the defendant Allie B. Bacheller on the 1st day of January 1873; that by agreement between the defendants, the defendant Allie B. Bacheller was to pay off and discharge the said mortgage; that she well knew that the amount claimed was due and owing to the plaintiff for money borrowed of him to pay off a mortgage, which last-mentioned mortgage was given for the balance due for the purchase-money of said house and lot; and that the defendant Allie B. Bacheller, then and there promised the defendant C. B. Bacheller to pay the sum due the plaintiff on the mortgage in the petition mentioned, if the said C. B. Bacheller would so deed her said house and lot, the said C. B. Bacheller at the time having the legal title to said house and lot. Wherefore plaintiff asks judgment," etc.

The case was afterward tried by the court below, without a jury. The record shows that when the plaintiff first offered upon the trial to introduce his evidence, "the defendant Allie

B. objected to the introduction of any evidence being given by the plaintiff against her, because no evidence was admissible under the pleadings, which objection was overruled by the court, to which ruling of the court the said Allie B. Bacheller excepted." The plaintiff then introduced his evidence, to nearly all of which the defendant Allie B. objected, as being "irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial." At one time the objection was, that the evidence was "incompetent and irrelevant, and no issue joined, and inadmissible under the pleadings." The said evidence of the plaintiff was introduced for the purpose of proving the due execution of said mortgage, and prima facie it unquestionably did so prove the same. After the plaintiff rested his case, the defendant Allie B. demurred to the plaintiff's evidence on the grounds, as alleged by her, "that the plaintiff has not adduced sufficient evidence in this case to entitle him to any relief against the defendant, or to prove a cause of action," which demurrer the court overruled, and the defendant excepted. The defendant Allie B. then introduced several witnesses for the purpose of proving that she did not execute said deed voluntarily, but that she executed it because her husband threatened to drive her from the premises if she did not execute it. She herself testified that she executed the mortgage, but that she did not do it voluntarily. The defendant then rested, and the plaintiff proceeded to offer rebutting evidence, and while introducing such evidence the defendant for the first time raised the specific question that there was no sufficient reply in the case putting in issue the allegations of the defendant's answer. "Defendant Allie B. Bacheller moved to strike out all the evidence introduced by plaintiff in rebuttal on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial under the issues made by the pleadings, and no general denial in; overruled, and excepted to by defendant Allie B. Bacheller. But afterward, the court having minutely examined the pleadings decided that there was no general denial in reply, and ruled out the plaintiff's evidence in rebuttal so far as Ed. S. Waterbury's testimony, and that part of exhibit A of this bill of exceptions, which purports to be the acknowledgment of Allie B. Bacheller—to which ruling of the court the plaintiff excepted.” Exhibit A was the said mortgage, and the acknowledgment thereon, as the same appears to have been executed and acknowledged by the two defendants. The mortgage and acknowledgment were in due form, and appeared on their face to be properly executed, and both had previously been read in evidence. It is evident from the foregoing, as well as from the absence of every thing in the record showing the contrary, that the precise question as to whether the plaintiff had a general denial in the case, had not previously been raised. The “Defendant Allie B. Bacheller then moved the court for judgment in her favor upon the pleadings in the case, to which plaintiff objected. The plaintiff then filed a motion for leave to amend his amended reply, supported by affidavits,” which motion reads as follows:

(Title.) “Comes now the plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, and moves the court for leave to amend his amended reply so as to deny each and every allegation of the second defense set forth in the answer of defendant Allie B. Bacheller, except that she was the wife of C. B. Bacheller—for the reason that the attorney of said plaintiff was of the opinion, until the present ruling of the court, that the original reply filed herein (which was a general denial) was to still stand, and was not superseded by the amended reply filed herein, but that in point of law said amended reply was only additional to the original reply. O. M., Att’y for Plaintiff.”

The affidavit of said O. M. in support of said motion reads as follows:

(Title and Venue.) “O. M. being duly sworn deposes and says, that he is the attorney for the plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, who made up the pleadings for the plaintiff in said cause, and that when he filed the amended reply herein he had no intention of abandoning the original reply then on file in said cause, but intended the amended reply to be only an addition to said original reply, and then believed (and did believe until the ruling of the court this morning) that such was the legal effect of said amended reply, and that it did not supersede said amended reply but that both stood together.”

The court below overruled the plaintiff’s motion for leave to amend his reply, and then overruled the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. Afterward, other and additional evidence was introduced by each of the parties.

Wright v. Bacheller.

Under the circumstances of this case we think the court erred in overruling the plaintiff's motion to amend his reply. The plaintiff seems to have prosecuted his action in the utmost good faith in every particular, from beginning to end. He

1. Amendment to pleadings; error to refuse. seems to have been entirely willing and desirous to have the case tried and decided upon its merits, notwithstanding the extraordinary answer filed by the defendant. He made no attack upon the sufficiency or good faith of such answer, but seemed desirous only of showing by evidence that the allegations thereof most favorable to the defendant were not true. And up to the time that the court ruled that he had no general denial in the case, he thought he could do so. He seems to have supposed that his "amended and special replication," was only a special replication in the case, and that his "general denial" was still his general plea therein, putting in issue all the material allegations of the second defense stated in defendant's answer. He in good faith intended that such should be the case, and with a few additional words in his reply such might have been the case. Amendments may be made in the manner the plaintiff intended to amend his original reply. (Fitzpatrick v. Gebhart, 7 Kas. 35, 44; Hill v. Supervisors, 10 Ohio St. 621.) But the plaintiff by the omission of a few words failed to make the amendment he desired to make. Now, replies may sometimes be waived by the parties going to trial without them. (Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kas. 177, 189, 190; Russell v. Smith, 14 Kas. 336.) A reply may sometimes be filed during the progress of the trial. (Taylor v. Hosick, 13 Kas. 518, 526; Grant v. Pendery, 15 Kas. 236.) Amendments may sometimes be made to pleadings during the progress of the trial, or even subsequent thereto, upon such terms as may be just. (Code, § 139.) Courts may sometimes commit substantial error by refusing to permit amendments to be made. (Koons v. Price, 40 Ind. 164.) And they may even commit substantial error in some cases by refusing to permit amendments to be so made during the progress of the trial. (Gaylord v. Stebbins, 4 Kas. 42; Hunt v. Fyffe, McCahon, 75; Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 318; Schieffelin v. Whipple, 10 Wis. 81, 82; Bailey v. Kay, 50 Barb. 110.) But when we examine the defendant's answer, the reason becomes still more apparent why the plaintiff should have been allowed to amend his reply. The plaintiff desired to amend his reply so that it would put in issue those allegations of the defendant's answer which declared that she was forced by her husband to execute said mortgage against her will. He wished to deny what she had already in one sense denied. He wished to deny that she had involuntarily executed the mortgage. She had already denied that she had executed it either voluntarily or involuntarily. This she did in the same defense in which the allegations are which the plaintiff wished to deny. But in verifying the first defense she swore substantially that she never executed said mortgage in any manner, either voluntarily or involuntarily. In the second defense she denies that "she ever executed any mortgage-deed to said plaintiff, either separately or conjointly with her husband." These allegations are inconsistent with the affirmative allegations of the answer; for it cannot be true that she executed a mortgage under duress which she never executed. The setting up of inconsistent defenses like these should never be encouraged. (Butler v. Kaulback, 8 Kas. 672, 673.) Under the circumstances of this case we think the court below should have allowed the plaintiff to amend his reply so that he could have litigated the question of duress upon its merits.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

2. Inconsistent defenses.

The defendant claimed that her second defense was not merely a defense to the plaintiff's action, but that it also set forth a cause of action on her part by way of counterclaim, for which she asked affirmative relief. Said second defense was filed as a cross-petition, and the court below granted the affirmative relief which she asked. Now if said answer was what the defendant claimed it to be, and what the court below

Wright v. Bacheller.

held that it was, then the plaintiff could not dismiss the whole action so as to commence again, for he could not dismiss the defendant's cross-petition, or counterclaim; (Code, §398.) And the plaintiff should not have been required under the circumstances to take the chances as to whether said second defense stated a good affirmative cause of action on the part of the defendant or not. We think the amendment ought to have been allowed without costs.

We have assumed in this opinion that the second defense stated in the answer was sufficient, as a defense, to require a reply thereto, but we do not so decide. We simply express no opinion upon that subject. If it was not sufficient, <sup>a. Cross-action, or petition:
sufficiency.</sup> then of course the judgment of the court below founded thereon cannot be sustained. As a cross-petition, setting forth an affirmative cause of action, a counterclaim, we think it was wholly insufficient. In such a case the cause of action must be set forth with the same particularity, completeness and exactness as it would be if it were set forth in a petition by a plaintiff. Viewed in this light, is said count sufficient? May a plaintiff allege in his petition that he never executed any mortgage, but if he did it was done under duress, and then ask the court to have it canceled and held null and void? We think not; and therefore we think that the second defense in defendant's answer is not sufficient to sustain the judgment rendered thereon. This might be otherwise if the judgment were attacked collaterally. But when attacked directly by a petition in error, as in this case, we do not think that the judgment can be sustained.

The plaintiff in error raises several other questions. For instance, he claims that the court below erred in permitting the defendant to introduce certain evidence of one R. M. Bradley, a witness for the defendant, which evidence reads as follows:

“By some means, one or more of the letters I wrote to her fell into the hands of Bacheller, who answered it in an insolent manner, stating that unless his wife should unite with him in such mortgage, she should leave his premises, as he intended to do as he pleased with his own family, and his own business. There were several other threatening declarations in the letter against his wife, all tending in the same direction. These letters were destroyed by me, together with some others of the same character. As Bacheller and his wife were still living together as man and wife, deponent supposed that they would continue to do so, and did not want said letters to be seen by others."

Now there is no evidence in the case that shows that Bradley ever saw Bacheller, or knew anything about his handwriting; and nothing to show how Bradley knew that the answer he received was written by Bacheller, or came from him. There is nothing in the record that shows that Bacheller's wife ever knew, till the day of the trial, that Bacheller ever wrote any such letter to Bradley, or that he ever wrote any letter of any kind. There is nothing to show when Bacheller wrote this letter, or that it had any reference whatever to the mortgage in controversy. There was some illegal testimony offered and ruled out that tended to show that it had reference to the Wright mortgage. The genuineness of the letter, or its relevancy to the case, was not in any manner proved or shown, except by the foregoing evidence of Bradley. Whether this evidence of Bradley was erroneously permitted to be introduced, it is now wholly unnecessary for us to decide.

If the issues had been properly made up, the court would have erred in striking from the plaintiff's evidence the defendant's acknowledgment appended to said mortgage; for in such a case the acknowledgment should have been considered for what it was worth. (Gen. Stat. 188, §26.)

The judgment of the court below in favor of the defendant in error and against the plaintiff in error will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

1. VOID JUDGMENT; *Collection May be Enjoined. An action may be maintained to perpetually enjoin the enforcement of a void judgment [McNeill v. Edie, 24-110; *Meixell v. 2. ——— Such an action may be maintained against any person who attempts to put such judgment in force, and who has apparent authority for so doing.
3. JURISDICTION—*Action to Enjoin. The action may be maintained in any county in which an attempt is made (to the injury of the party seeking the relief) to put such judgment in force, although such judgment may have been rendered in another county.
4. ——— Void Judgment. A judgment rendered against any person, where the court has no jurisdiction of such person, is void. [K. P. Rly. Co. v. Streeter, 8-133; Litowich v. Litowich, 19-451.]
5. ——— A court can obtain jurisdiction of a person for the purpose of rendering a judgment against him, only by the service of process upon him (actual or constructive,) or by his voluntary appearance in the case.
6. SERVICE ON CORPORATION; *Agent, Clerk, Book-keeper. A service of a summons on a person who keeps books for a corporation, but who is not the secretary or the clerk of the corporation, or any other officer or agent of the corporation upon whom a legal service may be made, is not a valid service upon the corporation. A service in such a case must be made upon the person who holds the office of secretary or clerk of the corporation. [Brinkman v. Shaffer, 23-528; McNeill v. Edie, et al., 24-108.]
7. SHERIFF'S RETURN—*When May be Impeached. A sheriff's return with respect to service of original process may be impeached, so far as it states facts upon which jurisdiction depends, where the facts stated do not come within the personal knowledge of the sheriff, but must be ascertained by him from inquiry. Error from Shawnee District Court.

INJUNCTION, to restrain the collection of a judgment, brought by The King Wrought-Iron Bridge Manufactory & Iron Works of Topeka, against Chester Thomas, jr., as sberiff, and Wm. Chambers and four others as "Chambers Bros. & Co." Trial at the June Term 1874. The district court found, as conclusions of law, that the judgment complained of was void, and made a decree perpetually enjoining its collection. Chambers Bros. & Co. appeal, and bring the case here on error. All the material facts are given in the opinion.

Green & Foster, for plaintiffs in error:

1. The district court of Shawnee county has no jurisdiction to enjoin an execution issuing from the district court of Leavenworth county, on a judgment rendered therein, on account of any irregularities in obtaining the judgment, or defect of jurisdiction. 22 Wis. 482; 14 How. (U. S.) 584; 2 Edw. Ch. 289; 5 Sandf. 612; 16 How. Pr. 244; 2 Paige, 26; Hilliard on Inj. 180, § 4.

2. A court of equity will not enjoin an execution on a judgment at law, even though it may be void because of service on the wrong person; and more especially if the party against whom it is rendered, having notice of the action, neglects to take any steps to prevent the rendition of such judgment. High on Inj. §§ 89, 99, 181; 7 Wis. 595; 21 Cal. 438; 1 Beasley, 181; 26 Geo. 485; 17 How. (U. S.) 443; 9 Leigh, 478.

3. In an injunction suit to restrain the collection of a judgment claimed to be void because of the falsity of a sheriff's return, the testimony of a single witness ought not to be deemed sufficient to justify the allowance of the injunction, if it should be allowed at all, which we deny. Plaintiffs in error allege in their answer in the suit below, that Johnson (the person on whom service was had,) was the secretary of the defendant in error, duly authorized, etc. And in its reply, defendant in error says he was its book-keeper, etc. By his testimony Johnson himself shows that he was a clerk, or book-keeper, performing the duties of the secretary. Hence we claim, that service on such clerk or book-keeper is a good service on the corporation; and that the reply not being verified, the allegations in the answer in reference to Johnson's being the secretary of defendant in error must be taken as true, (§108 of the code,) and that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Johnson that he was not such secretary.

Chambers v. Bridge Manufactory.

---

Alfred Ennis, and C. M. Foster, for defendant in error:

1. If this action can be maintained it was properly brought in Shawnee county. Clay v. Hoysradt, 8 Kas. 74. The district court of Shawnee county had jurisdiction: 15 Iowa, 171; 17 Iowa, 131.

2. Johnson was not a person on whom service of summons could be made under §68 of the civil code: Law Rep. 149; 16 M. & W. 438. And the return of the sheriff being false, the execution may be enjoined. High on Inj. §126; 11 Humphrey, 523.

3. The proof shows that the plaintiffs in error had no cause of action against the defendant in error, and for that reason there is nothing inequitable in enjoining the execution when there is no legal service. The judgment was valid on its face, and for that reason the authorities cited by the plaintiffs in error to the effect that equity will not enjoin "a void judgment," (meaning judgments void on their face,) are inapplicable. The reason for this doctrine in many of the states is, that a motion could be made to set aside the judgment, and the judge at chambers would have the power to stay execution; but under our code execution can only be stayed by injunction, or by order of the judge pending a motion for a new trial. But in the present case the defendant in error had no occasion to ask for a new trial. Its objection was to the jurisdiction of the court to try the case at all. The fact that Johnson notified the officers of the company, cuts no figure in the case. The service of the summons was wholly unauthorized and illegal, and the defendant was under no legal or moral obligation to pursue any particular line of conduct. It owed no duty to plaintiffs in error, and they have no cause of complaint against defendant in error for waiting until judgment was rendered. They cannot complain that defendant in error did not go to a distant county to make a motion to set aside the service, or to let its property be sold and then sue the sheriff for false return.

4. It is not admitted by the pleadings that Johnson was secretary of defendant in error. The petition alleges that no service was made on defendant in error, or any officer on which by law service could be made, and that service was not made in any manner prescribed by law. That was an affirmative fact alleged by defendant in error, and necessary to be proved by it in order to recover. The answer of defendant sets up a state of facts inconsistent with and contradictory to the facts set forth in the petition. It was not a confession and a voidance, and therefore not new matter; and therefore that part of the answer needed no reply. 8 Kas. 370.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought for the purpose of perpetually enjoining the enforcement of a judgment claimed to be unjust and void. The facts necessary to be considered in this case are substantially as follows: On the 10th of July 1878, plaintiffs in error, Chambers Bros. & Co., commenced an action against defendant in error in the district court of Leavenworth county. Summons was duly issued therein, and delivered to the sheriff of that county for service. The sheriff afterward returned the summons with the following indorsements thereon, to-wit:

“I received this summons on the 10th of July 1873 at 3 o'clock P. M.; and I served the same summons in my county of Leavenworth, Kansas, on the within-named defendant, The King Wrought-Iron Bridge Manufactory and Iron Works of Topeka, Kansas, by delivering to Walter F. Johnson, the clerk and secretary of said defendant, personally, a copy of the written summons on this 10th of July 1878. I so served said summons as aforesaid upon said clerk or secretary, being unable to find, in the county of Leavenworth, Kansas, the president, chairman of the board of directors or trustees, or other chief officer of said defendant.

T. L., Sheriff,” &c.

The statute provides that “A summons against a corporation may be served upon the president, mayor, chairman of the board of directors or trustees, or other chief officer; or, if its chief officer is not found in the county, upon its cashier, treasurer, secretary, clerk, or managing agent," etc. (Civil code, § 68.) The only objection to said service is, that said Walter F. Johnson was not clerk, or secretary, or any other officer, or agent, of the defendant, upon whom service of summons could be legally made. The defendant, which we shall designate as the "bridge company," made no appearance in the case. Afterward, and on September 1st 1873, the district court of Leavenworth county rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, the bridge company, for the sum of $1,189.68. Another objection to this judgment is, that there was nothing due from the defendant to the plaintiff. Afterward, an execution was issued on said judgment by the clerk of the district court of Leavenworth county, and placed in the hands of the sheriff of Shawnee county for collection. Said sheriff immediately caused said execution to be docketed in the office of the clerk of the district court of Shawnee county, and then by virtue thereof levied on the property of the bridge company, greatly to its injury. The bridge company then commenced this action in the district court of Shawnee county against the sheriff of said Shawnee county, and against said Chambers Bros. & Co., the parties who obtained said judgment, to perpetually enjoin the enforcement of said judgment. A trial was had in the case in the district court of Shawnee county, and the court found in favor of the bridge company, and against Chambers Bros. & Co., and rendered a judgment perpetually enjoining the enforcement of said judgment. It was shown on the trial of the case that the present defendant in error, the bridge company, was a corporation at the time of said service of summons, doing business in the city of Topeka, Shawnee county; that said Walter F. Johnson was a book-keeper in their employ; that he was not the secretary, or clerk of the corporation, or any general agent thereof; in fact, that he held no position in the company, or from the company, except that he merely kept books, under the secretary, as aforesaid; that he went to the city of Leavenworth, in Leavenworth county, to attend court as a witness in a bankruptcy case; that while there he was served with summons in said case as aforesaid, and when he returned from Leavenworth to Topeka, which was on the same day that he was summoned, he immediately told the officers of the bridge company that he had been so served with summons. It also appears that the debt claimed to be due to Chambers Bros. & Co., on which said judgment was rendered, was not the debt of the bridge company which is a party in this case, but it was a debt due from an entirely different corporation, a bridge company doing business at the city of Iola, Allen county. The said judgment and said execution, with all the proceedings connected therewith, appear to be regular and valid upon their face. With this statement of the facts we shall now proceed to decide the questions of law involved in the case.

---

Chambers v. Bridge Manufactory.

---

Opinion of the Court.

I. An action may be maintained to perpetually enjoin the enforcement of a void judgment, where such judgment appears to be valid and regular upon its face; and this is especially true where the judgment is also unjust. Caruthers v. Hartsfield, 8 Yerger, 366; Ridgeway v. The Bank of Tennessee, 11 Humphrey, 528; Crafts v. Dexter, 8 Ala. 767. There are decisions apparently adverse to the above proposition; but generally such decisions are in cases which differ from this. They are generally in cases where the judgment is not void, but only voidable, or where it would be inequitable for the courts to interfere, or where a party has negligently slept upon his rights, or has some other plain and adequate remedy, or where the judgment itself is incurably void upon its face.

II. Such an action may be maintained against any person who attempts to put such judgment in force, and who has apparent authority for so doing.

III. The action may be maintained in any county in which an attempt is made (to the injury of the party seeking the relief) to put such judgment in force, although such judgment may have been rendered in another county.

Chambers v. Bridge Manufactory.

IV. A judgment rendered against any person, where the court has no jurisdiction of such person, is void.

V. A court can obtain jurisdiction of a person for the purpose of rendering a judgment against him, only by the service of process upon him (actually or constructively,) or by his voluntary appearance in the case.

VI. A service of a summons on a person who keeps books for a corporation, but who is not the secretary, or the clerk of the corporation, or any other officer or agent of the corporation upon whom a legal service may be made, is not a valid service upon the corporation. It is true, a book-keeper is in one sense a clerk. Any person who performs clerical duties is in one sense a clerk. But the service of a summons on a corporation cannot be made on every person who may in some remote sense be styled a clerk of the corporation. It could not be made on a deputy or under-clerk. It must be made on the clerk, the principal clerk of the corporation, if made on a clerk at all. It must be made upon the person who holds the office of clerk, or secretary, as the case may be. In proper cases a service on the person who holds the office of clerk or secretary of the corporation would be a good service, although such person might not in fact perform any of the clerical duties for the corporation. For instance, if the service had been made on Haywood, the secretary of the corporation in this case, instead of on Johnson, a book-keeper, the service would have been a valid service, whether Haywood performs any of the clerical duties or not. As the service was void however, everything following the service was also void.

VII. A sheriff's return with respect to service of original process may be impeached so far as it states facts upon which jurisdiction depends, where the facts stated do not come within the personal knowledge of the sheriff, but must be ascertained by him from inquiry. (Bond v. Wilson, 8 Kas. 228; Starkweather v. Morgan, 15 Kas. 274.)

The judgment of the court below enjoining said judgment will be affirmed.

FRANCIS RAHM V. KING WROUGHT-IRON BRIDGE MANUFACTORY OF TOPEKA.

1. MANAGING OFFICERS OF CORPORATION; No Power to Bind Corporation to Pay Debts of Another Person. The vice president and secretary of a manufacturing corporation, although the active managers of the business of the corporation, superintending the erection of its buildings, making its contracts, and signing its drafts, checks and notes, have not by virtue thereof authority to bind the corporation by a promise to pay the debts of another and distinct corporation.
2. ——— Where one corporation buys a portion of the assets of another corporation, and in consideration thereof agrees to assume and pay certain specific debts of the latter, those creditors whose debts are thus assumed can maintain their actions directly against the former, but the other creditors cannot, even though a portion of the indebtedness thus assumed is fictitious.
3. NEGOTIABLE PAPER; Indorsement—Maturity; Pleading; Issue; Defense. Where the indorsement of a note is in blank, and without date, and the allegation of the petition that it was indorsed before due is denied in the answer, and there is no evidence as to the date of the indorsement, any defense good against the payer must also be held good against the indorser and holder. Error from Shawnee District Court.

ACTION by Rahm as plaintiff on two promissory notes, one for $4,915.57, the other for $5,561.57. The notes were dated "Nov. 9th 1872," payable at four and five months respectively. The petition alleged that they were endorsed to plaintiff before maturity. The defendant, the Bridge Manufactory of Topeka, answered, first, a general denial; second, special denials, that it ever executed the notes sued on; that it ever authorized or empowered T. B. Mills and B. M. Smith, or either of them to execute and deliver said notes; that said Mills and Smith or either of them ever had authority from it to execute and deliver said notes; that said notes were ever in good faith indorsed to plaintiff for a valuable consideration—and alleging, that said notes were executed and delivered without any consideration therefor to defendant, which fact was well known to plaintiff at and before the time of the alleged transfer of the said notes to him; third, an averment that said notes were executed and delivered by said Mills and Smith (whose names are signed thereto) to Coleman, Rahm & Co., in settlement of a debt due to the said Coleman, Rahm & Co., from the “King Wrought-Iron Bridge Manufactory and Iron Works of Iola;” that the defendant in error was in no manner liable for the payment of said debt, nor did the payment or settlement of the same in any manner pertain to the business of the defendant; that at the time of the execution and delivery of said notes plaintiff was a member of the firm of Coleman, Rahm & Co., and had full knowledge of all the facts herein stated at and before the time of the alleged transfer of said notes to him. The second defense was verified by affidavit. The reply of plaintiff was a general denial. Trial at the June Term 1874, and judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff brings the case here on error. The material facts are stated in the opinion.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff:

1. We claim that by the by-laws of defendant company, which defendant introduced in evidence, the vice-president had power to execute the notes. They provide that the president shall “execute all contracts, deeds, certificates of stock, and other instruments of writing necessary for the transaction of the business of the company when properly authorized so to do by the board of directors, as hereinafter provided;” and that in the absence of the president the vice-president shall perform his duties; also, that the secretary shall countersign instruments in writing when signed in accordance with said by-laws. The note in this case is attested by the secretary, which is an official declaration by the company that the power if required had been conferred. Said by-laws also provide for an executive committee whose business it shall be to have advisory supervision of the business of the company, and who shall have all the authority of the board of directors in cases of emergency requiring immediate action, and which cannot await the time necessarily elapsing before a regular or called meeting of the board. We submit that in these provisions alone is ample power to make the notes in suit. As to what are cases of emergency, the by-laws do not provide, and therefore the matter is left to be determined by the executive committee.

Brief of Plaintiff.

That there is a further provision for the ratification of their action by the board of directors, is immaterial, for the attestation of the secretary is an affirmation that all these acts have been complied with; and the plaintiff being a purchaser in good faith, the defendants should not now be heard to deny it. 14 Wallace, 283. Defendant's by-laws also provide that "the treasurer shall pay all checks, drafts or orders presented to him for payment when properly executed by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the secretary." And this company held out to the world by their acquiescence in the acts of Mills, that he was authorized to do these acts. They allowed him to transact the whole business of the corporation as general manager. In fact, he and Smith were nearly the whole operators of the concern. Mills, the vice-president and acting president, signed checks, drafts, and promissory notes to various parties.

There is another view which we wish to present to the court: It appears by the testimony of both Mills and Smith that the Iola company had large assets. That Mills and Smith were the managers of that company, and that the assets of that company, except its realty and including the good will of trade, were carried to the Topeka company. That in consideration of such transfer the Topeka company assumed a large amount of real indebtedness, and about $50,000 of fictitious indebtedness. This fictitious indebtedness went to Ennis, Adams, &c., who now object to the payment of the honest debt of the Iola company, the avails of which passed to the Topeka company, for if it did not all pass in iron, it must have passed in other assets. Now in equity the firm of Coleman, Rahm & Co. could pursue these assets. Booth v. Bruce, 32 N. Y. 139. Mills and Smith so far were the principal parties interested. They knew where the assets of the Iola company had gone, and the equities of Coleman, Rahm & Co.

Rahm v. Bridge Manufactory.

They gave the notes of the new company now in suit, and the Adams draft, and Coleman, Rahm & Co. discharged the debt of the Iola company, which company was in fact merged in the Topeka company. The whole matter was one transaction. The Topeka company paid the draft, thus ratifying the transaction and sanctioning the act of Mills, and the company are now estopped from denying it. (Story on Agency, § 242; 22 N. Y. 264; 19 N. Y. 218.)

2. The court erred in admitting the books of the defendant to be read in evidence as offered by defendant. They were incompetent, and hearsay testimony only. (18 Wall. 541.) By admitting the books to be read, the court asserted that they were competent and proper evidence to be considered, and there is a high degree of probability that they were accepted by the court as conclusive evidence upon the question in controversy. Code, § 387.

Alfred Ennis, and C. M. Foster, for defendant:

The notes sued on do not of themselves purport to be the notes of the defendant. These notes are not of themselves evidence of indebtedness owing by defendant. They do not of themselves contain a promise to pay by defendant, nor do they purport to be signed by the defendant. The plaintiff claims that the notes were intended to be the notes of the defendant. This fact was attempted to be shown by extrinsic evidence. Defendant insists that if the notes do not purport to be the obligations of defendant, and are not of themselves such obligations, then they cannot be made such by extrinsic facts. (6 Kas. 27.) It is an uncontroverted fact, that the notes are written upon letter paper, which letter paper had a printed heading; and that the words "King Iron-Bridge Manufactory and Iron Works," at the top of the notes, is such printed letter-head, and nothing more. Hence the same is no part of the notes.

The evidence shows that the defendant is a private manufacturing corporation, organized for the sole purpose of manufacturing bridges; that the notes were signed and delivered for a debt of the Iola Bridge Company, for the payment of which debt the defendant was in no manner liable, nor did the settlement or payment of such debt in any manner pertain to the business of the defendant; that defendant received no consideration for the notes sued on; that Rahm, the plaintiff, a member of the firm of "Coleman, Rahm & Co.," was present at the time the notes were signed and delivered, and had full knowledge of all the facts; and that the defendant in error had no knowledge of the existence of the notes sued on at the time of the payment of the draft of $4,924.48.

A private corporation can make no valid or binding contract except such as relates to the business and objects of the corporation. Gen. Stat. 187, §26; 33 Ind. 185; 21 Howard, 441; 13 N. Y. 309; 22 N. Y. 258; 13 Peters, 519. The assuming of a debt owing by a third party is not in the usual course of business, nor within the ordinary powers of a private corporation. 34 Vt. 144; 43 Geo. 187.

Officers of a private corporation are special and not general agents of the corporation, and consequently have no power to bind the corporation except within the limits prescribed by its charter and the by-laws; and persons dealing with such officers are charged with notice of the authority conferred upon them, and of the limitations and restrictions upon the powers of such officers by the charter and by-laws. 52 Barb. 399; 22 Wis. 194; 38 Cal. 590; 6 Blatch. 139; 2 Sweeney, (N. Rahm v. Bridge Manufactory.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Plaintiff in error, plaintiff below, brought his action upon two promissory notes. The case was tried by the district court without a jury. No special findings of fact were made, but only a general finding for defendant.

But a single question really is presented, and that is, whether upon the testimony the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment. For, while counsel speak of error in the admission of certain books of the defendant, yet, as not a line out of the books was read in evidence, and no reference made to them after their admission, it seems hardly necessary to inquire whether the court ruled correctly in admitting them. Upon the facts then, was the plaintiff entitled to judgment? And the question, it must be remembered, is, not whether upon the testimony a judgment in favor of the plaintiff could be sustained, but whether upon that testimony the judgment must have been for him. In other words, cannot the finding in favor of the defendant be sustained? Turning to the record, these things appear: One note was as follows—and the other was in form similar:

King Iron-Bridge Manufactory and Iron Works,
$4,915.57. TOPEKA, Nov. 9th, 1872.

Four months after date, we promise to pay to the order of A. J. Baker, forty-nine hundred and fifteen and 57-100 dollars, for value received, without defalcation.

T. B. MILLS, V. P.

B. M. SMITH, Sec'y K. B. Co.

Indorsed: "A. J. Baker," "Coleman, Rahm & Co."

The president of the company during the fall of 1872 was Zenas King, who was absent from the state. Messrs. Mills and Smith were respectively vice-president and secretary, and apparently the active managers of the affairs of the corporation, superintending the construction of the buildings, making contracts, signing notes, drafts and checks. The "Iola Bridge Company," a corporation located and doing business in Iola, had been engaged in the same business as the Topeka Bridge of facts. Company (defendant herein) was purposing to engage in, and for which buildings were being erected and other preparations made. The debt for which these notes were given was a debt due from the Iola Bridge Co. to Coleman, Rahm & Co. for iron. T. B. Mills, the vice-president of the Topeka Bridge Co., was president of the Iola company. The Topeka Bridge Co. bought of the Iola company all its assets, except the real estate, and in consideration thereof assumed the payment of certain specific indebtedness. These notes were not a part of the indebtedness thus assumed, although the draft hereinafter referred to was. These notes were taken by Mr. Rahm, of Coleman, Rahm & Co., who was at Topeka to settle the claim against the Iola company, and he took these notes in payment. They were drawn to the order of A. J. Baker, to enable him to endorse them, as at his instance in the first place the debt was created. Whether "Francis Rahm," the plaintiff, is the "Mr. Rahm" of Coleman, Rahm & Co., does not appear. Neither was there any evidence to show when the notes were endorsed to plaintiff. The indebtedness of the Iola company to Coleman, Rahm & Co. was nearly $5,000 in excess of the amount of these notes. For this amount, at the same time, a ninety-day draft was drawn on Daniel M. Adams, who at that time had no official connection with the defendant, but who some sixty days thereafter, and before the maturity of the draft, became its vice-president and treasurer. Adams paid the draft, and was credited with the amount in his settlement with the company as its treasurer. There was nothing upon the face of the draft to show on whose account it was drawn. It was signed "T. B. Mills, President," and directed to "Daniel M. Adams, Topeka, Kansas." Mr. Mills was, as we have seen, president of the Iola company. He testified in his deposition that it was drawn by him as vice-president of the Topeka company. There was testimony tending to show that some $45,000 of the indebtedness of the Iola company assumed by the Topeka company was fictitious, and running to the officers of the Topeka company. No express authority from the board of directors to Messrs. Mills and Smith to execute these notes was shown, and no formal ratification of the act. The testimony is conflicting as to whether any knowledge of the transaction was communicated to or possessed by the directors or any of them until the presentation of the first note for payment.

Statement

This comprises, we think, all the material portions of the testimony; and upon this we remark, in support of the ruling of the district court, that Messrs. Mills and Smith had no authority from the company to bind it to the payment of the debts of another and different corporation. Even if it were conceded that they had all the powers of general managers, still those powers did not extend to the assumption of another company's debts. Though they might bind the corporation to any debt within the scope of its ordinary business, yet beyond that they were powerless. Again, while under the contract between the Iola company and the Topeka company by which the latter purchased a part of the assets of the former under an agreement to pay therefor certain of its debts, those creditors whose debts were thus assumed might maintain an action against the Topeka company directly, yet none of the other creditors of the Iola company could. And it matters not that a portion of the indebtedness that the Topeka company assumed to pay was fictitious. Whatever effect that might have upon the validity of the sale, as against the creditors of the Iola company, or upon garnishee proceedings instituted by such creditors, yet it does not give the right to such creditors to jump over the Iola company and institute an action directly against the Topeka company. And thirdly, as there is no evidence of the time of the indorsements, or that they were made before the maturity of the notes, and this fact is put in issue by the pleadings, the exact facts in reference to the giving of the notes may be shown in evidence, and are as competent for a defense to an action by this plaintiff as to one by the payee. It seems scarcely necessary to enlarge upon these propositions. They are sufficient to support the judgment. We do not wish to be understood as saying that there was no testimony upon which, if uncontradicted, or unqualified, a judgment in favor of the plaintiff could have been supported; but we do hold, that upon the facts as above stated there is enough to uphold the judgment for the defendant, and it must be affirmed.

2. SHERIFF'S DEED—*When Prima Facie Void. When a sheriff's deed, executed December 26th 1865, founded upon a judgment of a justice of the peace, and upon an execution issued by the clerk of the district court, recites among other things the rendition of said judgment, and that the judgment-creditor afterward "sued out of the clerk's office of the 4th judicial district an execution on the said judgment," without stating or reciting that a transcript of such judgment had ever been filed in the office of the clerk of the district court, as provided by statute, held, that such sheriff's deed is not of itself, and without other evidence, prima facie evidence of its own validity, or of title in the grantee. ACTION brought by Tye as plaintiff on the following promissory note:

IOLA, KANSAS, Dec. 6th, 1870.

On or before the 1st day of July, 1871, I promise to pay James Faulkner, or order, the sum of $600, for value received, bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from date until paid. CHARLES E. BRIGGS.

Briggs paid $100 on said note to Faulkner, which was indorsed May 7th 1871, after which Faulkner transferred the note to Tye. The defense was, alleged failure of consideration, as to which both the pleadings and the facts are fully stated in the opinion. Trial in the district court at the November Term 1874. A jury was impaneled and sworn, and testimony was offered by defendant Briggs (on whom was the burden of proof) in support of his defense. When defendant rested, plaintiff demurred to the evidence. The court sustained the demurrer, discharged the jury, and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount due on the note, and costs of suit. Briggs brings the case here on error.

Cates & Keplinger, for plaintiff in error:

1. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the third defense set up in Briggs' original answer. The question presented by the demurrer is this: Is a grantee in a deed, with covenants of title, executed by an agent, entitled to recover the purchase-money paid to the agent and not yet paid over to the principal, in a case where there has been failure of title and eviction? That he may recover, see Story on Agency, §§ 300, 301, and notes.

2. The court erred in refusing to permit the sheriff's deed mentioned in the bill of exceptions to be offered in evidence. The pleadings and evidence show the consideration of the note sued on was a conveyance from Gilbreath, through Faulkner the payee of the note, to plaintiff in error of certain real estate. The deed offered shows a prior sheriff's sale of the same real estate to the paramount claimant on an execution against Gilbreath issued on a justice's judgment. The objection that the deed does not show on its face that the justice's judgment had been filed in the district court is not well taken. (Code of 1859, Comp. Laws of 1862, ch. 26, § 513.) The sheriff complied literally with the law, and when he came to make the deed he complied to the letter with the law which prescribes what the deed shall contain; (code of 1859, § 450.) The law points out five distinct matters which a deed shall contain. None of these have been omitted. What authority is there for holding additional recitals to be necessary?

It is further urged that the deed is void because it does not show from which county in the "4th judicial district" the execution issued. The deed recites that "Hull recovered a judgment against Gilbreath before Rhoades, a justice of the peace in and for Allen county, on the 10th of July 1860;" and that "on the 14th of April 1868 said Hull sued out of the clerk's office of the 4th judicial district court an execution on said judgment, directed to the sheriff of Allen county." The clerk of the Allen county district court was the only clerk in the 4th district who could lawfully have issued this execution. It will not be presumed that any clerk acted unlawfully. It will also be presumed that the writ issued from the proper clerk, otherwise the sheriff would have not received it. It will be presumed officers acted lawfully until the contrary appears. 14 Cal. 117. And the recital in the deed as to confirmation of the sale, is equivalent to a recital that the execution did issue from the proper clerk, and that the judgment was filed in the district court. Buchanan v. Tracy, 14 Mo. 438.

8. The records offered in evidence and ruled out by the court, showing the judgment before the justice, its filing in the district court, the execution, sale, and journal entry of confirmation, show the sheriff's grantee has a complete equitable title, and that she is entitled to demand of the sheriff a deed which is regular and valid. (Code of 1859, § 449; Smith v. Myers, 46 Mo. 440.) But it is urged that all these proceedings are invalid because of defects in the constable's return on the summons issued by the justice. Such an objection as that will not be allowed to prevail, ~~th s,~~ in a collateral proceeding, overthrowing a final judgment.

Briggs v. Tye.

W. A. Johnson, for defendant in error:

1. Briggs in his answer admitted the execution and delivery of the note; but as a third defense he alleges that said note was given as part consideration for the purchase of a certain tract of land, and that his title failed. To the defense plaintiff demurred, and the court sustained the demurrer. If the court did err in sustaining the demurrer, Briggs has suffered no prejudice on account of such error, for before the trial the court permitted him to file an amended answer, in which the same facts were more fully stated than in the original answer, and he had the benefit of the same defense on the trial.

2. The sheriff's deed is absolutely void on its face, and was properly rejected. (Rover on Jud. Sales, §§ 463, 464; 33 Cal. 45.) There are certain recitals requisite to the validity of a sheriff's deed. The deed must recite sufficient to show that the sheriff had authority to sell—and here the deed was fatally silent.

The record shows that on the 9th of July 1860 the justice issued a summons in the case of "Hull against Gilbreath," returnable the 14th of July, and that on the 10th, (four days before the return-day,) defendant Gilbreath did not appear, but the demand appearing just, the justice rendered judgment; and it is on a pretended sale under this judgment that it is now claimed that Gilbreath's title to the land was divested. There was no error in rejecting said deed, and said transcript.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action on a promissory note. Charles E. Briggs was the maker thereof, and James Faulkner was the payee. Faulkner assigned the note to D. S. Tye, and Tye commenced this action against Briggs to recover the amount thereof. Briggs answered, setting up three defenses. The plaintiff Tye demurred to the third defense, and the court below sustained the demurrer. This is the first ruling of the court below assigned for error. Whether such ruling was erroneous or not, it is now wholly unnecessary to determine; for after said ruling was made the defendant amended his answer, setting forth therein all that he had previously set forth in the defense demurred to, and much more, and then went to trial upon the facts as alleged in his amended answer. Under this amended answer he could prove all that he had a right to prove under his original answer, and more too. Therefore any error that the court may have committed by sustaining said demurrer was rendered wholly immaterial by these subsequent proceedings.

The defendant set forth in his answer and amended answer substantially the following as the facts: Sarah L. Larimer owned a certain piece of land, but James L. Gilbreath and Mary Ann Gilbreath pretended to own the same. Said Tye and Faulkner acted as the agents of said Gilbreaths in procuring a sale of said land. And although they knew that Gilbreaths had no title to said land, still they induced the defendant Briggs to purchase the same. Briggs, in consideration for said land and another piece of land, paid to said agents $700 in cash, and gave to them said promissory note. Faulkner then, in consideration for said cash and note, and as attorney-in-fact for said Gilbreaths, executed to Briggs a general warranty deed for said land—said deed containing all the usual covenants. Said agents however transcended their authority by inserting said covenants. Afterward said Larimer evicted the defendant from said land. Said agents still retain the money paid to them by the defendant, not having paid any portion thereof to their principals. The said Gilbreaths are non-residents of the state of Kansas, and are wholly insolvent. The defendant has been damaged to the amount of $1,000 by said transactions, for which amount he asks judgment. He also asks to have said note canceled, etc. The plaintiff replied to this answer by filing a general denial. The action was then tried before the court and a jury. Under the pleadings the burden of proof rested upon the defendant. He offered first to introduce a sheriff's deed for the purpose of showing that the title to said

3. Sheriff's deed, when prima facie void. land had been transferred by said sheriff's deed from said Gilbreaths to said Sarah L. Larimer prior to the time when he purchased said land from Gilbreaths' agents.
 The plaintiff objected, and the court sustained the objection.
 This is the second ruling of the court below assigned for error.
 Said sheriff's deed reads as follows:

"KNOW ALL MEN by these presents that, whereas, Horace Hull recovered a judgment before Lyman E. Rhoades, a justice of the peace within and for the county of Allen, on the 10th of July 1860, against J. L. Gilbreath for the sum of $30.19 debt, and $3.60 costs of suit, and whereas the said Horace Hull afterward on the 14th of April 1863 sued out of the clerk's office of the 4th judicial district an execution on the said judgment bearing date the 14th of April 1863 and directed to the sheriff of said Allen county commanding him," etc., etc.

This deed is defective in not showing that a transcript of the judgment rendered by justice Rhoades was ever filed in the office of the clerk of the district court in and for Allen county, and in not showing that the execution was issued by the clerk of the district court in and for Allen county. At the time said execution was issued there were about eight clerks of the district court of the "4th judicial district." There was one

Presumptions. for each county. The first-mentioned defect is more material, as we think, than the second. It is possible that presumptions might aid the second, but we can hardly think they could sufficiently aid the first. We do not wish however to decide that said first-mentioned defect necessarily renders the deed void. But we do think that it destroys the prima facie validity of the deed. That is, it renders the deed apparently void. Such a deed is not prima facie evidence of title in the grantee. And if in any case such a deed should be held to be valid, or any evidence of title in the grantee, other evidence than the deed itself must Evidence to sustain deed. first be introduced to show that the proceedings upon which the deed is founded, and which the deed itself fails to show, were in fact regular and valid. The plaintiff in error claims that said deed contains all that the law requires that it should contain. We think differently however. The statute among other things requires that the deed "shall recite the execution or executions, or the substance thereof." (Comp. Laws, 200, § 450.) And we think that the execution should contain all the above-mentioned things which this deed omits. The execution should show upon its face that it was regularly issued, that it was issued by the proper officer, that it was issued by an officer having authority to issue it; and therefore we think it should show in this case, upon its face, that the transcript of the justice's judgment was duly filed in the office of the clerk of the district court before the execution was issued. The statute does not pretend to designate everything that shall be inserted in an execution, or in a sheriff's deed; and therefore, in the absence of statutory provisions we should think upon general principles enough should be stated in the execution or in the sheriff's deed to show prima facie that all the necessary proceedings to make such instrument valid were in fact had. It will hardly be presumed in the absence of all evidence that something was done which the instrument itself does not even intimate was done. The filing of the transcript of a justice's judgment is purely the act of the judgment-creditor himself. The issuing of an execution on the same is purely a ministerial act of the clerk. The clerk does not judicially determine that the transcript was filed. No judicial determination is held upon the subject. Even a decision of the court upon a confirmation of a sheriff's sale is no judicial determination of that question. (Kochler v. Ball, 2 Kas. 160, 172; Challiss v. Wise, 2 Kas. 194; White-Crow v. White-Wing, 8 Kas. 276.) The fact of the filing of the transcript of the justice's judgment is left to be proved prima facie by the sheriff's deed. But if the sheriff's deed does not show it, then it must be proved by other evidence. And until it is proved it cannot be presumed that any proceeding depending thereon is valid. Until such fact is proved it would be proper to exclude the deed as evidence. For if such transcript had never been filed, of course the deed would be void.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Briggs v. Tye.

Afterward the defendant offered to introduce the justice's judgment, with all the proceedings connected therewith; the execution, and all the proceedings connected therewith, and evidence tending to show that a transcript of the justice's judgment had been duly filed with the clerk of the district court of Allen county before said execution was issued; but the plaintiff objected, and the court below sustained the objection. This ruling is also covered by the second assignment of error. The execution is about as defective as the sheriff's deed. It does not show that any transcript of the justice's judgment was ever filed in the office of the clerk of the district court. But even if the execution were perfectly formal, still the judgment itself is defective, and apparently void. The transcript thereof shows that the action was commenced on July 9th 1860; that the summons was issued on that day, made returnable July 14th, and requiring the defendant J. L. Gilbreath to appear and answer on July 14th, at 1 o'clock p. m. The summons was received by the constable on July 10th, was served by leaving a copy thereof at the defendant's residence on the same day, and was returned on July 14th. The transcript also shows that the judgment was rendered on July 10th. Whether this was before or after the justice handed the summons to the constable, is not shown. Whether it was before or after the summons was served on the defendant by leaving a copy thereof at his residence, is not shown. But it was, in any case, just four days before the justice had any jurisdiction to render any judgment against the defendant. (Sagendorph v. Shult, 41 Barb. 102.) The execution also shows that the judgment was rendered on July 10th 1860, and so does the sheriff's deed, and there is nothing in the record tending to show that the judgment was rendered at any other time. It does not appear that the defendant ever made any appearance in the case, either on July 10th, or July 14th, or on any other day. But it does appear affirmatively that he did not make any appearance on July 10th, or at the time when the judgment was rendered. If this judgment was rendered on July 10th, (and the evidence unquestionably shows that it was,) it is of course void, and the court below did not err in refusing to receive it in evidence. For the reasons, if any are thought to be necessary, showing that such a judgment is void, we would refer to the case of Sagendorph v. Shult, supra.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

HENRY C. MALLORY V. JAMES M. BERRY.

1. EXEMPTION LAW; *When Unbroken Steer is Exempt. Under the 5th clause of § 3 of the exemption statute of this state, which exempts "one yoke of oxen, and one horse or mule," one who is engaged in farming, and who is the head of a family, and who owns but one horse, may claim as exempt a steer which is only twenty months old, and which has never been worked or broke to work, when it appears that he contracted for two steers (this one and another) with the intention of breaking and working them together, and that he did, within a few days after the seizure and replevy thereof, actually yoke and work them together, and continued to so use them, although it also appears that he had at the time of the seizure paid for and received possession of only this one.
2. ——— Act to be Liberally Construed. Under the liberal construction to be given to exemption statutes, it would seem that by this statute a steer old enough to be used as a work animal, and held with the intention of so using him, would be exempt from seizure upon execution, although he had at the time never actually been worked, or even broke to work.

Error from Osage District Court.

REFLEVIN for "one steer, two years old next spring," brought by Mallory as plaintiff, before a justice of the peace. The justice gave judgment in favor of the defendant. Mallory took the case to the district court by appeal, and a trial was there had at the March Term 1872. The steer in controversy had been seized and taken by the sheriff at the suit of Berry against Mallory. Mallory claimed the steer as exempt. Verdict and judgment in favor of Berry, and Mallory brings the case here on error.

Erwin & Thompson, for plaintiff.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The only question in this case is, whether a steer belonging to the plaintiff was exempt from seizure upon execution. The plaintiff, who was the head of a family, and engaged in farming, owned but one horse and this steer. It was about twenty months old, and had never been worked. He had contracted for a pair of steers, and intended to work them together. This one he had paid for and taken home; the other he had not. When the animal was taken on execution he replevied it, and having obtained possession of his mate, commenced working them together. The first time they were so yoked and worked was on the day of the trial before the justice, some few days after the seizure. Was it exempt? The district court evidently thought it was not, and charged the jury, that if it was used in good faith as a work animal, it was exempt, but if it was not, and had not been so used, it was not exempt. Was this ruling correct? The statute reads, "Two cows, ten hogs, one yoke of oxen, and one horse or mule, or, in lieu of one yoke of oxen and one horse or mule, a span of horses or mules; twenty sheep," etc. Gen. Stat., p. 474, § 8, fifth clause. It is well settled that exemption laws are to be liberally construed, though not of course that they should be so construed as to exempt articles obviously outside of the legislative purpose. Now the fact that this animal was not actually used, and had never been used as a work animal, does not seem to us properly decisive of the question of exemption. The expression, "yoke of oxen," as used in an exemption statute, does not necessarily imply cattle already broke to work.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

If they are cattle intended by the owner for use as work cattle, and old enough to be so used, it seems to us that they are fairly within the purview of the statute. A "horse" is exempt; but at what particular age an animal ceases to be a colt and becomes a horse, is not specified in the statute. Is he considered to be a colt, whatever his age, until broke to saddle, or harness? Or does he become a horse, as soon as broke, no matter how young? One fair test, it would seem, is, that he is old enough to be worked, and bought or raised by the owner therefor. We find several decisions in other states which throw light on this case. In Carruth v. Grassie, 11 Gray, 211, under a statute exempting a cow, a heifer only twenty months old, and not giving milk for more than a year thereafter, was held to be exempt, it appearing that the owner was raising it for his family cow. Under a like statute in Dow v. Smith, 7 Vt. 465, a heifer, forward with calf, was declared exempt; and later, by the same court, in Freeman v. Carpenter, 10 Vt. 433, a heifer not with calf was also adjudged exempt. In Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 641, two calves less than a year old were held to be exempt under a statute exempting a yoke of oxen or steers. See also construing exemption statutes, Harthouse v. Rikers, 1 Duer, 606; Wolfenbarger v. Standifer, 3 Sneed, 659. Under the ruling of the district court, a poor man, unable to purchase a yoke of oxen already broken and trained to work, who should purchase a couple of young, unbroken cattle, although old enough to be worked, intending to break them himself and thus save that expense, could not hold them exempt, while his more prosperous neighbor who can afford to pay the added cost of breaking buys a yoke of cattle already broken, and holds them against his creditors. This does not seem like carrying out the spirit of the exemption law, which was intended for the benefit of the poor man, and should be construed as to secure protection to those most in need of it.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to grant a new trial.

All the Justices concurring.

County-Seat of Osage Co.

COUNTY-SEAT OF OSAGE COUNTY.

1. COUNTY-SEAT ELECTION; *Second Election; Restriction to Two Places; Votes Rejected. At an election held for the purpose of relocating the county-seat of Osage county, Burlingame, the existing county-seat, received no votes; Lyndon received 888; Osage City 791, and Shireton 785 votes. No place having received a majority, a second election was ordered, as prescribed by the statute, and the voting restricted to the two places receiving the highest votes, Lyndon and Osage City. At the second election, notwithstanding such restriction, votes were cast for Shireton, and the result was, that Lyndon received 1131, Osage City 1049, and Shireton 298 votes. Though Lyndon did not then receive a majority of the votes cast, the commissioners rejected the votes for Shireton, and declared Lyndon the duly and legally-selected county-seat: Held, that there was no error in such ruling and decision.
2. CONSENT OF ELECTORS, *To a Change of County-Seat; Mode of Selection. While the constitution forbids a change of the county-seat without the consent of a majority of the electors of the county, yet there is no constitutional restriction upon the power of the legislature, after such consent has been given, to either make the selection of a new county-seat itself, or provide for the manner of its selection by the electors.
3. ——— What is Consent. Where at the first election a majority of the votes are cast in favor of places other than the existing county-seat, such majority is, within the meaning of the constitutional provision cited, to be deemed to have consented to a change. Error from Osage District Court.

At an election held in Osage county May 25th 1875 for a relocation of the county-seat, three places were voted for, but no place received a majority. A second election was held on the 8th of June, to decide between Lyndon and Osage City, they being the two highest at the first election. At this second election Lyndon received 1131 votes, Osage City 1049, and Shireton 298 — total, 2478. On canvassing the vote, the county commissioners rejected the 298 votes cast for Shireton, and de-terminated that Lyndon had received a majority of all the votes cast, and was chosen the county-seat. This canvass took place on the 12th of June, and thereupon two of the county officers, John S. Edie, sheriff, and Thomas Donnell, clerk of the district court, removed their offices, and the records and papers thereof, from Burlingame to Lyndon, and the other county officers declared their purpose to so remove at an early day. On the 18th of June, H. D. Shepard, a citizen, elector, and taxpayer of Burlingame, commenced eight separate actions, two of them in the name of The State, (Shepard as relator,) to compel the sheriff and the clerk of the district court by mandamus to remove their offices, etc., from Lyndon to Burlingame, and the other six to restrain and perpetually enjoin the other county officers, T. L. Marshall as county treasurer, H. A. Billings, probate judge, J. G. Erwin, county attorney, Wm. Y. Drew, county clerk, E. Mills, register of deeds, and the board of county commissioners, from removing their respective offices from Burlingame to Lyndon. Alternate writs of mandamus, and temporary injunctions, were granted and issued. The sheriff and clerk of the district court showed cause. The other defendants demurred to the plaintiff's petitions. All the actions were heard at an adjourned term of the district court held on the 5th of July 1875. The district court found, as a conclusion of fact, that "the city of Lyndon is the county-seat of said Osage county," and refused peremptory writs of mandamus in the two cases, and dissolved the temporary injunctions in the other six, and gave judgment against Shepard for costs in each action. And from such judgments Shepard appeals, and brings each of said actions here by petition in error. The actions were all heard together in this court. Only one opinion was filed, and this in the case of Shepard against Marshall, treasurer, etc.

[In addition to the questions considered and decided by the court in the opinion, infra, counsel for Shepard, plaintiff in error, raised the same questions in regard to the validity of the petition praying for a relocation of the county-seat, the mode of ascertaining the whole number of electors of the county, and the registration-lists authorized by ch. 86, Gen. Stat., as those considered and decided in the Linn County County-Seat case, 15 Kas. 500.]

Lewis & Thomson, for plaintiff in error.

Ruggles & Sterry, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The facts in the case at bar, material to the proper understanding of the points to be decided, and the argument thereof, are as follows: For five years prior to June 8th 1875, Burlingame had been the county-seat of Osage county. In pursuance of an order of the board of county commissioners of said county, based upon a petition of three-fifths of the legal electors of the county praying for an election for the relocation of the county-seat of said county, an election was duly and legally held in said county on that subject on May 25th, 1875, at which election 2464 votes were cast, of which Lyndon received 888, Osage City received 791, and Shireton received 785. Burlingame received no votes. The vote was duly canvassed, and the result proclaimed that no place had received a majority of the votes cast, and that Lyndon and Osage City, having received the highest number of votes cast, they were the candidates and the only candidates for the county-seat of said county at a second election to be held on June 8th, 1875. On said June 8th, being the second Tuesday following said canvass, the second election was held. On the Saturday following, the vote of that election was duly canvassed, and such canvass disclosed that Lyndon had received 1131 votes; that Osage City had received 1049 votes, and said Shireton had received 298 votes; and therefore said board of county commissioners proclaimed the result, and declared Lyndon to be the county-seat of Osage county.

It is not disputed that these proceedings were in strict conformity to the statute, and the declared result warranted by its terms. Ch. 26 of the Gen. Stat., the act providing for the location and removal of county seats, in its 7th section reads: "If no place receives a majority of all the votes cast, a second election shall be held, * * * and at such election the balloting shall be confined to the two places having received the highest number of votes at the preceding election." But the specific objection is, that such a result thus obtained involves a disregard of § 1 of article 9 of the constitution, which declares that "no county-seat shall be changed without the consent of a majority of the electors of the county." A majority of the electors have never, it is said, consented to a change from Burlingame to Lyndon; for, whether to be treated as blank votes or not, the 298 votes cast for Shireton are witnesses to the existence of 298 electors. A vote cast is evidence of the existence of an elector casting it; and here it is unchallenged evidence. It stands as proof of the fact, and the court cannot say that a majority of the electors have consented to the change. To this it is replied, that the original petition signed by three-fifths of the legal electors shows the consent to a change, and this satisfies the constitutional provision; that if this is not so, both elections (in neither of which did Burlingame receive a single vote) establish the consent, not merely of a majority, but of all the electors, to a change. It is said that the vote signifies two things, first a willingness, a desire to change from Burlingame, and second, a preference for the place voted for; that in this way the unanimous wish was for a change from Burlingame, and the only matter of difference was as to the place to which the change should be made. The question is asked, might not the legislature submit to the electors the simple question, Are you in favor of a change of the county-seat? and if a majority answered in the affirmative, itself select the new county-seat. The constitutional provision is not the grant of a power, but a restriction upon a power already vested in the legislature. It does not require a vote, nor an election. It does not declare how the consent shall be evidenced. It does not necessitate any selection of the new county-seat by the electors. It simply forbids a change without their consent; and whenever that consent is secured, all other matters are within the legislative control. On the other hand it is said, that the vote is to be taken as a single act; that there is no direct decision upon the simple question of making a change; that the consent implied by a vote for another place is purely conditional, that is, that the voter consents to the removal from Burlingame, provided, and only provided, it is changed to the place he has voted for. So, that while 1181 electors have signified their consent to a change from Burlingame to Lyndon, 1847 have not only failed to consent to such change, but have actually expressed their disapproval thereof. So also, the question is not to be taken as a consent to the change, but simply as an expression of a desire to ascertain the sentiment of the county. For, where the question of a change in the county-seat has not been presented for some time, and changes have taken place in the population, even a resident of the old county-seat, and one desiring it to there remain, might well seek an expression of the sentiment of the people, to determine not merely as to the expediency of erecting new county buildings, but also as to his own investments and business operations. At any rate, it is said the simple question of consent to a change has never been submitted to the electors; that the change has never been approved by a majority of the electors, and that it is unjust to infer consent from an act or a vote which not only does not necessarily mean consent, but is even consistent with an entire disapproval of the proposed change. It cannot be doubted that there is great force in the arguments presented on either side, and that it is difficult to determine to which the decision must go. A majority of the court are of opinion that the weight of the argument is in favor of sustaining the election—that thus effect is given to the statute, and at the same time the constitutional restriction is respected. Full power is with the legislature in respect to the change of the county-seat, except as thus restricted. If in any way a majority of the electors express their consent to a change, then the selection of a new county-seat, or the manner of its selection, is within the power of the legislature.

Given, the consent to a change, and the legislature may name the new county-seat, or it may remit the choice to the electors and provide the proceedings by which that choice shall be made. When the entire body of the electors upon the question of relocating the county-seat name as their choice for such county-seat other places than the prior county-seat, is it not an expression of their desire for as well as consent to a change? They divide upon the choice of a new, but agree in a desire to abandon the old. They prefer that it should be located elsewhere than it now is. They consent that it be changed. The law seems to have been framed upon the theory that one question at least shall be determined by each election. If on the first election no place receives a majority of all the votes, the law respecting the constitutional restriction declares that while

What is consent. no new county-seat has been selected, yet as a majority have named some place other than the old county-seat, that majority have expressed their consent to a change. For, if that majority were unwilling to change, the naming by them of the old county-seat would have been a clear expression of that unwillingness. If they had so voted, that election would have been a finality, and the county-seat remained undisturbed. If a vote for the old county-seat expresses an unwillingness to change, does not a contrary vote express a contrary wish? So the legislature seems to have thought, and provided that, if no place receives a majority, or in other words that a majority prefer some place other than the existing county-seat, but disagree as to the place to be selected, then a second election shall be had; and, to compel a final determination without repeated elections, it has limited the choice to the two places receiving the highest votes at the first election. By this construction the law is sustained in its application to the facts of this case, and apparently to all cases that may arise under it, while full force is given to the constitutional restriction as a protection to the rights of the existing county-seat. No county-seat can be changed unless at one or the other election a majority of the electors express by their votes their consent to a change.

THE PAOLA & FALL RIVER RAILWAY CO. v. COMM'RS OF ANDERSON COUNTY.

1. COUNTIES—Powers, Where Vested. The powers of a county are vested in a board of commissioners as a corporate entity, and not in the commissioners separately and as individual officers. [Same as to school board: Aikman v. School Board, 27-129; Mincer v. School District, 27-253.]
2. ——— Sessions of County Board. The county board, before it can act, must be convened in legal session, either regular, adjourned, or special; and a casual meeting of a majority of the commissioners does not create a legal session. [Same as to school board: Aikman v. School Board, 27-129; Mincer v. School District, 27-253.]
3. ——— Special Sessions. A special session may be convened upon the call of the chairman at the request of two members; but personal notice of such call must be served, if practicable, upon every member of the board. [Same as to school board: Aikman v. School Board, 27-129; Mincer v. School District, 27-253.]
4. COUNTY BONDS; Subscription to Stock of Railroad Corporations—When may be Canceled. Where the record shows that in September 1871 a vote was had by which the county board was authorized to subscribe to the capital stock of a railway corporation, and that in September 1873 two members of the board met without any request or call for a special session, and without any notice to the third member who was present in the county and could have been served with notice, and not at a regular or adjourned session, and where notice of such session was intentionally and fraudulently withheld by said railroad corporation from said third member, and that at such session the two commissioners present passed a resolution directing a subscription to the capital stock of said company, and such subscription was accordingly made, held, that such subscription was not a legal and binding contract upon the county, and that it could maintain an action to have it set aside and canceled, and all bonds delivered in pursuance thereof delivered up and canceled. [Comm'rs Anderson Co. v. Rly. Co., 20-534.]

THE Board of County Commissioners of the county of Anderson brought its action to cancel a subscription of $160,000 purporting to have been made by said county to the stock of the Paola & Fall River Railway Company, and for the return and cancellation of $160,000 of county bonds issued and deposited with the state treasurer to pay such subscription. The Railway Company demurred to the petition, and the district court, at the March Term 1875, overruled the demurrer. The essential facts stated in the petition, and upon which the questions here are decided, are copied in the opinion, infra. The Railway Company appeals, and brings the case here on error.

W. A. Johnson, for plaintiff in error:

1. The petition of the plaintiff below (defendant in error) shows that on the 14th of September 1871, at an election held in Anderson county a majority of all persons voting at said election voted in favor of a proposition then submitted by the county board relative to subscribing stock in and issuing the bonds of said county to the Paola & Fall River Railway Company. The plaintiff below admits that said election and all things anterior thereto were in conformity with the requirements of the statute to confer the authority on the county board to subscribe for stock in and issue the bonds of said county to said railway company. The petition further alleges that on the 4th of September 1873, the chairman of the county board and another member of the board met and held what they designated to be a special session of the board. The proceedings of said board, and their subscription to the capital stock of said railway company, and a copy of the proposition submitted to the electors, and the ballot used at the election on the 14th of September 1871, are set out in the record in exhibits to the plaintiff's petition, and the plaintiff is estopped from denying them. The county board having acquired jurisdiction by the election, every presumption is in favor of the regularity of its proceedings, and they cannot be inquired into collaterally. 3 Iowa, 114; 15 Iowa, 216.

2. The powers of a county as a body politic and corporate must be exercised by a board of county commissioners. (Gen. Stat. 263, §43.) The county board are required to meet in regular session at stated times, and in special session on the call of the chairman, at the request of two members of the board, as often as the interests of the county may demand. (Laws of 1873, p. 157.) The petition of the plaintiff below shows that the chairman of the board and one other member of the board were present, and held what they determined to be a special session of the board. Two members of the board met and passed on the object of the meeting and its purpose, and by their determination declared it to be a special session. When commissioners meet at the county clerk's office, and by their consideration determine that the interest of the county requires that they should hold a special session of the board, and so enter their determination on the records of said board, and proceed to the business of said county, there can scarcely be any question as to the legality of their proceedings; and if all the commissioners could so hold a special session, a majority of them could legally meet and transact the business of the county. Gen. Stat. 259, §26; id., p. 999, §1, clause 3d. And so held by this court in Scott v. Paulen, 15 Kas. 162. And see Blackman v. Town of Dunkirk, 19 Wis. 198; Com. v. Leckey, 6 Serg. & Rawle, 166; Cooper v. Ramesby, 8 Watts; Curtis v. Butler, 24 How. (U. S.) 485.

In asking the court to cancel the subscription for stock and the cancellation of the bonds issued in payment thereof, the county board seeks the cancellation of its own official acts, an affirmation of its bad faith.

Abram. Bergen, for defendant in error:

The only authority given by the county board for the subscription for stock and issuing of bonds to plaintiff in error.

Brief of Defendant in Error.

was at a meeting of two of the commissioners, at what they termed a "special session" of said board. The allegations of the petition as to the manner of calling and holding this pretended session, admitted by the demurrer to be true, show that the two commissioners could not at such pretended meeting legally bind the county, as it might be affected by adverse claims, or in matters of contract. As to the meetings of corporate bodies, the rule is, if the meeting be special, that notice is necessary, and must be personally served, if practicable, upon every member entitled to be present, so that each one may be afforded an opportunity to participate and vote. Dillon on Munic. Corp., §§ 200, 201, 223, 224; Angell and Ames on Corp., §§ 488, 492; Wil. on Munic. Corp., § 58; 22 N. Y. 128, 134; 7 Cowen, 526; 21 Wend. 178; 2 Gill, (Md.) 254; 7 Conn. 214; 40 Cal. 77.

Plaintiff in error takes some pains to establish the proposition, that two of the commissioners can act. This is not controverted, as applied to the mode of proceeding after the meeting is duly convened. But it does not apply to the mode of convening the meeting. The majority may act only when the meeting is at a time designated by law, or if the meeting be special, when all the members are present, or all have been duly notified. (Dillon, §§ 202, 226.) In this state, the only statutory rule applicable to this case is found in Gen. Stat., p. 256, § 18, that the board may meet in special session on the call of the chairman, at the request of two members of the board. Under the rules of law, and in reason, the call should reach all the members. The member of the board absent from this special session, and not notified, resided with his family in the county, and was then in the county. In Scott v. Paulen, 15 Kas. 162, this court says, "The request may be verbal, the call verbal, the notice to the members verbal, provided all the members receive the notice in time to attend, and a quorum is actually present." In the case of Blackman v. Town of Dunkirk, 19 Wis. 198, cited by plaintiff in error, we do not discover anything tending to negative the necessity of notice to all the members.

Plaintiff in error seems to attach great weight to the records of the commissioners. We submit that this has no bearing upon the case as it now stands. We do not admit that the county is estopped by every entry on the record of the commissioners, from contesting the binding force of such entry, if made by the order of but one or two members of the board, at the request and with the knowledge and connivance of those claiming adversely, especially if the record itself shows these facts. The petition contains allegations showing that the action was not the action of "the board," but only of two individuals who happened to be members, assuming to act as a board, but not in such manner as to bind the county. By its demurrer, the railway company admits the truth of the allegations, and hence admits that the subscription and bonds are void.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action by the defendant in error to cancel a subscription for stock, and for the return and cancellation of the bonds of the county issued in payment of the stock. A demurrer to the petition was overruled by the district court, and this ruling is the matter here presented for review. We shall content ourselves with the examination of a single question, for upon that we think the ruling must be sustained. The subscription was ordered at a special session of the county board, and it is insisted that such session was not legally called, nor validly held. The facts respecting it are, as stated in the petition, and for the purposes of the demurrer admitted to be true, as follows:

"And said plaintiffs aver, that two members of said board did not request that such special session of said board should be held, nor that the same should be called by the chairman of said board; that no call for such special session was ever made by the chairman of said board; that all the members of said board were not present at such so-called special session; that B. M. Lingo, at that time an acting and legally-elected and qualified member of said board, was absent from said so-called special session, and no notice of such special session, or of any

---

Opinion of the Court.

call therefor, was given to or served upon the said B. M. Lingo, or at his residence, although, as said Railway Company and its agents then and there well knew, the said B. M. Lingo was then in said county, and resided therein with his family, and had no knowledge or notice of such intended special session, or of any call therefor; but that knowledge and notice of such intended special session was intentionally and fraudulently concealed and kept from the said B. M. Lingo by the said Railway Company and its agents; and said session was not a regular session of said board, nor was it an adjourned session from any regular session thereof, nor from any duly-called special session of said board."

Was such session a legal one, and the acts of the two commissioners thereat binding on the county? and if not, is it estopped from asserting its illegality in this action? The statute providing for sessions of the county board is found in § 13, p. 256 of the Gen. Stat. That section, after providing for the meeting of the board in regular session, adds, "and in special session on the call of the chairman, at the request of two members of the board, as often as the interests of the county may demand." This is the only statutory provision on the subject. It does not specify whether the call shall be verbal, or in writing, how long prior to the meeting it shall be made, nor require a record to be preserved of it. And the same is true as to the request. But still it requires a "call;" and a call of a meeting, in the legal sense of the term, is a summons to the parties entitled to meet, directing them to meet. It involves something more than a mere purpose in the mind of the caller, or an expression of that purpose unheard, unseen, and unknown. It implies a communication of that purpose to the parties to be affected by it. How it shall be communicated, is sometimes prescribed by statute, or by by-law. It is sometimes provided that it shall be by publication in the newspaper, sometimes by printed notice served personally or at the residence, and sometimes by mere oral personal notice. But in some way or other notice must be given; and if there be no regulation as to the manner of notice, it must be personal, at least where personal notice is practicable. This is no new question. It has arisen in respect to the sessions of common councils of cities, boards of directors or trustees of private corporations, the town meetings of New England, the meetings of members of corporations, boards of electors, etc. And there is but one uniform rule running through the authorities. In the case of Rex v. Mayor, &c., of Shrewsbury, Rep. Temp. Hard. 151, it was said by the court, that "When the acts are to be done by a select number, notice must be given of the time of meeting, * * * and in such case the acts of a majority would bind the whole body; or if all were present through accident, without notice, their acts would be good; but the acts of a majority, present by accident, would not be binding." It was a saying of LORD KENYON'S, that "special notice must be given to every member who has a right to vote." Ch. J. TILGHMAN, in the case of the Baltimore Turnpike, 5 Binney, 481, said, "that when several persons are authorized to do an act of a public nature which requires deliberation, they all should be convened, because the advice and opinions of all may be useful, though all do not unite in opinion." In Wilcox on Munic. Corp., § 58, we find it laid down, that "all corporate affairs must be transacted at an assembly convened upon due notice at a proper time and place, consisting of a majority of the persons of each class to which the prescription or charter has confided the power." And SELDEN, J., in People v. Bachelor, 22 N. Y. 128, uses this language: "It is not only a plain dictate of reason, but a general rule of law, that no power or function intrusted to a body consisting of a number of persons can be legally exercised without notice to all the members composing such body." DILLON in his work on Munic. Corp., § 224, lays down the law thus: "If the meeting be a special one, the general rule is, unless modified by the charter or statute, that notice is necessary, and must be personally served if practicable upon every member entitled to be present, so that each one may be afforded an opportunity to participate and vote." See also further, King v. Theodorick, 8 East, 543; King v. Gaborian, 11 East, 77; Ex parte Rogers, 7 Cowen, 526, and note; Downing v. Rugar, 21 Wend. 178;

Opinion of the Court.

---

Stow v. Wise, 7 Conn. 214; Harding v. Handewater, 40 Cal. 77; Wiggin v. Freewill Baptist, 8 Met. (Mass.) 301. Nor is this merely an arbitrary rule, but one founded upon the clearest dictates of reason. Wherever a matter calls for the exercise of deliberation and judgment, it is right that all parties and interests to be affected by the result should have the benefit of the counsel and judgment of all the persons to whom has been intrusted the decision. It may be that all will not concur in the conclusion; but the information and counsel of each may well affect and modify the final judgment of the body. Were the rule otherwise, it might often happen that the very one whose judgment should and would carry the most weight, either by reason of his greater knowledge and experience concerning the special matter, by his riper wisdom and better judgment, or by his greater familiarity with the wishes and necessities of those specially to be affected, or from any other reason, and who was both able and willing to attend, is through lack of notice an absentee. All the benefit, in short, which can flow from the mutual consultation, the experience and knowledge, the wisdom and judgment of each and all the members, is endangered by any other rule. Again, any other rule would be fraught with danger to the rights of even a majority, as, when legally convened the ordinary rule in the absence of special restrictions being that a quorum can act and a majority of the quorum bind the body, it would, but for this rule, often be in the power of an unscrupulous minority to bind both the body and the corporation for which it acts to measures which neither approve of. Thus, were the body composed of twelve members, a quorum of seven could act, and a majority of that quorum, four, could bind the body. An unscrupulous minority of four by withholding notice to five, might thus bind both the body and the corporation. Reason therefore and authority unite in saying that notice to all the members to whom notice is practicable, is essential to a legal special session.

But we are referred by counsel to that clause in the act concerning the construction of statutes, (Gen. Stat., p. 999,) which reads, "Words giving a joint authority to three or more public officers or other persons, shall be construed as giving authority to a majority of them, unless it be otherwise expressed in the act giving the authority." We do not see that this affects the question. Whenever there is a legal session, unquestionably a majority of the commissioners can act and bind the county. But this casts no light upon the question as to the manner of convening a legal session. It must be remembered that the powers of the county are not vested in three or more commissioners as such, but in a single board. (Gen. Stat., p. 254, §3.) Two commissioners casually meeting have no power to act for the county. There must be a session of the "board." This single entity, the "board," alone can by its action bind the county. And it exists only when legally convened. Its regular sessions are fixed by law, and of them all the members must take notice. Its special sessions exist only upon call of the chairman, and that as we have seen implies notice. But again we are referred to the case of Scott v. Paulen, 15 Kas. 162, in which this court sustained the action of a county board at a session held to be a special session at which only two commissioners were present, and for which no request, no call, and no notice were shown. It will be noticed from the opinion in that case that the court reluctantly sustained the action, and considered itself as there going to the extreme limit. But two very important differences exist between that and this case. Here it affirmatively appears that no request, no call was made, no notice given, and that designedly the parties interested in and desiring the action of the board withheld notice from one member. There it was simply a presumption from the silence of the record. But chiefly, there the action of the board created no liability, was in nothing adverse to the interests of the county, and was accepted by the people as legal. All that was done was to order a county-seat election. The proper petition was presented. If in unquestioned session, the board would have had no discretion, but would have been bound to order an election. By a majority, in apparent session, the election was ordered. The people accepted this action as valid, and generally participated in the election. Under such circumstances, when the only parties interested in and to be affected by the action, accepted it as valid, and when by it no interest or claim opposed to the county was created, it seemed just and legal to sustain the action. But in this case by the action a great liability is attempted to be cast upon the county, adverse interests created, and the people of the county have not since that accepted the action as valid, and thus in a certain sense estopped themselves from questioning its validity. True, the people had prior thereto by a vote given authority to the board to subscribe, but this as heretofore decided simply gave the authority to the board to be exercised at its discretion. L. G. Rld. & Trust Co. v. Comm'rs Davis County, 6 Kas. 256. And this discretion was the discretion of all the members; that is, the information, experience and judgment of all were to be exercised, and after consultation the judgment of the majority to control. Again, this action of the commissioners was taken in September 1878, and the vote was in September 1871. After remaining so long in abeyance it would seem that the authority should not be exercised without a full consultation of all the officers intrusted with the exercise of the authority. It may also be remarked, that this controversy arises between the county and the railroad company, the original parties to the transaction; that the latter is of course chargeable with notice of what actually took place therein, and was guilty as alleged of a fraudulent withholding of notice from one of the members. It cannot therefore, as against the county, invoke the aid of any principle of estoppel.

The ruling of the district court must be affirmed.

Tucker v. Allen.

E. M. TUCKER V. STEPHEN H. ALLEN.

1. DEED; CONVEYANCE; *When Executed in Blank, as to Grantee. Where a deed was executed in blank as to the grantee, with the understanding that the deed should afterward be filled up and delivered to some person as grantee whom a certain railroad company should designate, and afterward, and in the absence of the grantor, the deed was so filled up and delivered to a grantee who had full knowledge of the facts—assumed, by the supreme court, but without deciding the question, that such deed, when so filled up and delivered, was void. [Ayres v. Probasco, 14-176; Chapman v. Veach, 32-167.]
2. VOID DEED *Becomes Valid by Ratification. A deed void when delivered may be ratified and confirmed by the grantor, after he has full knowledge of all the facts, by any words and acts of his which show a clear intention on his part that the deed shall be considered as having been properly executed and delivered and as conveying the title to the property. [Knaggs v. Mastin, 9-532; Ayres v. Probasco, 14-177; Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28-827.]
3. ——— Under the facts of this case, held, that such a deed so executed and delivered was afterward ratified.
4. CONDITIONS; PUBLIC POLICY; *Stipulation Not to Build Depot. One of the conditions of a deed was, that no railroad depot should be built at a certain place within one year. No depot was built at such place within that time, and all the other conditions of the deed were strictly fulfilled, and everything connected with the deed was fully executed, and there was nothing to show that any injury or inconvenience ever resulted to any person or to society because no depot had been built at the place designated: Held, that neither the grantor in said deed, nor any person (with notice) claiming under him, can avoid said deed, merely because of a supposed illegality in inserting in said deed said conditions not to build said depot. [St. J. & D. Rld. Co. v. Ryan, 11-602; Brake v. Ballou, 19-397.]
5. DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY; *Certainty; Terms of Deed. Where property is conveyed by deed, a description of the property which can be made certain within the terms of the deed, and which is afterward made certain according to the terms of the deed, and to the satisfaction of all parties interested, and which then rests wholly in record evidence, is sufficient. [Bemis v. Becker, 1-226; Steele v. McDowell, 2-374; Kuykendall v. Clinton, 3-85; Edwards v. Fry, 9-417; Ephraim v. Garlick, 10-280; Am. Cent. Insurance Co. v. McLanathan, 11-533; Jay v. Granby Co., 15-171; Earnshaw v. Crout, 23-560; Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28-825.]

Error from Linn District Court.

EJECTMENT, brought by Allen as plaintiff, to recover possession of Lot 5 in Block 129, city of Pleasanton. Both parties claimed title in fee. The facts are fully set out in the opinion. The district court, at the May Term 1874, found in favor of Allen, and gave judgment in his favor, and Tucker, defendant, appeals, and brings the case here on error.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff in error.

Stephen H. Allen, defendant in error, for himself.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action in the nature of an action of ejectment, brought by Stephen H. Allen, defendant in error, (plaintiff below,) against E. M. Tucker. The action was tried by the court below without a jury, on the following agreed statement of facts, to-wit:

1st. The land in dispute has a common title in Morgan Fickes, under whom both parties claim.

2d. The title of plaintiff Allen is a quitclaim deed from Fickes and wife, dated September 21st 1870, a copy of which is herewith presented, together with the register of deed's certificate of record, marked "A," and made a part of these facts.

3d. It is further admitted, that one William Cameron and Octave Chanute duly platted into blocks, lots, streets and alleys, as part of the original town-site of Pleasanton, the lands in the said quitclaim deed mentioned, and filed the same in the office of the register of deeds, September 2d 1869, and that the lot in the petition described is an odd-numbered lot in said plat of said town-site, so filed and recorded. Afterward, October 4th 1871, the plaintiff signed said plat and recognized it.

4th. The title of defendant Tucker is under a deed from Fickes and wife to Octave Chanute, dated June 7th 1869, which conveyance, together with the register of deeds' certificate of record, is herewith presented, marked "B," and made part of these facts. And it is agreed and admitted that all the conditions and limitations in said deed were fulfilled within the time therein provided; that said deed was delivered by said Fickes before the insertion of the name of the grantee therein mentioned, and no grantee was mentioned therein at the time of the delivery. The deed was handed by Fickes to C. C. Smith, resident engineer of the company, with verbal directions to the company to insert in the blank whosoever name the railroad company mentioned in the deed should desire, and the president of the company told Mr. Chanute that for his extra services in behalf of the company it desired him to take the lands, and his name was thereupon inserted in the deed by himself, with the full assent of the railroad company.

5th. The other half of the lands in the conveyances to said Chanute and said plaintiff mentioned were conveyed by warranty deed, July 24th and August 14th 1869, by Fickes and wife to William Cameron, which was duly recorded in said July and August in the office of the register of deeds in said county.

6th. Said Chanute, prior to the commencement of this action, conveyed by warranty deed to the defendant herein the lot in the petition mentioned, who took possession thereunder, and still holds possession thereof.

7th. The consideration for the deed from Fickes to Chanute is therein recited.

8th. The lands and lots mentioned in the quitclaim deed of Fickes to plaintiff at the time of conveyance were worth about ten thousand dollars.

9th. Fickes, shortly after the execution and delivery of the deed "B," knew that it was filled with Mr. Chanute's name, and also knew that the town-site of Pleasanton was being platted, surveyed and laid out by all the parties in interest, including Mr. Chanute, and made no objection thereto, and assented to such survey and platting.

10th. Lots 15 and 17 in block 121, mentioned in the exception to the quitclaim deed from Fickes to plaintiff, were bought by Fickes after such platting and laying out of said town-site, and are in the lands mentioned in said deed from Fickes to Chanute, and were bought by said Fickes in the fall of 1869, of one H. C. Swift, who was the surveyor in laying out said town-site, said Swift being the agent of one or more lot-owners in Pleasanton.

11th. When Fickes gave the quitclaim deed to plaintiff, he (Fickes) stated to him that he made no claim to any of said lands in the deed mentioned, except a one undivided-half of two strips of land, one fifty feet wide on the west side, and one of one hundred feet wide on the east side of the right of way of the Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Company through said lands, which said strips were not laid out into lots, or included in any blocks, and were designated on said plat of said town-site as "railroad depot grounds." Plaintiff said to Fickes, "I want the deed to cover all the lands, so that I can use it against other interests besides those strips which I think you have." Fickes said, "I don't care about Chanute being bothered, as he hasn't used me just right." This reference to Mr. Chanute by Fickes was in answer to something Mr. Allen said to Fickes touching Chanute's interest in the lands. Fickes also stated to plaintiff that he would n't ever thought of conveying any interest in those strips if it had n't been for the difference between himself and Mr. Chanute.

---

Opinion of the Court.

12th. The Missouri River, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company is a corporation duly incorporated and existing under the general incorporation law of 1865, (being chapter 44 of the laws of that year;) and during the years 1869 and 1870 Mr. Chanute was the chief engineer of said company. The consideration in said quitclaim deed "A" is correctly recited.

18th. Fickes, after he learned that Mr. Chanute was grantee in the deed, stated to Mr. Chanute that he had sold the other half of the land to Mr. Cameron, who would be a good man to push the town.

DEED MARKED "A."

THIS INDENTURE, made this 21st day of September 1870, between Morgan Fickes and Minerva Fickes his wife, of the county of Linn, and State of Kansas, of the first part, and Stephen H. Allen of the same place, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said parties of the first part, in consideration of the sum of three hundred dollars to them in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, hath bargained, sold, remised, released and quitclaimed, and by these presents do bargain, sell, release, remise and quitclaim unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever, all our and each of our right, title and interest, estate, claim and demand, both at law and equity, and as well in possession as in expectancy, of, in and to the following-described premises or pieces and parcel or parcels of land, to-wit: The N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ , and the S. $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 31, in township 21, range 25, lying and being in the town of Pleasanton, county of Linn, and state of Kansas, and all lots, blocks, streets and alleys, strips and pieces of land therein contained, saving and excepting any part of the same heretofore deeded by the said parties of the first part to William Cameron; and lots number 15, 16, 17 and 18, in block 121; and lots numbered 6 and 34, in block 122; and lots numbered 1, 2, and 3, in block 139—together with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals the day and year first above written.

MORGAN FICKES. [SEAL.]

MINERVA FICKES. [SEAL.]

[Said deed was duly stamped and acknowledged, and was duly recorded on the 21st of September 1870.]

DEED MARKED "B."

Know all men by these presents, that Morgan Fickes and Minerva Fickes his wife, parties of the first part, do by these presents, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar in hand paid, and the further considerations hereinafter specified, grant, bargain, sell and convey unto Octave Chanute, of Jackson county, Missouri, under the several limitations and conditions and restrictions hereinafter provided, the one-half of (as is hereinafter designated) the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ , and sixty acres off the east end of the S. $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 31, of township 21, of range 25, in Linn county, state of Kansas, together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging; and we the said parties of the first part, warrant that we are seized of a good and indefeasible fee-simple title to the real estate hereby conveyed. The parties of the first part agree, and it is one of the conditions of this deed, to cause, on or before the completion of the depot hereinafter named, to have the land hereinbefore described surveyed, laid out and platted in village or town lots, with streets and alleys, by a competent surveyor, and that said lots shall be by said surveyor numbered, and the lots being designated on the plat of said survey by odd numbers, shall vest in the grantee an indefeasible fee-simple title, and the lots being designated on said plat by even numbers, the title to remain in the grantors. Now the conditions, limitations, and provisions, and the only uses and purposes for which the real estate aforesaid is conveyed, are as follows, to-wit: Whereas, the parties of the first part desire to secure the location and construction of a good and substantial freight and passenger depot on the line of the Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf railroad in the vicinity of the Round Mound which is situated in the west line of section 31, in town 21, range 25 in said Linn county: Now, in order to secure this object, it is herein agreed and provided, on the part of said grantors, constituting the parties of the first part, that for and in consideration that the said grantee, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, shall cause said Missouri River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Company to locate and construct a good and substantial passenger and freight depot within one mile of said Round Mound, within six months after the commencement of the running of the cars to or near said Round Mound, and that at the expiration of one year from the commencement of the running of the cars to said Round Mound neither said railroad company nor any other person or persons for or in behalf of said railroad company shall not have located or constructed a station or depot within four miles of said Round Mound, except the one herein provided for, then the title in fee simple to said real estate shall vest in said grantee, his, her, or their heirs or assigns. But if at the expiration of six months after the commencement of the running of the cars to said Round Mound, or as far south on the line of said road as said Round Mound, said railroad company shall not have located and constructed a good and substantial freight and passenger depot within one mile of said Round Mound, or if within one year after the commencement of the running of the cars to said point, or as far south as the said Round Mound, said railroad company or any other party or parties shall have located and constructed a station or depot other than the one provided for herein upon the line of said railroad within the space of four miles from said Round Mound, then the title to said real estate shall revert to the said Morgan Fickes and Minerva Fickes, their heirs or assigns.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals the 7th day of June, 1869.      MORGAN FICKES. [SEAL.]
   MINERVA FICKES. [SEAL.]

[Said deed was duly acknowledged by the grantors and duly certified on said 7th of June 1869, and was duly recorded in the registry of deeds of Linn county, August 10th 1869.]

Upon this agreed statement of facts the court below rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff below and against the defendant below. Was this judgment correct? This is the only question in the case; but involved in this question are several others which we shall notice as we proceed. We shall decide however only such of these questions as are necessary to be decided in order to dispose of the case.

Tucker v. Allen.

---

In the first place then, we shall assume, but without deciding the question, that the deed executed by Fickes and wife in blank as to the grantee, was void when so executed, and was still void after Chanute filled up the blank by inserting his own name therein. (Ayres v. Probasco, 14 Kas. 176, and cases there cited.)

1. Deed in blank.

The next question, and one of the two main questions in the case is, whether the deed was made valid by any of the subsequent transactions. The other main question is, whether the deed is void as being in contravention of public policy. In discussing the first of these two questions we shall assume that the deed is not void because of any supposed antagonism to public policy. We have heretofore had occasion to examine similar questions in the cases of Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kas. 532, and Ayres v. Probasco, 14 Kas. 177, 196, 197. But those two cases differ from this in essential particulars. In the Knaggs case the deed was held to be good upon the ground of an equitable estoppel and of a subsequent ratification. But in this case we hardly suppose that an equitable estoppel can be interposed to aid the defective execution of the deed; for Chanute was fully aware of its defective execution when he inserted his own name therein as grantee. (See Ayres v. Probasco, supra.) The record does not show whether the defendant Tucker was aware of said defective execution or not, but as his counsel do not seem to claim that he stands in any better situation than his grantor (Chanute) did, we have concluded to treat the question now under consideration just as though it had arisen between the original parties to said deed. In the Ayres case the mortgage was held bad because there was no ground upon which an equitable estoppel could be founded, and there was nothing showing a subsequent ratification of the mortgage by Mrs. Ayres, in whom the title was; and as the mortgaged property was a homestead, the mortgage was wholly void without her consent. In the present case there is very much tending to show that Fickes, the grantor, in whom the title was, did by his subsequent acts and words ratify and confirm the deed after it was filled up, so as to make

2. Ratifying void deed. Cases, and authorities.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

it a deed to Chanute; and there is no pretense that the property attempted to be conveyed was at any time a homestead. The only question then for us now to consider is, whether the subsequent acts and words of Fickes did ratify, confirm, and make valid said deed. We think they did. Of course the regular way to execute a deed would be to complete the body of the same first, and then to affix the signature of the grantor; but this manner of executing a deed is not absolutely necessary. If the deed is complete when it is delivered, that is all that is necessary. It makes no difference in what order, or when, or where, or by whom the different parts of the deed are drawn up; or whether they are drawn up in the presence or absence of the grantor; or whether they are written or printed, or partly one and partly the other; or whether the grantor makes his signature before or after they are drawn up, or at some intermediate point of time, provided however, that before the deed is delivered it is made complete and perfect, and that the grantor has actual knowledge of its contents, and that with such knowledge he authorizes its delivery. Now the present deed comes very nearly within the foregoing description of a good deed. All that it lacks is, that it was not formally delivered by Fickes to Chanute after its final completion by inserting Chanute's name therein, for Chanute already had the possession of the deed. If after Chanute inserted his name in the deed he had handed it to Fickes, and Fickes had returned it to Chanute with the intention that it should be his deed, it would undoubtedly have become a good and valid deed by virtue of such act. (Speake v. U. S., 9 Cranch, 28; Malarin v. U. S., 1 Wallace, 282, 288.) But an actual or formal delivery of a deed never was necessary. A deed may be good by constructive delivery as well as by actual delivery. Any words or acts showing an intention on the part of the grantor that the deed shall be considered as completely executed, and the title conveyed, is sufficient. (4 U. S. Dig., First Series, 481, paragraph 306, et seq., and cases there cited.) And where a deed has been delivered to the grantee before it is finally completed, and the grantee completes the same, as in this case, we think the grantor may with a full knowledge of all the facts ratify and confirm the deed and make it valid by any words or acts which show a clear intention on his part that the deed shall be considered as having been properly executed and delivered, and as conveying the title to the property. (Devin v. Himer, 29 Iowa, 297.) Where a grantee obtained a deed without authority, it was held that the grantor might make the deed and the delivery thereof good by ratification, without any subsequent delivery thereof. (Parker v. Hill, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 447, 450.) It has also been held that a void deed already delivered may be ratified by words or acts without a reexecution or redelivery of the deed. (Garrett v. Gouter, 42 Penn St. 143; Warden v. Eichbaum, 3 Grant's Cases, (Penn.) 42; Jones v. Evans, 7 Dana, (Ky.) 96, 98.) Also held, that a bond or deed may be materially altered after its delivery, with the consent of all the parties, and still be valid. (Speake v. U. S., supra; Bassett v. Bassett, 55 Me. 125, 127.) And other sealed instruments affecting real estate, void when delivered, have been held to be made valid by ratification without a second execution or delivery. (Breithaupt v. Thurmond, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 216; Powell v. Gossom, 8 B. Mon. 179; Hall v. Vanness, 49 Penn. St. 457.) In the present case, Fickes knew that the deed was filled up with the name of Chanute as grantee; he knew that Chanute took possession of the land under the deed, and laid it out into town lots, streets, alleys, etc.; he knew that Chanute claimed the property under the deed, and yet he made no objection to all this, but on the contrary he recognized Chanute's right to the property at various times, and bought two of the lots that went to Chanute under the deed. Fickes sold his remaining half of the property to Cameron, and then told Chanute that Cameron "would be a good man to push the town." And when Fickes executed the quitclaim deed to the plaintiff, Allen, he told Allen that he did not claim any of the land claimed by Chanute except the undivided-half of certain strips not laid out into town lots, streets, or alleys, and that he would not claim even this except for a difference between himself and Chanute. Was not this a good and sufficient ratification of the deed, known by Fickes to have been completed, and known by him to have been in Chanute's possession? Does not this show beyond all question, that Fickes intended that the deed should be a good and valid deed conveying the property to Chanute? And if so, was there any necessity to go through with the useless form of Chanute handing the deed to Fickes, and Fickes returning it to Chanute so as to constitute a formal delivery? We think the deed was ratified, and so made valid so far as this question is concerned.

Is the deed void because in contravention of public policy? We think not. It is a deed conveying an estate upon condition, but whether upon condition precedent, or condition subsequent, or partly one and partly the other, it is difficult to determine. As Chanute was to take immediate possession of the property, and survey it into town lots, streets, alleys, etc.; and as the title to the property was to "revest" in Fickes for any conditions broken, it would seem that all the conditions were intended to be conditions subsequent, and not precedent. But there is other language in the deed that would seem to indicate a contrary intention, and that all the conditions were intended to be fulfilled before any estate should vest in Chanute. Probably however the fairest interpretation of the deed would be, that no estate was to vest in Chanute until the land should be surveyed, platted, etc., and the desired depot built, and then that the estate should vest in him subject to be defeated or forfeited upon condition that the prescribed depot should be built within the prescribed time and limit. This would make the surveying and the platting of the town-site, and the building of the designated depot, conditions precedent, and the refraining from building the other depot a condition subsequent. And surely, this last condition should be considered a condition subsequent; for under the terms of the deed it could not possibly have been fulfilled under one year from the time when the cars commenced to run to that place, while all the other conditions might have been fulfilled

deed.

---

Tucker v. Allen.

---

before the cars commenced to run at all, and must have been fulfilled within six months thereafter. Now it can hardly be possible that the parties intended that Chanute should lay out said town-site, should know which were his town lots, and be in possession of them, and then hold them six months or a year before any title to them should vest in him. This is not the way people do business in this western country. Probably the parties expected to sell nearly all said town lots before the end of the year. Indeed, Fickes bought two of Chanute's lots within less than a year, and even within less than six months after said deed was executed. (In connection with this subject, see Southard v. Central Rld. Co., 2 Dutch. N. J. 13; Nicol v. N. Y. & Erie Rld. Co., 12 N. Y. 121, 131.) The deed in one place reads as though it was intended that the survey, platting, etc., should "vest in the grantee an indefeasible fee-simple title" to the odd-numbered lots. Now if the condition not to build said depot was a condition subsequent, then under no circumstances could the deed be held void on account thereof, because, first, the condition was fulfilled; second, if it had been broken, Allen could not claim a forfeiture on account thereof, but only Fickes, or his heirs; (2 Washb. Real Prop. 451; 1 Hilliard Real Prop. 430;) and third, if the condition were really illegal, immoral, or against public policy, then the effect would be to leave the estate already vested in Chanute absolute and not conditional; (2 Washb. Real Prop. 447; 1 Hilliard Real Prop. 510.) But for the purposes of the case we shall suppose that all the conditions were conditions precedent; and then, would the deed be void? We think not. We suppose it is not claimed that the agreement to lay out the land into a town-site, was illegal. Neither do we suppose that it is claimed that the agreement to build the depot, was illegal. (Workman v. Campbell, 46 Mo. 305.) It is the agreement that a depot should not be built, which we suppose the defendant in error claims was illegal. Now a contract that a depot should not be built for all time, would surely be illegal. (St. Jo. & D. C. Rld. Co. v. Ryan, 11 Kas. 602.) A contract that a depot

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

should not be built at or near some particular town or city for the space of one year, would probably also be illegal. The courts could see from the facts of such a case that such a contract would be against public policy; and they could therefore determine, as a matter of law, from such facts that such a contract would be illegal and void. But how can any court, without knowing the facts, determine as a matter of law that a contract not to build a depot at a particular place (not a town or city) for the space of one year only, would be against public policy, and therefore illegal and void? There are whole counties in this state without any population. There are many places where a depot will probably not be needed for the next century. And is it possible, that a contract, not to build a depot at any one of such places, for the space of one year only, would necessarily, and as a matter of law, be illegal and void? It is not enough for the present case that the contract, or rather the condition of the deed, should be merely indifferent or valueless. It must be absolutely illegal in order to be available to the plaintiff below. Whether there was any population at or near said "Round Mound," or not, the record does not disclose. Or, whether any depot might ever be needed there, the record does not show. And courts cannot take judicial notice, without any facts being brought to their knowledge, where depots might be needed, and where they would not be needed. . When this deed was executed, there was a railroad in prospect, and a town in prospect; and that is about all there is to show that there was any necessity for any depot anywhere within that whole country. But for the purposes of this case we will suppose that the courts can determine as a matter of law, and without reference to the facts, that the condition in the present deed that no depot should be built at a particular place within one year, was illegal; and upon such supposition, would the deed be void? We still think not. Every condition of the deed was scrupulously fulfilled, within the very terms of the deed, long before the plaintiff, Allen, claims to have obtained any interest in the property. At the time that Allen procured his quitclaim deed from Fickes, nothing pertaining to the original transactions between Fickes and Chanute, or contemplated in the deed from Fickes to Chanute, remained executory. Everything had previously been executed and fulfilled, and executed and fulfilled without the commission of any illegal, immoral, or injurious act. It is not pretended that the failure to build said proscribed depot injured or produced any inconvenience to any person or society. And Chanute and his grantees have long been in the possession of the property, holding the same under said deed. The question then to be now considered is, not whether an illegal executory contract shall be enforced, but it is whether vested rights held under an illegal executed contract shall be disturbed. Or, to state the question more accurately, it is, whether vested rights, held under a contract partially illegal in its origin, but now wholly executed, and executed without the commission of any wrongful act, can now be disturbed because of such original illegality, by an assignee of one of the parties to the contract, where both parties to the contract were equally in the wrong? The assignee in this case is not an innocent purchaser. He obtained said quitclaim deed knowing all the facts, and of course he can have no greater or better rights than Fickes had. If Fickes could not avoid the deed to Chanute for illegality, then of course Allen cannot. And we do not think that Fickes could. It is a general rule of law that a man will not be allowed to set up his own illegal acts for the purpose of avoiding his own deed. And with regard to executed illegal contracts, where the parties thereto are in equal wrong, it is a general rule that the law will not aid either of them, but will leave each and all of them where it finds them. In pari delicto portior est conditio defendentis; and In pari delicto portior est conditio possidentis. (2 Pars. Contr. 747, note w, and cases therein cited.) This rule of law has been applied to cases very similar to the one at bar. (Worcester v. Eaton, 11 Mass. 368, 375, et seq.; Swain v. Russell, 10 Ind. 438.) And we think it ought to be applied to this case.

---

Tucker v. Allen.

If the contract not to build said depot was illegal, then clearly Fickes was in pari delicto with Chanute; and he would not be allowed to set up his own wrong for the purpose of defeating his own deed. And this is especially so where he has received the full consideration for his contract, and where it has probably proved immensely valuable to him, and where he has not offered to return any portion of the same.

It is also claimed that the description of the land in the deed was indefinite and uncertain. Now the description was such
s. Description of land; certainty. that it could easily be made certain by a fulfillment of the terms and conditions of the deed itself. And the description was made certain, exactly in accordance with the deed, and to the full satisfaction of all the parties interested. The land was surveyed. It was laid out into lots, streets, alleys, etc. The lots were numbered. And a plat thereof was made, and filed in the office of the register of deeds September 2d 1869, according to law. (Gen. Stat. 618.) And by these transactions the description of the property conveyed was made as absolutely certain as it could be. And the whole description of the property now rests in record evidence. We think such a description is good. In connection with this question we would refer to Armstrong v. Mudd, 10 B. Mon. 144; Grover v. Drummond, 25 Me. 185.

her, because, first, the only hand he had in the whole matter was to indorse this note before maturity to Hollis Day, which act the statute nowhere forbids him to do, but which the law expressly gave him the right to do, and which the defendant in error by valid contract in writing had specifically stipulated he might do; and second, the plaintiff in error was not, nor can he be held responsible for the judgment of the court.

This usurious interest, then, having been voluntarily paid by defendant in error to Hollis Day, could not be recovered back from him, nor could it have been recovered back from plaintiff in error if paid by her to him: 9 Iowa, 382; 12 Iowa, 801; 1 McLean, 514; 11 Ohio, 419; 12 Ohio, 548; 7 Metc. 18; 8 Kas. 481.

Sluss & Dyer, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This action was brought in the court below by Hannah M. Walker, as plaintiff. The material facts upon which said Walker's cause of action is founded, as appears from her petition, are substantially as follows: On November 4th 1872, H. C. Day (plaintiff in error here) loaned her the sum of $1,000 for the term of one year, at the usurious rate of interest of 54 per cent. per annum, and to evidence said loan, she and W. N. Walker, her husband, executed and delivered to him their promissory note for the sum of $1,540, bearing date on said day, payable to Day's order, in one year thereafter, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum after maturity, the sum of $540 thereof representing the usurious interest reserved for the use of said $1,000. Said note was secured by a mortgage on certain real estate in Sedgwick county, executed by defendant in error and her said husband. Long before the maturity of said note, plaintiff in error by indorsement and for a valuable consideration transferred said note to one Hollis Day, who had no knowledge or notice of said usurious contract, and who by said transfer became the owner of said note and mortgage. On December 13th 1873, said Hollis Day obtained judgment against defendant in error in the district court of Sedgwick county for the amount of said principal and interest mentioned in said note, and for the sale of said mortgaged real estate to pay the same; and on March 9th 1874, he was about to cause said real estate to be sold to satisfy said sum under a legal process issued upon said judgment, and then defendant in error was compelled to and did pay to said Hollis Day said sum, $1,604.14, of which $447.50 was usurious interest reserved for said loan, and by reason of the premises said H. C. Day became liable to pay defendant in error said $447.50, with interest from March 9th 1874, which he has refused to pay, although requested. To this petition plaintiff in error demurred. The district court overruled the demurrer, and Day excepted. After the overruling of said demurrer Day filed his answer. He admitted the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage, as alleged, and also the assignment thereof to Hollis Day, and then as a defense alleged that on October 22d 1873 one Geo. H. Sweet commenced an action as plaintiff against said Hollis Day and said Hannah M. Walker, as defendants; that due service was obtained on both of said defendants; that that action was brought to foreclose a lien on said mortgaged estate; that the petition of said Sweet alleged that Hollis Day had or claimed some interest in said real estate; that said Day appeared and answered, and filed his cross-petition therein against his codefendant (Walker,) setting up the note and mortgage in question and demanding judgment against her for the full amount of said note, for the foreclosure of his lien, and the sale of the property to pay said judgment, and that the said Walker neglected and refused to answer said petition and said cross-petition, but suffered judgment to be rendered against her by default, in favor of Sweet, and also in favor of said Hollis Day for the full amount specified in said note, with interest, etc., and that afterward she fully paid off, satisfied and discharged said judgment. To this answer the defendant in error demurred, as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a defense. This demurrer was sustained by the court, and plaintiff in error excepted.

We are inclined to think that the court below erred. We think that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that the answer does state facts sufficient to constitute a good defense to the plaintiff's supposed cause of action; that the demurrer to the petition should be sustained; that the demurrer to the answer should have been carried back to the petition, and sustained as against it, and not as against the answer. We have no statute in this state making it illegal to contract for usurious interest, or to pay or receive the same. Section 1 of the interest law, as amended, provides that, in the absence of contract, interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum may be received: (Laws of 1871, p. 250.) Section 2, as amended, provides that the parties may contract for any rate of interest, "Provided, that no person shall recover in any court more than twelve per cent. interest per annum." (Laws of 1872, p. 284.) Section 3, as amended, provides that, "All payments of money or property made by way of usurious interest, or of inducement to contract for more than twelve per cent. per annum, whether made in advance or not, shall be deemed and taken to be payments made on account of the principal and twelve per cent. interest per annum, and the courts shall render judgment for no greater sum than the balance found due after deducting the payments of money or property made as aforesaid." (Laws of 1872, p. 284.) Section 4 of the interest law of 1868 has been repealed; (Laws of 1872, p. 284, §3.) Section 5 provides that judgment shall draw interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, except as otherwise provided; (Gen. Stat. 526.) Section 6 provides that judgments upon contracts shall draw interest at the rate expressed in the contract, not to exceed twelve per cent. per annum; (Gen. Stat. 526.) This is the substance of the interest laws.

Now, upon what principle can this action be maintained? Not under the statute, for there is no statute authorizing such an action. Not upon any contract of the defendant below

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

for he has violated no contract, and has paid to the plaintiff every cent that he ever agreed to pay her. Not upon any tort, for it is not shown that the plaintiff ever committed any tort. Not upon any fraud or overreaching, for it is not claimed that the plaintiff was ever in any manner deceived or defrauded. Not for money paid, for it cannot be claimed that the plaintiff ever paid any money to or for the use of the defendant. Not for money had and received, for it cannot be claimed that the defendant ever received from the plaintiff or from any other person any money. The defendant paid to the plaintiff $1,000. He was entitled according to law to receive back at the end of one year $1,120. He has received nothing from the plaintiff. He however transferred the note "for a valuable consideration" to one Hollis Day. But what he received from Hollis Day, we do not know. Whether it was money or property, or whether it was worth one dollar, or one thousand dollars, or some other sum, more or less, we have not been informed. Suppose the defendant exchanged the note for a horse worth $300: would it be right for the plaintiff to recover from the defendant $447.50, when the defendant did nothing more than what the plaintiff had authorized him by the note to do? The note was negotiable, and payable to the order of the payee, and the transfer thereof was just what the plaintiff authorized the defendant to do by the note itself. The most plausible grounds upon which the plaintiff below may claim to recover in this action are probably as follows: Sec. 3 of the interest laws provides, that "all payments of money or property made by way of usurious interest, or of inducement to contract for more than twelve per cent. per annum, shall be deemed and taken to be payments made on account of the principal and twelve per cent. interest per annum." The consideration of the note in this case was $1,000 in cash, $120 legal interest for one year, and $420 usurious interest. This usurious interest may under said § 3 be considered as a payment upon the principal, and should have been indorsed on the note, leaving as due on the note only $1,120. This amount was all that the defendant should have assigned to Hollis Day. The amount however of $420 was not indorsed on said note. The note was sold and assigned to Hollis Day as though nothing had been paid thereon, and as though the note was properly for $1,540. Hollis Day was an innocent and bona fide purchaser of the note. The plaintiff was therefore compelled to pay him the full amount of the note, and therefore the plaintiff may now recover the amount of the usurious interest from the defendant. This argument however fails in the following particulars: 1st.—The statute provides for only actual payments of money or property being considered as payments on the principal, and there was no actual payment in this case by the plaintiff to the defendant of any money or property. 2d.—There is no claim that the defendant ever received from any source any payment of money or property more than he was entitled to receive, or more than he could have collected from the plaintiff on the note. 3d.—There was no understanding or agreement by the parties that said $420 usurious interest should be considered as a payment on account of the principal, but on the contrary both parties understood and agreed that it should be paid in addition to the principal and legal interest, to whoever might be the holder of the note.

---

Day v. Walker.

There was no failure of consideration. The consideration that the plaintiff received was eminently valuable, and was all that she ever expected to receive. It was all that the parties stipulated for, and all that they ever had in contemplation. There was no deception or fraud, no mistake or misapprehension. Both parties knew exactly what they were doing, and what they were getting, and no disappointment subsequently ensued. And the whole transaction was purely voluntary on the part of the plaintiff. If, instead of giving her note for $1,540 for the one thousand dollars in cash, she had given money or property worth $1,540, we still apprehend she would have no action to recover the surplus back. Now, we understand that actions to recover money back because of failure of consideration, can be maintained only when there has been some mistake or misapprehension with reference to the consideration, and not where the parties had full knowledge of all the circumstances at the time of making the contract, at the time the consideration passed, and at the time of paying the money. But we do not wish to assert principles beyond the necessities of this case.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

THE L. L. & G. RAILROAD CO. v. W. H. H. MARIS.

1. COMMON CARRIER; *Extent of Liability, After Transit. The extraordinary liability of a railroad company as carrier of goods extends, not merely to the termination of the actual transit of the goods to the place of destination, but also until the consignee has a reasonable time thereafter to inspect the goods and remove them in the usual hours of business, and in the ordinary course of business. [Kallman v. U. S. Exp. Co., 3-205.]
2. REASONABLE TIME—*What is it; Residence of Consignee. This reasonable time is not a time varying with the distance, convenience, or necessities of the consignee, but is such time as would enable a person living in the vicinity of the place of delivery, in the usual course of business, and within the ordinary hours of business, to inspect the goods and take them away.
3. ——— Where goods are permitted by the consignee to remain eight days in the depot of the carrier, at the place of delivery, that is more than a reasonable time; and if the goods are then lost or destroyed without any negligence on the part of the carrier, it is not responsible.
4. WAREHOUSEMEN; *Liability; Negligence. After the expiration of such reasonable time the carrier is responsible not as carrier, but only as warehouseman, and for ordinary negligence.
5. CONTRACT—*Changes Rule. Where the carrier and shipper by special contract stipulate for notice, without any limitations or conditions, the reasonable time for removal commences from the time of the notice, and not from that of the arrival of goods.

6. ——— Notice; Terms, and Construction of. Where after a stipulation for notice, without any agreement as to the form or conditions thereof, the carrier gives notice, with a condition written thereunder that the liability of the carrier terminates upon the arrival of the goods, and the consignee receives such notices without objection, and continues his shipments over the road, held, that this was equivalent to a construction by the parties, and binding upon both, that the agreement for notice was simply for the accommodation of the consignee, and without extending the extraordinary liability of the carrier.

Error from Montgomery District Court.

THE opinion contains a full statement of the facts and questions in this case. Maris, as plaintiff, recovered judgment at the April Term 1874 of the district court against the Railroad Company, for $208.25, and costs, and the Railroad Company brings the case here on error.

S. O. Thacher, for plaintiff in error.

L. F. Michenor, and J. D. McCue, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action brought by defendant in error to recover for goods destroyed by fire in a depot belonging to the plaintiff in error, and the question is, whether the company at the time of the fire occupied toward the goods the position of carrier, or that of warehouseman. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts. It is not contended that the fire was caused by the negligence of the company, or that if its liability as carrier had terminated it was responsible for the loss. The material facts are these: Maris was a merchant at Winfield, a place about ninety miles west of Independence, a point on the company's road. Goods were shipped to him over the company's road, to be delivered to him at Independence. The goods in question reached Independence on the 4th and 7th days of January 1872, and were placed in the depot building, and there remained eight days, (until the 15th of January,) and were then consumed by fire. Immediately after the arrival of each consignment of goods at Independence, notice thereof was forwarded by mail to Maris at Winfield, but did not reach him until the 20th of January, and after the fire. A tri-weekly mail ran between the two places. Ordinarily, only two days were occupied in transmitting the mail. During that month the epizooty was prevailing among the horses in that section of the country, and owing to that or some other cause over which neither party had any control, the notice did not reach Maris until the 20th. He called every day at the post office in Winfield for his mail. The only means of conveying goods from Independence to Winfield was by wagon, and under favorable circumstances the trip from Winfield to Independence took from three to five days, and the round trip six to ten days. By special agreement between the parties, notice was to be given Maris by mail of the arrival of the goods at Independence. The form of the notice given, (and Maris had prior to the 1st of January 1872 received similar notices of the arrival of other goods,) was as follows:

allowed after the goods leave the depot, unless by consent of the agent.

Goods will be delivered only to the owner, or his written order. A receipt for the goods will, in all cases, be required, and no claim will be entertained for goods lost after such receipt has been taken. _____, Agent.

Upon these facts some questions of importance are presented. It is insisted on behalf of the company, in the first place, "that a common carrier is relieved of its extraordinary liability as an insurer whenever it has carried the goods in-
1. Common carrier: liability, extent. trusted to it safely, and deposited them in a safe warehouse." This question as to the period at which the carrier's extraordinary liability terminates, comes to us borne upon two opposing lines of decision. At the head of one line stands the case of the Norway Plains Company v. B. & M. Rld. Co., 1 Gray, 263, in which the great jurist of Massachusetts, C. J. SHAW, holds that this liability of the carrier terminates when the goods are unloaded at their place of destination, and are ready for removal by the consignee; that if the latter be not present to receive them, and they are kept by the company in its depot or warehouse, its liability is that of a warehouseman. In other words, this liability continues only during the actual transit, and that when this is ended, if the consignee does not immediately receive them the company, as carrier, delivers them to the company as warehouseman, and thereafter the company is liable only for loss resulting from actual negligence. At the head of the other line is the case of Moses v. B. & M. Rly. Co., 32 New Hamp. 523, in which the court decides that the carrier's liability continues after the termination of the actual transit, and until the consignee has a reasonable time to remove the goods; that, as the carrier's liability commences, not with the actual transit of the goods, but from the time of receipt from the consignor, so it continues until actual delivery to the consignee, or, what is equivalent to a delivery, until the consignee has had reasonable time after their arrival to inspect and take them away in the common course of business. The mere fact that either before or after the actual transit they are placed by the company in its depot or warehouse does not change the character of its liability. The following cases support the Massachusetts doctrine: McCarty v. N. Y. & Erie Rld. Co., 30 Penn. St. 253; Francis v. Dubuque & S. C. Rld. Co., 25 Iowa, 60; Bauserman v. T. W. & W. Rly. Co., 25 Ind. 434; C. & C. Air Line Rld. Co. v. McCool, 26 Ind. 140; C. & A. Rld. Co. v. Scott, 42 Ill. 133. The other doctrine is adopted in the following cases: Fenner v. B. & St. L. Rld. Co., 44 N. Y. 505; Zum v. New Jersey St. Co., 49 N. Y., 442; Wood v. Crocker, 18 Wis. 345; Derosia v. St. P. & W. Rld. Co., 18 Minn. 133; Morris & Essex Rld. Co. v. Ayres, 5 Dutch. 393; Blumenthall v. Brainard, 38 Vt. 413; McMillan v. M. S. & N. J. Rld. Co., 16 Mich. 79; Jeffersonville Rld. Co. v. Cleveland, 2 Bush. 468; Hilliard v. Wilmington & C. Rld. Co., 6 Jones, (Law) 343. The question is a new one in this state, and one of no small importance both to carriers and shippers. Notwithstanding there is a technical precision in the Massachusetts doctrine which makes it both capable of exact statement and easy of application, we think the other doctrine more just and reasonable in its application to the ordinary transactions of business, protecting both the shipper and the carrier. It extends a little the duration of the carrier's obligation, but only so far as seems necessary to protect the shipper. The goods remain in the custody of the carrier, and subject to his control. The exact moment of arrival can seldom be known to the consignee, even if he have notice of the shipment. It is unreasonable to compel him to remain at the depot of the carrier, waiting the arrival of the goods, or assume all the risks of the uncertainties in the delay of transportation and time of arrival. We therefore hold that the carrier's liability continues until the consignee has had a reasonable time to call for, examine, and remove the goods.

What is a reasonable time? This is not a time varying with the distance, convenience or necessities of the consignee, but it is such time as will enable one living in the vicinity of the place of delivery, in the ordinary

2. What is reasonable time.

L. L. & G. Rld. Co. v. Maris.

course of business, and in the usual hours of business, to inspect and remove the goods. It is well said by the court in the case from 18 Minn. 133, that, "What would be under the circumstances of the case, such reasonable time for the removal of the goods, is not to be measured by any peculiar circumstances in the condition or situation of the consignee, or plaintiff, which render it necessary for his convenience or accommodation that he should have longer time or better opportunity than if he resided in the vicinity of the depot, and was prepared with means and facilities of removing them; but what is meant by reasonable time is, such as would give a person residing in the vicinity of the place of delivery, informed of the usual course of business on the part of the company, a suitable opportunity, within the usual business hours, after the goods are ready for delivery, to come to the place of delivery, inspect the goods, and take them away." Tried by this rule, it is plain that the goods had remained in the depot at Independence more than a reasonable time for their inspection and removal. They should have been removed on the day of their arrival, or at the furthest, during the business hours of the succeeding day.

It is insisted however, that notice was required of their arrival, and that no notice was received until after the destruction. Whether, independent of the special contract, any notice was requisite, may be doubted. The consignee did not live at or near the place of delivery, and the authorities are conflicting upon the question whether notice is requisite even when the consignee lives at the place of delivery. See upon the question of notice McDonald v. W. Rld. Co., 34 N. Y. 497; Fenner v. Buffalo & St. L. Rld. Co., 44 N. Y. 505; Price v. Powell, 8 N. Y. 322; C. & A. Rld. Co. v. Scott, 42 Ill. 133; De-rovia v. St. P. & W. Rld. Co., 18 Minn. 133; McMillan v. M. S. & N. J. Rld. Co., 16 Mich. 79; Hilliard v. W. & C. Rld. Co., 6 Jones, (Law) 848. But whether notice independent of any special contract would have been requisite, need not be determined, for here the parties had stipulated for notice. And the question is, what effect did this notice have upon the company's

consignee;
contract.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

liability? On the one hand it is claimed that the reasonable time in which to remove the goods dates from the receipt of the notice, instead of the arrival of the goods; on the other, that the notice was purely a favor to the consignee, and that specifying the time at which the carrier's liability was to cease, it cannot be construed as enlarging that time. The question is one of difficulty. In those states where notice of the arrival of the goods is required to terminate the carrier's liability, it is held that the reasonable time for removal dates from the giving of the notice. This seems necessary to make the notice of any value, for if the reasonable time commences with the arrival of the goods it might often expire before the receipt of notice. It would almost invariably so expire if the consignee lived elsewhere than at the place of delivery. Hence, the notice would be meaningless, as affecting the rights and liabilities of either party. On the other hand, the form of notice used by the company, and of which Maris had information by the receipt of such notices, attempts to limit the effect thereof, and plainly states that the company's liability as carrier is to terminate upon the arrival of the goods. Hence, Maris had knowledge that while the company had agreed to give and would give notice of the arrival, it did so only as a favor to him, and without extending the duration of its extraordinary liability. If Maris was unwilling to continue the shipment of goods under such conditions he was at liberty to stop. Continuing, he accepts the conditions. To this it is replied that, contracting for notice without any stipulations as to the forms and conditions of notice, carries with it all the rights which flow from the mere fact of notice, and that the company cannot thereafter limit those rights by attaching conditions to that notice. This would doubtless be a satisfactory reply if this were the first consignment and the first notice. But having received notices with similar conditions, and making no objection thereto, or seeking a new arrangement, it seems to us that he cannot insist upon rights other than those given by the form of notice actually used. It must be borne in mind that this is not an attempt by the company to restrict

a. Construction of notice;
form, terms.

its liability, but an attempt by special contract to enlarge it; and before the company could be bound by such special contract it should be made clear that it had assented to it in full as claimed. It is not pretended that the company had ever given any notice otherwise than with the conditions attached to this; nor is it claimed the company would not be liable for any injuries resulting from its own negligence; so that its interpretation of its contract for notice, an interpretation accepted by Maris without objection, was that of an agreement to give information of the arrival of the goods without in the meantime assuming any additional liability. We are aware that the agreed statement shows that the first notice was only received Dec. 28d 1871, and that owing to the sickness of one party employed, as well as the prevalence of the epizooty, Maris failed to get a team to Independence before the destruction of all the goods of the various consignments by fire on January 15th 1872. But we fail to see anything which shows that Maris was unable to communicate by mail with the company, or to go himself, or send some one else to Independence to make a new arrangement, or stop the shipment, or receive and store the goods. Under these facts, though with some doubts, we are constrained to hold that the company's liability as carrier had terminated before the fire, and that therefore it was not responsible for the destruction of the goods.

The case having been tried upon an agreed statement of facts, the judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff in error, defendant below.

1. SERVICE OF SUMMONS; Jurisdiction; Findings; Presumption. Where the court below finds that a sufficient service of summons was had upon the defendant, and renders a judgment against him, and there is nothing in the record brought to the supreme court which shows that no such service was in fact had, or that the defendant did not make a voluntary appearance in the case, and it does not appear that the whole of the record has been brought to the supreme court, held, that although it may not appear affirmatively from the record brought to the supreme court, except as above stated, that any such service or appearance was in fact made, still it will not be presumed from such a record, for the purpose of reversing the judgment of the court below, that the judgment was rendered without a sufficient service of summons or appearance.
2. NATIONAL BANKING LAW; Mortgage to National Bank. The defendant owed a large sum of money to a National Bank. To partially secure the payment thereof he gave a mortgage to the bank on some property owned by him in Chicago, Illinois. There was a prior lien of $2,000 on the Chicago property, which the defendant agreed to pay. Five hundred dollars of the same became due, and the bank, in order to save and protect its own lien on said Chicago property, at the request of the defendant, paid said sum of $500, and then took the note and mortgage now sued on for that amount on property situated in Crawford county, Kansas: Held, That the taking of the last-mentioned mortgage is not a violation of the National Banking Law, and that the mortgage is valid.

Error from Crawford District Court.

FORECLOSURE of mortgage, brought by the Merchants National Bank of Fort Scott, as plaintiff, against Lewis Ornn and his wife. The mortgage was executed by said defendants to secure a note given by said Lewis Ornn alone. The note and mortgage were executed and dated July 19th 1873. The Mo. River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Co. was joined as a codefendant, as having some interest in or claim to the mortgaged premises. Trial by the court, without a jury, at the October Term 1874. The journal entry of the trial, showing the findings of fact and conclusions of law, is as follows:

Ornn v. National Bank.

(Title.) "This cause this day came on by consent. The plaintiff appeared by Playter & Purcell, its attorneys; the Mo. River, Ft. Scott & Gulf Railroad Co. by C. W. Blair, and the defendant Abbie E. Ornn by her counsel McComas & McKeighan. The defendant Lewis Ornn not appearing, but being in default. Whereupon the court finds as to Lewis Ornn, that he is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $553.55 on his note as set forth in plaintiff's petition, and that said indebtedness was secured by a mortgage signed by said Lewis Ornn and Abbie E. Ornn his wife on the property described in plaintiff's petition; and that the sum of $50 is due thereon as attorney's fee for foreclosure of said mortgage.

"And as to defendant the Mo. River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Co. the court finds, that the legal title to the lands described in said mortgage is in the said defendant the Mo. River, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Co., and that there is due said company as purchase-money on said land the sum of $36.30 with seven per cent. interest from July 16th 1874, which is a first lien on said land.

"And upon the issues submitted between the plaintiff and the defendant Abbie E. Ornn, the court, after hearing the evidence and argument of counsel, and being fully satisfied in the premises, upon request doth make the following special findings of fact:

"1st. That at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage stated in this case, the defendant Lewis Ornn owed the plaintiff about $4,000; that $2,500 of this sum was secured by a mortgage upon his mill at Cherokee, Crawford county, and the remaining $1,500 was secured by a deed conveying to the plaintiff certain property in the city of Chicago, Illinois, both of which last-mentioned securities were taken to secure indebtedness existing against Ornn prior to their being taken by plaintiff.

"2d. That this Chicago property was originally owned by one Walker, who sold it to one Watson, who sold it to defendant Lewis Ornn. The property was valued at about $4,000, and Watson executed to Walker a deed of trust for $2,000 of the purchase-money. This deed of trust was an existing lien on the property at the time it was conveyed by Watson to Lewis Ornn, and at the time he conveyed it to plaintiff, and which said existing lien Ornn agreed to pay off when due, and protect the second lien held by plaintiff of $1,500.

"3d. That after the Chicago property was conveyed to the plaintiff, $500 of the indebtedness upon said deed of trust became due and payable, and the plaintiff, upon the request of Lewis Ornn, and in order to protect its lien of $1,500 from being lost, paid it; and the note and mortgage in suit here were given for that $500, but were given before said payment was made; and that the plaintiff, after taking this note and mortgage, sent drafts to Chicago to make payment of said $500.

“4th. That the property described in the mortgage in suit here, at the time of the making of the note and mortgage, was the homestead of the defendants Lewis Ornn and his wife Abbie E. Ornn.

“5th. That the plaintiff is a National Bank.

“And as a conclusion of law, the court finds that this mortgage is valid under the National Banking Law.”

Judgment was given foreclosing said mortgage, and for a sale of the mortgaged premises, the court ordering and directing that from the proceeds of sale there be paid, first, the costs of suit and sale; second, the amount due to the railroad company; and third, the amount due to the plaintiff. From this judgment Ornn and wife appeal, and bring the case here on error.

McComas & McKeighan, for plaintiffs in error, contended that there was no service on Lewis Ornn, and no appearance by him, and that therefore the judgment as to him was coram non judice, and void. Also, that the mortgage was given for debt concurrently contracted, and therefore void, as being prohibited by the act of congress.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: We would infer from the brief of counsel for plaintiffs in error that they probably do not think that there is very much in this case. They refer us to the record three times, but in no case do they give us the page. (Rule 2, 13 Kas. 5.) They refer us to the United States Statutes at Large; but they neither give us the volume or the page. They also refer us to “Kansas Valley Bank v. Rowell, 2 Dillon, page —.” This we have found, though the page is not given.

Ornn v. National Bank.

Their first claim is, that the court below erred in rendering a judgment against Lewis Ornn, because (as they claim) he was not served with summons, and made no appearance in the case. The record however shows otherwise. A part of one of the journal entries reads as follows: "Now at this day this cause coming on to be heard upon the amended petition and proofs of plaintiff, and it appearing that service of summons has been lawfully made upon each of the defendants herein, and the parties being represented by counsel," etc. And a part of another journal entry reads as follows: "The defendant Lewis Ornn not appearing, but being in default," etc. Now these are findings by the court below of service of summons, and will be considered as true unless contradicted by some other portion of the record. But no other portion of the record, as brought to this court, does contradict them. We do not know that we have the whole of the record. Indeed, the presumption is pretty strong from what we have, and from the certificates of the clerk, that we have not got the whole of it. The transcript filed with the petition in error contained only the pleadings and such of the proceedings as were had by and before the court below at its September term in 1874. Afterward, and at the instance of the plaintiff in error, a copy of a summons with the indorsements thereon, and a copy of the proof of a publication service were filed in this court. But there is still nothing to show that there was not some other summons in this case, some other publication service, or some appearance by the defendant Lewis Ornn at some previous term of the court. There is nothing in fact which shows how much of the record has not been brought to this court. There is nothing which shows upon what evidence the court below made said findings. Indeed, none of the evidence upon any subject seems to have been preserved, and consequently none of it has been brought to this court. We must therefore take the findings of the court below that there was service, and sufficient service, as true. But even if the court below had made no findings upon the subject, still it would be presumed until the contrary were shown, that the judgment was rendered upon sufficient service. And the contrary could not well be shown by the record without the introduction of the whole of the record. A want of service on the defendant, or of appearance on his part, cannot be presumed merely because of the absence from the record of proof of the same, unless the whole of the record is introduced.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The plaintiffs in error also claim that the mortgage now sued on is void. They claim that it is void for the reason that it is a mortgage upon real estate given to secure a debt concurrently created. The facts affecting this question are substantially as follows: The bank is a National Bank. Lewis Ornn owed it a large sum of money. To partially secure the payment thereof he gave a mortgage to the bank on some property owned by him in Chicago, Illinois. There was a prior lien of $2,000 on said Chicago property which Lewis Ornn agreed to pay. Five hundred dollars of the same afterward became due, and the bank, in order to save and protect its own lien on said Chicago property, and at the request of said Lewis Ornn, paid said sum of $500, and then took the note and mortgage now sued on for that amount on property situated in Crawford county, Kansas. We think the mortgage is valid. The taking of the mortgage under such circumstances was not a violation of the National Banking Law. We think the bank had a right to get all the security it could for money which it necessarily had to pay out. And therefore we do not think that the mortgage is void.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

ELI HOLDEN V. GEORGE M. CLARK, et al

1. MORTGAGE; Stipulations and Conditions; Default; Election of Mortgage; When Debt Becomes Due. This action is on certain negotiable promissory notes and a mortgage. The notes by their terms are to become due at different times. The defendants set up usury, and a want of consideration. The mortgage contains a covenant that the defendants shall pay all taxes "that may be levied or assessed on said premises at the time the same shall become due and payable by the laws of this state; and they will insure or cause to be insured the buildings on said premises in a responsible insurance company to be named by the grantee;" and in case of failure to pay said notes when they become due, or said taxes, or to insure said building, "in manner aforesaid, then and at the time of such nonpayment or failure, or either of them, the whole sum hereby secured shall, if the grantee so elect, become due and payable." The notes and mortgage were dated July 14th 1873. At that time taxes were due on the land which were afterward paid by the grantee out of the money for which the notes and mortgage were given. No holder of the notes and mortgage ever named an insurance company in which to have said building insured, and the same was never insured. On August 8th 1873 the first holder of said notes and mortgage transferred the same to one H. M. Holden, and he transferred the same before maturity to the plaintiff Eli Holden. On November 1st 1873, other taxes became due on the mortgaged premises, which taxes have never been paid. On January 14th 1874, the first note became due, which note has never been paid. On February 13th 1874, the plaintiff, Eli Holden, elected that the whole debt secured by the mortgage should become due, and gave notice accordingly. Afterward he commenced this action: Held, That the plaintiff must be considered as an innocent and bona fide purchaser of said notes and mortgage, and that he holds the same freed from all equities existing between the original payor and payee, and mortgagors and mortgagee. [Day v. Walker, ante, 326; Rahm v. Bridge Co., post, 530; Gross v. Funk, 20-656.]
2. REPLY; Sufficiency; Waiver. Where an action is tried in the court below as though all parties considered that the reply was sufficient to put in issue certain allegations of the answer, the case will be considered in the same way in the supreme court. [See Bent v. Philbrick, ante, 190, and cases cited there.]

Error from Linn District Court.

ACTION by Holden as plaintiff, to foreclose a mortgage given by Clark and wife to Dean S. Kelley, to secure a note executed by Clark alone. The note was for $600, due in five years, with interest-notes payable every six months. The action was commenced February 14th 1874. The defense was, an alleged partial failure of consideration, and usury. The real question was, whether Holden, took the note and mortgage as an innocent purchaser for value before due. The material facts, and the stipulations and conditions of the mortgage are set forth in the opinion, infra. Trial at the October Term 1874 of the district court. Among the instructions given to the jury were the following:

---

Brief of Plaintiff.

“By the election of said plaintiff Eli Holden, the entire claim became due before he acquired an interest in said notes and mortgage; and if there was a failure of consideration for said notes and mortgage, he cannot recover. But whether there was a failure of consideration, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury.

“The notes and mortgage sued upon are subject to the same defense in the hands of the plaintiff that they would be if owned and in the hands of Dean S. Kelley, the payee in the notes and grantee in the mortgage.”

The jury returned a verdict in favor of Holden, plaintiff, for $513.33. Holden moved for a new trial on the ground that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, and that the verdict was too small. Motion overruled, and judgment on the verdict. Holden now brings the case here for review.

Dean S. Kelley, for plaintiff:

The clause or stipulation in the mortgage, that reads, “then and at the time of such nonpayment or failure, or either of them,” the grantee may elect, shows that it was the intention of the contract that the grantee might if he chose wait until several defaults occur, and then after the last exercise his option. This clause was undoubtedly inserted in view of the common-law rule, that where a party has a right upon default of the other party to choose between different courses or remedies stipulated in the contract he must exercise his option at the time of the default. (5 Wis. 206.) The plain intent of this contract is to vary that rule, and allow the party to exercise his option at any time after default.

---

Holden v. Clark.

But, to charge plaintiff with equities between Kelley and Clark, the notes must have been dishonored in the hands of H. M. Holden. Though plaintiff had actual knowledge of the dealings between Kelley and Clark, yet he would be protected, having received the paper from an innocent holder. (Edwards on Bills, 812.) The law will certainly not place him in a worse position when at best he only has constructive knowledge of them.

Again: We claim in order to charge the plaintiff with equities the notes must have been dishonored at the time he received them. (Edwards on Bills, 57.) This was evidently also the view of this court in National Bank v. Peck, 8 Kas. 660, upon which the ruling in this case, in the court below, was based. If not dishonored at the time of the transfer, he took them as an innocent holder. The notes were afterward dishonored in his hands. Can a note which becomes dishonored in the hands of an innocent holder be chargeable with prior equities? But it is said the notes and mortgage are one contract, and the several indorsees are required to take notice of the provisions of the mortgage, and are consequently chargeable with knowledge of transactions between the maker and payee. That they are one contract for the purposes of construction, we admit; and that the indorsees of the note are chargeable with knowledge of the terms of the mortgage, is probably the law; but would they be chargeable with the fact that Clark had failed to perform his contract? This must be the case in order to charge the indorsee with equities. The fact certainly does not appear on the face of the contract. Is the indorser required to look beyond it? We think not. (1 Black, 386; 1 Wall. 83.) It certainly would be a strange rule of law that would presume a man had not performed his contract, and upon the strength thereof require the indorsee of his commercial paper to ascertain at his peril that he had done so before his paper could be deemed clothed with the attributes ordinarily possessed by paper of that character. The defendant should at least have been required to prove that he never had paid his debts, before asking the court to reverse a rule of law so ancient and honorable to human nature as that which presumes until the contrary appears that all men perform their legal obligations. The rule above contended for would have made these notes equally dishonored in the hands of H. M. Holden, if it would not in fact render it impossible to purchase commercial paper secured by mortgage in any manner so as to become an innocent holder. But suppose plaintiff and H. M. Holden did know at the time they respectively received the notes that Clark had not paid the taxes and insurance: how does it affect the negotiability of the paper? The principle which charges an indorsee with prior equities on account of knowing certain facts is this, that the facts known are of a character to excite suspicion and put the party upon inquiry. (Edwards on Bills, 317.) What possible connection is there between the non-payment of taxes or insurance, and the consideration of the notes? Would the knowledge of these facts be any augury of the rates of interest charged, or excite any suspicion as to whether it was legal or illegal? Might they not exist the same had the loan been at seven instead of seventeen per cent? The payment of taxes and insurance were acts to be performed after the execution of the papers, and could have no possible connection with the consideration for which they were given. Suppose a negotiable corporation bond, payable in ten years, may by its terms be elected due if the obligor fail to pay certain prior bonds which are past due, or fail to pay insurance on a portion of its property: will the fact that the purchaser of the bond knew that the prior debt or insurance had not been paid excite any suspicion as to the legality or illegality of the original transaction? If so, and the purchaser by reason thereof is chargeable with equities, then it is in the power of the maker of negotiable paper of this character to render it non-negotiable by his own wrong, by simply refusing to perform his contract.

Brief of Plaintiff.

The notes then were not dishonored and not subject to prior equities when plaintiff received them. The first note was actually dishonored by non-payment on the 14th of January 1874, and yet the remaining ten notes were not. They were all negotiable notes, and not due on the 12th of February 1874. On the 13th of February plaintiff elects to have them due by reason of the failure to pay the first—and the district court held that in doing so he actually made them all due at the time of their inception, and thus dishonored the first note a second time! It was an honorable note on the 14th of January; dishonored by nonpayment on the 15th, and again dishonored ab initio on the 18th of February by a mere stroke of an ordinary quill! If the law-merchant is to be determined by such “now you see it, and now you don’t see it” legerdemain, the sooner it is determined the better for the commercial interest of the state.

Holden v. Clark.

The theory of the law is, that the indorsee must have either actual or constructive notice of equities in order to be charged with them. If he receive the paper after maturity, the presumption is conclusive that he had such notice. If he receive it before maturity, the contrary presumption prevails, unless he had actual knowledge, or such as would put him upon inquiry. By what principle of law then, can a party be said to be an innocent holder to-day, and not so to-morrow, when there is no change in the contract, and no new developments as to facts known? Clearly, nothing but this: The contract provides as a penalty for a breach that the holder may elect to have the whole debt due. The defendant suffers the breach, and the plaintiff exercises his right of election. Suppose it would take it back to a date prior to the transfer by Kelley: does it raise any presumption that the plaintiff had any knowledge as to the consideration? It is simply the stipulated consequence of a breach of the contract, and the defendant can take no advantage of it. Again: Suppose for the sake of argument we concede that the effect of the election was to take it back to the time of the breach: does it follow that the breach occurred at the inception of the notes, or even while they were in the hands of Kelley, or H. M. Holden? The contract reads, “And the grantors covenant and agree that they will pay all taxes, etc., at the time they shall become due by the laws of the state.” This clearly contemplates only taxes subsequently to be levied, otherwise it would be a covenant to pay a tax when due by the laws of the state, when in fact by the laws of the state it was already over two years past due. No one would seriously contend that the debt could be elected due for the nonpayment of that tax. But suppose it could: the defendant would be allowed a reasonable time to pay it, and it is certainly in the power of the grantee to enlarge that reasonable time as much as he likes, it being entirely at his option. The defendant cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and say, "I ought to have paid that tax in twenty-four hours, and as I did not, my default occurred then, and you shall suffer by it to my advantage." If Kelley saw fit to extend the time or not to claim a default while he held the note, he had a perfect right to do so; and if he did, then there was no default. H. M. Holden had the same right; and unless he insisted upon its payment, there was no default. The plaintiff had the same right, and consequently there was no default as to taxes and insurance until the election was made by Eli Holden. No one can with a shadow of reason contend that either of the holders had not the right to let the tax run as long as he choose, and then, if he saw fit, pay it and charge it up as a part of the debt; and with no more reason can it be claimed that there would be a breach until declared so by the grantee.

Brief of Defendants.

The same reasoning applies to the insurance, but with much greater force—as by the terms of the contract it is at the option of the grantee to take the insurance or not. If he deems the security ample, he may go without it. If otherwise, he may name a company and require insurance. No insurance company was ever named by the grantee in this case.

W. R. Biddle, for defendants:

1. Could the defense of usury and want of consideration be made by the defendant against this plaintiff? The answer alleges that Kelley, the payee in the notes and mortgagee in the mortgage, was the agent of the plaintiff and H. M. Hol-

---

Holden v. Clark.

den, and as such agent was authorized to make this loan to the defendants for the benefit of the plaintiff. The reply does not deny this agency and authority, by affidavit of the plaintiff, his agent or attorney; and the agency of Kelley, and his authority to make this loan, was admitted by the pleadings. (Code, §108.)

2. The notes and mortgage were due before they were assigned to plaintiff, and the same defenses could be made against them in his hands that could have been made had the suit been brought by Kelley. The notes and mortgage are one contract, and the provisions thereof inure to the benefit of the defendant as well as to the plaintiff. (8 Kas. 456, 660.) The plaintiff elects that by reason of nonpayment of the interest-note that became due Jan. 14th 1874, and the nonpayment of the taxes that were due and payable upon the mortgaged premises at the time the mortgage was given, and the nonpayment of the taxes dues Nov. 1st 1873, and the failure of said defendants to insure the building situated upon the mortgaged premises for the benefit of the mortgagee or his assigns, that the whole sum secured by the mortgage should become due and payable. Now the mortgage provides that at the time of such nonpayments, or failures, or any of them, if the grantee so elect, the whole amount secured by the mortgage should become due. The petition alleges that such failures and nonpayments were made, and the answer admits them; and the time of the nonpayment of the taxes already due on the land when the mortgage was given, and the failure to insure the building on the mortgaged premises, was before Holden became the holder of the notes and mortgage, so that they were all due before that time.

But it may be said, the plaintiff must elect that the notes and mortgage become due by reason of such nonpayment or failure, and that the date of the election is the date or time when the notes and mortgage become due. This might be true if it were not for the plain statements in the mortgage to the contrary. The election simply refers back to the times of nonpayment, or failure, or both. So that, even though the plaintiff afterward purchased the notes and mortgage, the defense of usury, fraud and want of consideration could be made.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

3. The instructions given by the court are in accordance with the cases reported in 8 Kas. 456, 660.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: The facts presented by the record are as follows: The petition is for the foreclosure of mortgage given by the defendants to one Dean S. Kelley to secure a promissory note for $600 payable five years after date, and also ten semi-annual interest-notes for $36 each. The notes and mortgage were executed July 14th 1878. The mortgage is in the ordinary form except that it contains a covenant as follows:

“And the said grantors hereby covenant and agree that they will pay all taxes and assessments of every nature that may be levied or assessed on said premises at the time the same shall become due and payable by the laws of this state; that they will insure or cause to be insured the building on said premises in a responsible insurance company, to be named by the grantee, in the sum of three hundred dollars, and assign the policy or cause the same to be made payable in case of loss to the grantee, his heirs or assigns, as his interests may appear, and continue such insurance until said indebtedness shall be paid in full. But in case of the nonpayment of said sum of money, either principal or interest or any part thereof, at the time or times above limited for the payment thereof, or in case of the nonpayment of any taxes that may be levied or assessed upon said premises, at the time the same shall become due and payable as aforesaid, or in case of the failure of the grantee to insure and keep said property insured and the policy assigned or made payable to the grantee in manner aforesaid, then, and at the time of such nonpayment, or failure, or either of them, the whole sum hereby secured shall, if the grantee so elect, become due and payable, anything in said note to the contrary notwithstanding, and this deed shall then be and at that time become absolute, and notice of such election may be given to the grantor at any time thereafter. * * * And it is further covenanted and agreed, that in case of failure of the grantor to pay taxes or cause said property to be insured as above provided, the grantee, his heirs or assigns, may, if he elect so to do, pay said taxes, or cause said property to be insured as aforesaid, and the amount of money so paid for taxes or insurance shall become an indebtedness against said grantor and draw interest at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from the time of such payment."

Holden v. Clark.

Kelley transferred said notes and mortgage to one H. M. Holden August 8th 1873, and said Holden transferred the same to the plaintiff afterward and before maturity of said notes or either of them. Defendants did not pay the first interest-note which fell due on January 14th 1874; did not pay taxes for 1873, due November 1st 1873; did not insure property; and did not pay certain back taxes which were due on a portion of said property at the time the mortgage was given; and by reason thereof, and after the maturity of the first interest-note, viz., on February 13th 1874, plaintiff elected to have the whole debt become due, and on that day gave notice thereof to defendants. The answer admits these facts, and sets up that Kelley acted as the agent of H. M. Holden and the plaintiff in making the loan to defendants, and claims a failure of consideration. The testimony shows (and there is no dispute on the point,) that Kelley paid a judgment of foreclosure against Clark upon the premises herein, amounting to $314.86; also, taxes on same land, $114.17; also, for abstract, $5, and for patent, etc., $2.50 — making a total of $436.03, which is all the consideration Clark ever received for the notes; that $150 commission was reserved by Kelley, and that he still has about $14 in his hands belonging to Clark. Defendant admits in open court that there is no evidence that Kelley acted as agent for plaintiff, or H. M. Holden, and hence the only question for this court is, whether the plaintiff obtained the notes and mortgage before or after maturity, and consequently, whether the notes are subject to or freed from equities between Clark and Kelley.

Though the defendant admits that the plaintiff received the notes as above stated and in fact long prior to the maturity of either of the notes, yet he claims, and the court below so instructed the jury, that, "by the election of the plaintiff, Eli Holden, the entire claim became due before he acquired an interest in said notes and mortgage," and therefore that the notes are subject to equities between Clark and Kelly. Other instructions given by the court were in substance to the same effect, all hinging upon the theory that, by reason of the failure of the defendants to pay the portion of the taxes unpaid at the time the notes and mortgage were executed, and by reason of their failure to insure the property under the above covenant, the notes became due at the time they were executed. As above stated, the election of the plaintiff was made and notice thereof given to the defendants on the 13th of February 1874, one month after the maturity of the first note. The reason assigned for the above ruling is, that the covenant reads that, in case of default, "then and at that time" the entire debt shall, at the election of the grantee, become due; and as plaintiff elects to have the whole debt due, it relates back to "that time," viz., the time of the default, which (it is said) was that of the date of the papers. The language however of the contract is, that "then and at the time of such nonpayment, or failure, or either of them," the whole of the debt shall become due "if the grantee so elect"—showing clearly that it was the intention of the parties, not that the whole of the debt or any part thereof not yet due should become due upon the happening of any default or failure—not that the grantee would be required to make his election at the happening of the first or any intermediate default, or not at all, but that the grantee might wait until several defaults had occurred, and then, after the last default, exercise his option by electing that the debt should become due, and the debt would then become due, not because of such default merely, but because of the election by the holder thereof that it should become due. The grantee might waive all the defaults except the last one, and then upon that default, and because thereof, elect to make the whole of the debt become due. And then, by no rule of construction could the time for the debt to become due be made to relate back to the time of any

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Holden v. Clark.

---

default which occurred previous to the last one. No election had been made by any holder of the notes or mortgage when either H. M. Holden or the plaintiff Eli Holden purchased the same, and none of the notes had yet become due by their terms. Hence both the Holdens were innocent purchasers and holders of the notes and mortgage. Up to February 13th 1874, when Eli Holden elected that the whole of the debt should be due, he was unquestionably an innocent holder of the notes. Now how can it be said because of such election that he never was an innocent purchaser? Up to January 14th 1874 none of the notes had become due. Then how can it be said that because of said election none of the notes were ever otherwise than due? Evidently all of the notes but the first note became due at the time that Eli Holden elected that they should become due, that is, on said February 13th, and not one of them became due prior to said January 14th. On said January 14th the first note became due, and it had never before that time been due. Then how can it be said after February 13th that it had never been otherwise than due? Can a note become due a second time? Can a note that was always due become due again? Can a note be due and not due at the same time? H. M. Holden purchased said notes on August 8th 1873, and the first default, as we think, was not made sooner than November 1st, 1873. The maker of the notes was to pay the taxes on the property (in the language of the contract) "that may be levied or assessed on said premises at the time the same shall become due and payable by the laws of this state;" and "that may be levied or assessed on said premises at the time the same shall become due and payable as aforesaid;" and he was not required to pay taxes "that" had been previously "levied or assessed on said premises," nor was he required to pay such taxes or any taxes "at the time the same" had "become due and payable," or that were then "due and payable." Besides, the taxes that were then due and payable were paid out of the money for which the notes were given long before the notes were transferred to H. M. Holden. But is it possible to con-

---

Opinion of the Court.

strue this contract so that Kelley might have elected to consider all of the notes due the very minute they were given? Such certainly could not have been the intention of the parties. The defendants certainly did not want to put it in the power of the holder of the notes to sue on them as soon as they were made when it was stipulated in the principal note and mortgage that the loan should be for five years. The insurance was to be (in the language of the contract) "in a responsible insurance company to be named by the grantee;" and the grantee never named any insurance company; so the defendants of course were never in default in this respect. The first default was therefore after H. M. Holden purchased the notes; and therefore, if we should carry the time back when said notes became due to the first default it would still leave H. M. Holden an innocent purchaser and holder of the notes; and if he was an innocent purchaser and holder, then of course the plaintiff must recover. Upon this whole subject we would refer to the able and elaborate brief of counsel for plaintiff in error.

Counsel for defendants in error raises the question that the plaintiff's reply was not verified by an affidavit, and therefore that it did not put in issue some of the allegations of the defendants' answer. The case was tried however in the court below, in the same manner as though it was considered by all the parties that the reply was sufficient, and therefore this court will now treat the case in the same way. (Bent v. Philbrick, ante, 190; Wright v. Bacheller, ante, 259, and cases there cited.)

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

1. CITIES; POWERS AND DUTIES, Respecting Bridges, Streets and Sidewalks; Liability for Negligence. Cities, having the powers ordinarily conferred upon them respecting bridges, streets and sidewalks within their limits, owe to the public the duty of keeping them in a safe condition for use in the usual mode by travelers, and are liable in a civil action for special injuries resulting from neglect to perform this duty. [The previous rulings of this court in sundry cases, in respect to this question, noticed and affirmed.] [City of Leavenworth v. Casey, McC.-124; *City of Topeka v. 2. STARE DECISIS; Settled Rules Should Not be Overturned. It is seldom that a rule of law, generally recognized by the decisions of other states, generally approved by jurists, hitherto followed by this court, and apparently salutary in its operation, ought to be abandoned merely because the reasons given for its original adoption are not altogether satisfactory, and that, logically, the courts should have reached an opposite conclusion.
3. DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE; Province of Court, and Jury; Practice. Where the court sustains a demurrer to the evidence, this ruling will be reversed when it appears that the petition states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and there is testimony tending fairly to establish every essential fact thereof; and this, notwithstanding a preponderance of the evidence appears to be with the ruling of the court. [Watterson v. Rogers, 21-529.]
4. LIABILITY OF CITY; Notice of Defect in Sidewalk; Diligence. To make a city liable for injuries resulting from a defect in a sidewalk, it must appear, either that the city had notice of the defect, or that it was a patent defect and had continued so long that notice might reasonably be inferred, or that the defect was one which with reasonable and proper care should have been ascertained and remedied. [Riggs v. City of Florence, 27-194; City of Salina v. Troesper, 27-545; City of Emporia v. Smidling, 33-485.]
5. LOT-OWNER, Non-liability for Injury. Where injury has resulted from a defect in the sidewalk by the city negligently permitted to continue, and for which the city is compelled to pay, there is no recourse over in favor of the city against the owner of the lot in front of which the defect existed, and no liability on the part of such owner to the party injured, arising from the mere fact of ownership.

6. ——— In Case of Negligence. Before the lot-owner can be held responsible, there must appear some negligence on his part, or he must have trespassed upon the sidewalk by obstruction upon the surface, or excavation beneath, and such negligence, obstruction or excavation caused the injury.
7. ——— Area, under Sidewalk; Presumptions. Where there is an area or open space in front of a building, and beneath the sidewalk, and a wall extending along in front of said area, upon which the sidewalk in part rests, it may be presumed, in the absence of testimony, that this area was for the benefit of the building, and for the purposes of air, light, approach, or storing, and that the same was constructed by the owner, or at his instance; but where it appears from the testimony that this area was not, and could not (without a change in the walls or approaches) be used for any purpose connected with the building, then this presumption ceases, and it must be shown that the work was done by the owner, or at his instance, before he can be held responsible for injuries received by falling through the walk into the area.
8. ——— Negligence of City. Where neither statute nor ordinance attempts to cast upon the lot-owner the duty of making or repairing sidewalks, and the only provisions thereon authorize the city to make or repair sidewalks, and collect the cost thereof from the lot-owner, held, that permitting a defect to remain in the sidewalk may be negligence on the part of the city, but is not on the part of the owner.

Error from Atchison District Court.

ACTION by Jansen, to recover damages for personal injuries. His petition alleged that in August 1873 while lawfully, and without any negligence on his part, walking along and over the sidewalk on Commercial street in the city of Atchison, said walk broke through, and precipitated plaintiff into an area under the walk, causing great and permanent injury to his person, etc. Other statements of his petition, the defenses set up by the defendants, and the material facts, sufficiently appear in the opinion, infra. Trial at the June Term 1874 of the district court. When the plaintiff rested, the defendants, the City of Atchison, and A. G. Otis, filed separate demurrers to the evidence. These demurrers were sustained by the court, the jury discharged, and judgment entered in favor of the defendants for costs. Jansen brings the case here on error.

Albert H. Horton, and H. C. Solomon, for plaintiff:

1. The city is liable not only for accidents occasioned by negligently constructing defective sidewalks on its streets, or by causing such defects in them after they are made, but also for negligently permitting such defects to continue. Laws of 1872, p. 208, §§ 54, 55; Laws of 1873, pp. 128 to 132, §§ 1, 2, 3, 4, 9; 9 Kas. 550; 11 Kas. 124, 127; 2 Dillon on Munic. Corp. 908 to 928, §§ 787 to 796; 40 Mo. 569; 45 Mo. 449; 35 Ill. 58; 30 Conn. 118; 4 Black, 418; 5 Kas. 311; 37 N. Y. 568; 22 Penn. St. 55, 384; 67 Penn. St. 355; 68 Penn. St. 404.

2. The owner of the house and premises, whose duty it was to keep a passage-way or sidewalk in repair, and who allowed it to become and remain in a dangerous condition, is also liable to a person who receives an injury from said neglect. 37 N. Y. 568; 23 Wend. 445; 2 Black, 418.

If defendant Otis, without special authority, made or continued a covered excavation on Commercial street, or on the sidewalk thereof, for a private purpose, he is responsible for all injuries resulting from the way being thereby less safe. 18 N. Y. 79; Dillon Munic. Corp. 925.

D. Martin, for the city of Atchison:

1. We contend, that the control and care which a city of the second class in this state exercises over the streets and sidewalks of the city, are by virtue of a power of a governmental character, and that it is not liable to the private action of an individual for neglecting to exercise such power, or for its imperfect execution, and therefore that the city cannot be liable in this action. We are aware that in one case this court has seemingly overlooked, and in another apparently discounted, this doctrine. In Topeka v. Tuttle, 5 Kas. 311, which was a case of neglect to repair a street, it would seem that the general question of municipal liability or immunity in such cases was not argued by counsel. It was contended that the petition was insufficient, but the court say, "Why it is not sufficient we are not informed." It is then intimated that the court think the petition sufficient. On the motion for rehearing, 5 Kas. 425, the argument seems to be wholly upon other questions. The case of Atchison v. King, 9 Kas. 550, was submitted on brief; and although the point was raised by the city, still there was but little argument further than a mere statement of the proposition and a citation of authorities. The court decides that the instruction asked by the city which raised the question, lacked one essential element, saying "if the city carelessly and negligently permitted the defect to exist, no matter how caused, after notice thereof to the city, or for so long a time that notice was presumable, then it became liable." The court does not discuss the point, nor refer to any authorities on either side. Now, inasmuch as no rule of property is involved, but only the construction of powers granted by statute, and liabilities incurred by reason thereof, we think the doctrine of stare decisis should not in this case outweigh reason, and that this court ought to examine the question fully on principle, and decide it in accordance with sound reason. (1 Kent's Com. 477.) We do not wish to be understood as undervaluing precedent. We claim indeed to stand on this question super antiquas vias. For the doctrine of common-law municipal responsibility to private individuals for damages caused by defective highways, we consider a modern heresy, now bolstered up it is true by a respectable array of authorities, but none the less a heresy on that account. From the time that the Romans are said to have established the four great highways through the length and breadth of Britannia, down to the present, we know of no British authority from which the doctrine of such responsibility can be legitimately drawn. And we might search in vain for such a doctrine in that system of jurisprudence which once ruled the civilized world, and the principles of which are even now so prevalent in Europe, some of them even being engrafted upon the common law. Yet the civil law was very careful of the persons and possessions of individuals, and even more rigorous than the common law for acts of negligence. The inhabitant of a house was responsible for all damages caused by throwing anything out of it by which one was injured, even though by a stranger in the absence of the proprietor; and was finable for hanging anything from the house into the street whereby one might be injured; yet the public could not be required to respond in damages to individuals on account of defective streets. (Domat's Civ. Law, part 1, book 2, title 8, §1.) These principles obtained also in France. Persons placing obstruction in streets or highways, or committing other trespasses therein, were subject to fine, and also liable to indemnify any person injured thereby; but it does not seem that the public ever assumed the burden of making pecuniary satisfaction for injuries to individuals. In England the public roads and streets were called in the old books via regia, and they are still designated as the king's highways. The reparation of these was one of the trinoda necessitas to which every man's estate was subject, the duty being placed side by side with the building of castles, and the repelling of invasions. (1 Bl. Com. 357, 262; 2 Bl. Com. 102.) The reparation of the king's highways was a public duty devolving upon the subject, just as the contribution to the erection of fortresses and serving in the king's armies in time of war were public duties. The subject was punishable for failure to perform these duties when legally called upon. In order to apportion the burden of repairing the highways it was found convenient to require the inhabitants of each parish to repair the highways within its limits, and the parish was indictable for failure to do so. The inhabitants were amenable to the king, just as they would be for failure to contribute to the erection of fortresses, or to take up arms against the hostile invader. But as the king could not be called to account by a subject for a failure to protect him against an invader, so neither the king nor the parish was liable to an individual for the non-repair of highways. The want of power in the courts to enforce any decree against the king, is not the only reason for his immunity from legal process. A remedy presupposes a wrong; but "the king can do no wrong." The Americanization of this axiom is this: Acts of the government are but emanations of the public will; and as this is the highest human authority recognized by republics, such acts are, according to the theory of our government, right, and must be so accepted by all people within its jurisdiction. In the performance of governmental duties, therefore, the sovereign power is not amenable to individuals.

---

Brief for the City.

---

---

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

---

Our road laws generally pursue the analogies furnished by the mother country. In this state, highways are laid out by legislative authority, and the sovereign power of eminent domain is freely exercised. The whole state, not excepting cities of the second class, is laid off into road districts, each having an overseer whose duties are prescribed by the laws of the state. Ample powers are conferred upon these overseers; and able-bodied male persons are required to work on the roads and streets, or pay a commutation fee, and a county tax may also be levied for road purposes. (Gen. Stat. 902, 906.) Our statute is very similar to 13 George III, c. 78. But we have no statute fixing a liability upon counties, townships or road districts, in favor of private individuals for injuries caused by defective highways, and we think it well settled that there is no common-law liability. 2 Term R. 667; 9 Mass. 247; 4 Cush. 810; 2 N. H. 392; 17 How. 161, 167; 17 Ill. 143; 3 Harrison, 108; 2 Vroom, 507; Cooley on Const. Lim. 247; Dillon on Munic. Corp., §§ 762, 785.

We think there is no foundation in reason for the distinction asserted in some late cases between cities clothed with authority to repair highways on the one hand, and counties and townships possessing like authority on the other, holding the former liable to such actions while the latter are not. It is somewhat surprising that a doctrine, asserted for the first time to be "common law" only thirty years ago, upon reasons which have been and must continue to be distinctly repudiated by our most enlightened jurists, should still be accepted as the undoubted law of the land. The courts of New York are responsible for the heresy. It is on their authority that all other similar decisions are based, whether in the federal or the state courts. And these New York authorities were so ably reviewed, and the fallacy of the doctrine and the inconsistency of the cases so thoroughly exposed in the brief of Hon. J. P. Whittemore in the case of Detroit v. Blakeby, 21 Mich. 87-100, that we desire to refer to that brief as a part of our brief in this case, making some additional observations. The first distinct enunciation of the rationale of the doctrine was made by Selden, J., in the case of Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 161. Referring to municipal charters, (page 171,) he says:

“But it is well known that such charters are never imposed upon municipal bodies, except at their urgent request. While they may be governmental measures in theory, they are in fact regarded as privileges of great value, and the franchises they confer are usually sought for with much earnestness before granted. The surrender by the government to the municipality of a portion of its sovereign power, if accepted by the latter, may with propriety be considered as affording ample consideration for an implied undertaking on the part of the corporation to perform with fidelity the duties which the charter imposes.” * * * “It follows from the preceding reasoning that if we regard the injury to the plaintiff as the result of mere neglect to keep the highways of the village in repair, the defendants would be responsible in this action for such neglect upon the ground that their acceptance of the franchise granted by their charter raised an implied undertaking or contract on their part to perform that duty, which, upon the principles referred to, inures to the benefit of every individual interested in such performance.”

The decision of the case was placed on other grounds; and yet these dicta of Justice Selden form the basis for all subsequent decisions holding municipal corporations liable in such cases for mere non-feasance. Mr. Justice Cooley quotes them as authority in his dissenting opinion in Detroit v. Blakeby, and lays them down as law in his valuable work on Constitutional Limitations, 247, 248; and their doctrine has even been countenanced by the supreme court of the United States. (1 Black, 39, 50.) Let us examine this reasoning. It is asserted that “such charters are never imposed upon municipal bodies except at their urgent request.” We do not know whether this general statement of fact was true or untrue in New York when Justice Selden wrote his opinion. Its truth or falsity is not apparent from the report of the case, and we presume it was not in the record. Neither do we think it such a matter of public history as the courts will take judicial notice of without proof. Justice Selden then says, that while municipal charters "may be governmental measures in theory, they are, in fact, regarded as privileges of great value, and the franchises they confer are usually sought for with much earnestness before they are granted." The foregoing remarks apply also to this assertion. But granting it to be true, we submit whether it is not an immaterial statement of fact. Are petitioners to the legislature affected differently from other citizens by the enactment of a statute embodying the recommendations set forth in their petition? Is even a member of the legislature who introduces a bill and secures its enactment, peculiarly bound by its provisions? We think these questions must be answered in the negative. These assertions of Justice Selden are made, apparently, as an inducement to the following legal propositions, viz.:

Brief for the City.

"The surrender by the government to the municipality of a portion of its sovereign power, if accepted by the latter may with propriety be considered as affording ample consideration for an implied undertaking on the part of the corporation to perform with fidelity the duties which the charter imposes." And the defendants, the trustees of the village of Brockport, would be responsible for neglect to keep the streets in repair "upon the ground that their acceptance of the franchise granted by their charter raised an implied undertaking or contract on their part to perform that duty, which inures to the benefit of every individual interested in such performance."

Now, granting for the sake of deference to the learned and able judge who wrote the opinion, that this language had some meaning in the state of New York when written, let us see if it has any force in Kansas. Is "the surrender by the government to the municipality of a portion of its sovereign power" a possibility in Kansas? We think not. (Const., Art. 12, §§ 1, 5.) The legislative power over cities is as plenary as it is over counties, townships and school districts. Each of these organizations is invested with certain powers which may be modified or entirely taken away at the will of the legislature, which surrenders nothing. The next step toward liability, according to Judge Selden's opinion, is, acceptance of the charter by the municipality. This is another impossibility here; for acceptance implies and presupposes the power to reject. And we know that a city having a population exceeding two thousand has no more right to reject the act to incorporate cities of the second class, than a county, township or school district has to reject the several laws enacted for its government. The next proposition in the opinion is, that such surrender, if accepted, "may with propriety be considered as affording ample compensation for an implied undertaking on the part of the corporation, to perform with fidelity the duties which the charter imposes," and the conclusion is then drawn that such surrender and such acceptance by the trustees, actually "raised an implied undertaking or contract on their part to perform" the duty of repairing the streets, which contract "inures to the benefit of every individual interested" in its performance. The opinion represents the state as farming out its sovereign powers for a consideration. And what is the consideration? If it be the "surrender," then such "surrender" is both the consideration and subject-matter of the contract. The state not being originally liable to individuals on account of injuries from defective streets, it had no immunity to gain by a "surrender" of its powers to subordinate organizations. Immunity from being called to account by the citizen or subject for the mode of exercising governmental functions, is one of the essential attributes of sovereignty. Unincorporated communities are exempt from liability to individuals for neglect to repair highways. But it is one of the queer results of the strange reasoning of Justice Selden, that if sovereign powers be imparted to such communities by the state, then such communities become ipso facto liable to account to every person in the world for the mode of exercising those powers, and if authority to repair highways be conferred, then such communities are bound, as by a covenant obligation, to a perfect execution of such authority.

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

---

In our state, the conferring of corporate powers upon communities cannot be regarded in the light of a contract between the municipality and the state, because—1st, There is but one party—the state; the municipality being the mere creature of the legislative act, which at once creates it a legal entity, confers its powers upon it, and fixes its liabilities. 2d, There is no consideration moving from the community to the state, nor from the state to the community, except the general welfare, which we must presume to be the motive for all legislation. 3d, The community does not assent to the act of the legislature, for it has no power to dissent from it. 4th, There is no subject-matter of contract. The legislature cannot, under our constitution, barter away its powers; and the communities have nothing which they can confer upon the legislature or the state government, except by the united action of all the people in the forms prescribed by the constitution. Indeed, the distinction between public and private corporations, in respect to the nature of their charters, was recognized in the Dartmouth College Case, and it may be considered as a well-settled principle of American jurisprudence, that public municipal charters are not to be regarded as contracts. (Dillon on Munic. Corp., § 30.) If then, such a charter is not a contract between the municipality and the state, how can it either be a contract or raise a contract, express or implied, between the municipality and every person in the world who may happen to travel upon its streets? It will not be contended that there is any such express contract. How is an implied one “raised?” An implied contract, as well as an express one, must have competent parties, a consideration, assent of the parties, and a subject-matter. The illustrations given by Sir William Blackstone show that all these requisites are necessary. (2 Bl. Com. 443.) Now, as between the individual and the municipality, what is the consideration? how and when is the assent given? and what is the subject-matter of the contract? We cannot imagine. When it is admitted that a charter is not a contract between the municipality and the state, the theory of an implied contract with the individual falls to the ground. The only English authorities quoted as sustaining the doctrine of municipal liability to individuals in such cases are based wholly upon the idea of a contract between the municipality and the crown. The Mayor of Lynn v. Turner, Cowp. 86; Henley v. The Mayor and Burgesses of Lyme Regis, 5 Bing. 91; S. C., 3 Barn. & Adolph. 77, and 1 Bing. N. C. 222. The mode of constituting our municipal corporations, and their powers, privileges and relations to the government, when constituted, are so dissimilar from those of England existing by royal grant, that adjudged cases as to the liabilities of such corporations in England are not of much value as precedents here. (Dillon on Munic. Corp., chapter 3; 36 N. H. 284.) The case of Lynn v. Turner, supra, in the King's Bench, was upon the pleadings. The action against the corporation was for not repairing and cleansing a certain creek into which the tide of the sea was accustomed to flow and reflow, as from time immemorial they had been used, whereby the sea was prevented from flowing therein, so that said creek was rendered unnavigable, and the plaintiff was obliged to carry his corn round about. It was urged by Mr. Baldwin for the corporation, that the declaration showed the locus in quo to be a navigable river, and therefore in the nature of a highway, common to all, and that no private action would lie. But Lord Mansfield said, "Ex facto oritur jus. How does it appear that this is a navigable river? The flowing and reflowing of the tide does not make it so; for there are many places into which the tide flows that are not navigable rivers; and the place in question may be a creek in their own private estate." Mr. Baldwin answered: "Then it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show a special reason or tenure why the corporation ought to repair, for they are not bound of common right"—citing authorities. Lord Mansfield did not dispute this proposition, but only rejoined: "It is here alleged that the corporation have from time immemorial been used to repair. It states, therefore, that they are bound by prescription, and it might be the very condition and terms of their creation or charter." The judgment was therefore affirmed. It will be observed that the court decided only two points: 1st, That it did not appear from the declaration that the creek was a navigable river or highway; that it might "be a creek in their own private estate." 2d, That an allegation of immemorial usage to repair, was equivalent to an averment that the corporation was bound by prescription to repair, which "might be the very condition and terms of their creation or charter."

---

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

---

---

Brief for the City.

In Henley v. Lyme Regis, supra, which was for damages to real estate on account of the non-repair of a certain pier and sea-wall, it appeared that the charter granted by Charles I not only pardoned, remised, and released to the mayor and burgesses, and their successors forever, 27 marks of the 32 marks anciently due, and gave them the proceeds of certain fines and amerciaments, but the king then granted "full power and authority and license from time to time, forever, to dig stones and rocks in any place whatsoever, within the borough and parish of the town aforesaid, out of the sea and on the sea shore, in the borough and parish aforesaid, adjoining to the said borough or town, for the reparation and amendment of the port and building aforesaid, called the pier, quay or cob, and other necessary reparations and common works of the same town and borough," and the king therein willed that the mayor and burgesses and their successors should at their own costs and charges thenceforth forever repair, support and maintain the same as often as it should be necessary. And the mayor and burgesses having accepted this charter, it was held that they were legally bound to make such repairs, and that an action might be maintained for a direct and particular damage sustained by an individual in consequence of neglect to make the necessary repairs. We can see no difficulty in calling this transaction a contract or covenant between the crown and the mayor and burgesses. The transaction was of the same nature as that between George III and the Trustees of Dartmouth College. There were competent parties, a consideration, a subject-matter, and assent of the parties. These constitute a contract. The only real point of difficulty in the case was, whether the contract so inured to the benefit of individuals that they might maintain their actions for special damages sustained by them.

We think it quite plain that Judge Selden's theory of municipal liability, in this country is not sustained by these cases, nor by reason. Judge Dillon very justly characterizes it as "purely ideal." (Dillon on Munic. Corp., § 765.) And thereupon Judge Dillon advocates a theory of his own which is certainly very indefinite and unsatisfactory, if not also "purely ideal." He says:

"This liability on the part of municipal corporations springs, as we think, from the particular nature of the duty enjoined, which must relate to the local or special interests of the municipality, and be imperative and not discretionary or judicial, and from the means given for its performance, which must be ample, or such as were considered to be so by the legislature."

What are the local or special interests referred to? Are not all the interests named in and regulated by the act incorporating cities of the second class, of some local and special importance to such cities? Let us refer to some of them: Such cities are "authorized and empowered to enact ordinances:" 1st, For opening and improving streets, avenues, and alleys, making sidewalks, and building bridges, culverts and sewers. (Laws 1873, p. 128.) These have a local and a general importance. Every person in the world is free to use the improvements, although persons living in the vicinity are chiefly benefited by them. 2d, For imposing a license tax on auctioneers, etc. (Laws 1872, p. 206, § 47.) This is more especially a "local and special" interest. 3d, For restraining and prohibiting riots, assaults, disturbances, indecent shows, and the discharge of firearms, etc. (Laws 1872, p. 207, § 50.) This is partly of local and partly of general interest. 4th, For regulating and prohibiting the running at large of cattle, hogs, etc. (Laws 1872, p. 207, § 51.) This might be termed a "local and special" interest. 5th, For procuring fire apparatus, organizing fire companies, etc. (Laws 1872, p. 208, § 58.) This might be termed a local interest. Other powers might be mentioned, but these are sufficient for illustration. Now which of these five classes of powers or duties are "imperative," and which "discretionary, or judicial?" They are each and all conferred apparently as legislative powers. They are nowhere referred to in the statute as duties. There is nothing to indicate that the first is more "imperative," or less "discretionary or judicial," than any of the other four. And it would seem that the power to repair sidewalks is not even therein expressly granted, but only impliedly conferred by the authority given to make sidewalks and to levy assessments for "making and repairing sidewalks." (Laws of 1878, p. 128.)

Brief for the City.

There is abundant authority for saying that in the absence of statute no action lies at the suit of an individual for the negligent or improper exercise of any of the four classes of powers last named. 8 Pet. 398, 409; Dillon on Munic. Corp., §755; 13 B. Mon. 559; 12 Ohio St. 375; 98 Mass. 221; 1 Allen, 172; 1 Sandf. 465; 11 N. Y. 396; 104 Mass. 87; 19 Ohio St. 19; 83 Wis. 314.

As to the power to make sidewalks, (one of the first class of powers,) this court has decided that its exercise is discretionary. 9 Kas. 155, 161; 11 Kas. 384, 392. By what process of reasoning is it determined, that while the language of the charter authorizing the city to make sidewalks and to levy assessments for making and repairing the same, confers a discretionary power to make, it imposes an imperative duty to repair? It certainly requires the exercise of judgment and discretion to determine when and how repairs should be made, or whether they should be made at all. This court has decided that after a city has constructed a sewer or drain for the purpose of carrying off surface-water, it may, in its discretion, wholly abandon or discontinue the same, and never make any further use of it. (9 Kas. 608.) Why may it not for a sufficient reason abandon a sidewalk? And who shall determine the sufficiency of the reason—the city council, or the courts? We are not aware that the courts have ever assumed jurisdiction of such affairs.

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

---

We have now examined the question of liability as arising from "the particular nature of the duty enjoined." But Judge Dillon thinks there is another element essential to liability. The means given for the performance of the duty "must be ample, or such as were considered to be so by the legislature." We know of no instance wherein the legislature has stated that it considered the means given ample to the exercise of any power, or the performance of any duty. How shall the point be determined? Is it a legislative, or a judicial question? Shall it be settled by the legislature, the city council, or the courts? If by the courts, then is it a question of law for the court, or a question of fact for the jury? A city of the second class cannot, under the present law, keep any fund on hand, nor incur any general indebtedness, for repairing sidewalks. It may, after notice in some cases and without notice in others, cause sidewalks to be repaired, and levy assessments upon the abutting lots to pay for the same. (Laws of 1873, p. 130.) But suppose no contractor will make the repairs and wait for his pay until the assessment can be collected: must the city appropriate money from other funds, or borrow it for the purpose? And in case the city have no surplus funds, and no credit, what then? We are not aware that the defenses suggested by these questions have ever been made in any court, but we submit whether they would not be good upon the theory of amplitude of means being an element necessary to liability. Such defenses would certainly be very troublesome. On the whole, Judge Dillon's theory of municipal liability in such cases seems to be "purely ideal," if indeed it does not resolve itself into the theory of Justice Selden.

There is still another theory of municipal liability in such cases, the only remaining one that has come to our notice. It was advanced by Nelson, C. J., in The Mayor, &c., of New York v. Furze, 3 Hill, 612. The doctrine is laid down, that the legislative grant to a municipality of power to do an act is equivalent to the injunction of a duty to perform it, and is based upon the rule of construction, which sometimes gives to the word "may" the force and effect of "must." This doctrine has since been repeatedly disapproved in such cases in New York. (1 Denio, 600; 32 N. Y. 489, 499.) The word "may" is not used in the grant of power to cities of the second class; the words are "authorized and empowered." And we have before seen that the authority to repair sidewalks is only impliedly granted. But even if the power to repair had been conferred by the use of the word "may," we think it would not affect the matter, for we know of no instance in which the rule of construction in question has been applied to legislative grants of power to any of the subdivisions of the state. If the grant of power is equivalent to the injunction of a duty, and the injunction of a duty binds the municipality as by a covenant to perform that duty, and if every individual interested in the performance of the duty may maintain an action for the breach of the covenant, then we have indeed by judicial construction made a contract between the municipality and every person in the world, and this only by a grant of legislative power! We think the distinction between the mere grant of power and the injunction of a duty to perform, is well taken, and is in consonance with sound reason. Cole v. Medina, 27 Barb. 218; Peck v. Batavia, 32 Barb. 634, 644. Those were stronger cases against the municipality than is the case at bar, and yet it was held that there could be no recovery. Upon the theory advanced in Mayor, &c., v. Furze, the municipality would be liable for negligent or imperfect execution of any of the powers enumerated in the five classes heretofore referred to, saying nothing of others granted or to be granted. We have now examined all the theories within our knowledge upon which the doctrine of a common-law liability in such cases has been said to rest. We do not regard any of these theories to be the "perfection of reason," and we cannot therefore accept any of them as law.

Brief for the City.

---

An effort is made in this case to charge the city with liability because the mayor and council enacted certain ordinances relating to the duties of the road overseer, the repairing of sidewalks, etc. We had supposed that if there was any liability on the part of the city it arose either upon the construction and interpretation of certain statutes of the state, or from some principle of the common law; but it is hard to treat with seriousness the notion that the rights or liabilities of the city are to be tried upon the basis of the general ordinances of the city. If the mayor and council can, by general legislation, charge the city with liabilities unknown to the common law or the statutes of the state, we see no good reason why they may not in like manner invest the city with rights before unknown. When legal processes shall bring about these results, we may expect such a revolution in the mechanical forces that a man may lift himself by his boot-straps. It is often difficult to find authorities directly in point on questions involving legal absurdities; but we think the following are sufficient in this instance: Vandyke v. City of Cincinnati, 1 Disney, 532; Dillon on Munic. Corp., § 251.

2. If in certain cases an action may be maintained against a city of the second class for injuries caused by neglect to repair sidewalks, we submit that this is not one of such cases. We think it safe to say from the plaintiff's own evidence, that neither he nor the city authorities knew of any defect in this area covering, rendering the same either dangerous or unsafe. If he had supposed so, ordinary prudence would have required him to use the rear entrance mentioned in his testimony. Besides he testifies substantially that there was nothing upon its surface indicating that it was defective, and that he supposed it safe. And the witnesses are all agreed on this point. His talk with the street commissioner could not therefore, have charged the city with notice that it was dangerous and unsafe. The utmost that could have been conveyed by that conversation was, that the boards were rather old, though not rotten, and the sidewalk somewhat rough. Although the plaintiff had been an occupant of the premises for eighteen months, he did not know that any of the sills or joists were defective, and yet it was the breaking or displacement of one of them that caused the accident. He did not know what broke, but two other witnesses did know. And their testimony on that point is corroborated.

Brief for the City.

It is a well-established principle that cities are not liable for defective streets or sidewalks unless they have actual notice of the defect that caused the injury, or unless the defect is of such a nature or has existed for so long a time that notice on its part must be presumed. Shear. & Redf. on Neg. §§ 148, 407; Dillon on Munic. Corp., § 790; 24 Wis. 549; 15 Mich. 307; 9 N. Y. 456; 86 Barb. 226; 5 Duer, 674. In the case at bar the defect was latent, and therefore actual notice must be brought home to the city, or it cannot in any event be made liable. The only circumstances even remotely tending to show notice to the city was the conversation between the plaintiff and the street commissioner. But as the plaintiff and all the other occupants of the house who were witnesses, testified that they considered the covering of the area safe, even up to the moment of the accident, we do not see how that conversation could have charged the city with notice that it was dangerous.

8. There is still another phase to this case. If the plaintiff is entitled to recover, should such recovery be against the city, or Mr. Otis, or both the city and Mr. Otis? The accident could not have occurred had not the basement-way been constructed under the street by Mr. Otis for his own benefit and the convenience of his tenants. It was his duty to see that the part of the street or sidewalk occupied by the basement-way or area was made and kept as safe as if such basement-way or area had not been built. This area and covering were constructed with reference to the building. The joists were supported in the masonry of the building and area. If either of the defendants is liable, we think it should be the landlord, for whose benefit the basement-way or area was made. Dillon on Munic. Corp., § 794; 2 Black, 418, 424; 4 Wall. 657; 18 N. Y. 79, 84; 9 Allen, 17; 28 Pick. 24, 32; 10 Gray, 496.

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

Aaron S. Everest, for defendant Otis:

It is admitted that Otis was the owner of the lot in front of which the defective sidewalk was constructed. But the undisputed evidence is, that the premises were demised and leased to Mrs. T. R. Jansen, step-mother of the plaintiff, and had been so leased to and occupied by her since the 1st of October 1870; that by the terms of said lease said tenant was to keep said premises in good repair during said lease at her own expense; that the plaintiff had full knowledge of the terms of said lease, and executed the same on the part of Mrs. Jansen, as her agent; that she received said demised premises in good order and condition; that said premises at the time of the injury were in her possession, occupancy and under her control. The evidence of the plaintiff shows that the premises were occupied for hotel purposes by Mrs. Jansen, and that he was clerking for her, and engaged in his business as such clerk waiting on a guest at said hotel at the time of the alleged injury; that the sidewalk was apparently safe at the place of the alleged injury; that said plaintiff was familiar with said premises, and had been clerking there, and in the occupation thereof since February 1872, and was the general business manager of Mrs. Jansen, and that he considered the covering of the area wall safe to travel upon.

1. Was there any legal liability, or bounden duty on the part of Otis, by reason of being the owner of the premises to repair, and maintain the sidewalks in question? And if by any contingency it can possibly be held that such was his duty, was it such without his first being notified by the proper city authorities to make such repairs? We contend that there is no liability or duty imposed upon the lot-owner by the statute in such cases. Ordinance No. 69, in force at the time of injury, did not contemplate any notice to the lot-owner, or impose any duty upon him whatever in reference to the construction and repair of sidewalks, but clearly, in connection with the other ordinances, imposed such duties upon the city, which duties were also imposed on it by the general laws incorporating cities of the second class. The city was empowered to make and repair sidewalks, and impose taxes therefor upon the abutting lot-owner. It was not a matter of discretion with the city authorities to exercise or not to exercise the corporate duties imposed by law. The language of the act, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory. Giving the city authority and power to act, was in effect requiring it to act. The power was given, not for the benefit of the city, but of the public; and the public interest, and individual rights, called for its exercise. 4 Wallace, 446; 61 Ill. 160; 42 Ill. 507; 17 Ill. 145; 25 Ill. 437; 16 N. Y. 159; 60 Barb. 378; 3 Hill, 612.

3. Was Otis in any way liable for said injury, when said premises were in the possession and under the entire control of said tenant, who received the same in good condition, and covenanted by the terms of the lease to keep the same in good condition and repair at the said tenant's expense? And is he liable to an employé of said tenant who used and occupied said premises, as the business manager of said tenant, having full knowledge of the terms and conditions of said lease? On this we say the law is well settled, that neither the tenant nor the plaintiff in her employ, could maintain an action against Otis, the landlord, for personal injuries sustained through the defective condition of the building or appurtenances thereto. 59 Barb. 497; 3 Oregon, 206; 17 Mo. 282; 109 Eng. Com. Law, 220. Otis certainly cannot be charged with negligence in failing to repair, when the defect was latent, unknown to the plaintiff, the occupier of the premises, and who certainly had better means of ascertaining and knowing its existence than Otis could possibly have.

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

4. Is Otis liable over to his codefendant, the city of Atchison? On this point we submit, that the settled rule of law is, that where the premises are leased out, as in this case, and not in the personal possession and occupation of the landlord, that such liability over does not and cannot exist against the landlord. Lowell v. Spalding, 4 Cushing, 277; 14 Gray, 249; 2 Sandf. 301; 12 Ohio St. 92; 9 Allen, 21.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: In September 1878, the plaintiff in error, George Jansen, commenced his action against the city of Atchison and A. G. Otis to recover damages in the sum of ten thousand dollars, by reason of personal injuries received by the plaintiff on August 10th 1878, through defects in a sidewalk of one of the public streets of the city of Atchison. Jansen alleged that said injuries were occasioned by defendants' negligently constructing a sidewalk on Commercial street, and by the said defendants negligently permitting the said defects in said sidewalk to continue; and also, from the defendants negligently permitting an old, defective and dangerous sidewalk to remain and exist. The plaintiff also stated in his petition that the defendant Otis was the owner and possessor of the lot and premises on said Commercial street, in front of which the said defective sidewalk existed at the date of the injuries complained of. The city of Atchison filed its answer, admitting that such city was a city of the second class, and a body corporate and politic, as stated in the petition, but denying the other allegations, statements and averments contained in said petition; and said answer alleged that the damages sustained by the plaintiff were caused by the negligence of the plaintiff and others, for whose carelessness and negligence the city of Atchison was not liable. Otis filed an answer, admitting the ownership of the lot, and alleging that the said premises were at the date of the alleged injury, and for several years prior thereto had been, demised and leased to plaintiff's mother, who, in connection with the plaintiff, at the time of the accident and for a long time prior thereto had been in the occupancy and use thereof as tenants of said Otis, having the personal care, supervision, and entire control of said premises, the buildings thereon, and the appurtenances thereto; that under and by the terms of said lease, said tenants were to keep said premises in good repair at said tenants' expense, and that they received said premises in good repair; and further averring that he (Otis) had no knowledge or information that said sidewalk was unsafe or insecure, and that it was the duty of his codefendant, the city of Atchison, under its corporate powers, to maintain said sidewalks, and that there existed no liability on his part to said plaintiff, and no liability over to said city of Atchison; and that said accident was caused by want of care on the part of the plaintiff, and by negligence and failure of duty on the part of the said city of Atchison. To these answers replies were duly filed, and the case came on for trial. No question was raised as to the joinder of the parties defendant. Indeed, such joinder seems to have been desired by all, that the one action might dispose of all questions growing out of the injury. After the plaintiff had introduced his testimony each defendant filed a demurrer to the evidence, which was sustained by the court, and judgment rendered in their favor and against the plaintiff for costs.

It is manifest that to sustain this ruling it must appear, either that there was absolutely no liability on the part of the defendants for the injuries sustained by plaintiff—for of the fact of his sustaining injuries there is no question—or, that there was a total failure of proof as to some matter essential to such liability. For if the defendants might under any circumstances be liable for such injuries, and there was testimony tending fairly to establish each fact essential to fix a liability, the party was entitled to a finding as to those facts by the jury, and could not be deprived thereof by an order of the court. The case stands in a different attitude before us from that it would occupy if the jury had passed upon the testimony. Then every conflict in the evidence would be resolved in favor of the result below; now against it.

Counsel for the city has filed an elaborate brief in support of the rulings of the district court, in which he contends—first, that the control and care which a city of the second class in this state exercises over the streets and sidewalks of the city, are by virtue of a power of a governmental character, and that it is not liable to the private action of an individual for neglecting to exercise such power, or for its imperfect execution, and therefore that the city cannot be liable in this action; second, that the facts of this particular case do not warrant a recovery in favor of the plaintiff; and third, that if the plaintiff is entitled to recover, such recovery should not be against the city, but against the defendant Otis. The first proposition is one very sweeping in its reach, and if true gives to cities an immunity from responsibility which to most would seem not only novel, but dangerous. To the support of that proposition counsel devotes the major portion of his brief. He reviews the reasons given by courts and writers for imputing liability to cities in cases of this nature, and claims that none of these reasons are sound, and concludes therefrom that a doctrine has become engrafted upon American law which has no foundation in correct legal principles, and should therefore be repudiated. He concedes that this court has hitherto seemed to follow the line of adverse decisions, but contends that as no rule of property is involved, but only the construction of powers and liabilities granted and fixed by statute, the doctrine of stare decisis should not outweigh reason, and that the question should be reëxamined and decided in accordance with correct principles. It may be well to see how far this question has been before this court, and the various rulings thereon. In the case of the City of Topeka v. Tuttle, 5 Kas. 311; the petition alleged that the city negligently left one of its streets out of repair, whereby the plaintiff suffered injury; and on an objection that the petition was insufficient, this court held that it was sufficient. True, no specific objection was pointed out, but the court decided that a petition stating such and such facts, and presenting the very question in issue here, was good. In the case of the City of Atchison v. King, 9 Kas. 550, the question was fairly presented, and the court held that a city was liable for injuries resulting from negligently-constructed sidewalks, and also from defects subsequently arising and negligently permitted to continue. The same doctrine was recognized in City of Ottawa v. Washabaugh, 11 Kas. 124. In the case of the City of Wyandotte v. White, 13 Kas. 191, a judgment against the city for injuries sustained through a defect in a bridge, a part of the public highway, negligently permitted to continue, was affirmed. In Smith v. City of Leavenworth, 15 Kas. 81, the city was held responsible for injuries resulting from negligence in leaving open and unprotected an area and cellar-way in the sidewalk. See also the case of the City of Leavenworth v. Casey, McCahon's Rep. 122, decided by the territorial supreme court, in which the city was held responsible for injuries resulting from a negligent construction of a sewer. And in these decisions the court was announcing no new doctrine, but following the almost uniform line of decisions elsewhere. In Dillon on Municipal Corporations, §789, the law is summed up in these words:

"It may be fairly deduced from the many cases upon the subject, referred to in the notes, that in the absence of an express statute imposing the duty and declaring the liability, municipal corporations proper, having the powers ordinarily conferred upon them respecting bridges, streets and sidewalks within their limits, owe to the public the duty to keep them in a safe condition for use in the usual mode by travelers, and are liable in a civil action for special injuries resulting from neglect to perform this duty."

Among the many cases supporting this proposition may be named, Weightman v. City of Washington, 1 Black, 39; West v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 161; Davenport v. Ruckman, 37 N. Y. 568; Norristown v. Moyer, 67 Penn. St. 355; R. & W. H. Township v. Moore, 68 Penn. St. 404. There are many others, but it is unnecessary to burden the records with citations. The supreme court of Michigan by a divided court has ruled the other way.

Detroit v. Blakeby, 21 Mich. 84. We do not care to follow counsel in his discussion of the reasons given by the various courts in support of this doctrine. It may be that those reasons are not altogether satisfactory. Perhaps if it was a new question, we should be compelled to hold them insufficient. But we find a doctrine generally recognized in the courts of other states, generally approved by eminent jurists, hitherto followed by this court, and as it seems to us eminently wise and just; and we are unwilling to abandon it because the reasons given for it may not be wholly satisfactory. We concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice Cooley in his dissenting opinion in Detroit v. Blakeby, from which we quote: "The decisions which are in point are numerous; they have been made in many different jurisdictions, and by many able jurists—and there has been a general concurrence in declaring the law to be in fact what we have already said in point of sound policy it ought to be. We are asked nevertheless to disregard these decisions, and to establish for this state a rule of law different from that which prevails elsewhere, and different from that which, I think, has been understood and accepted as sound law in this state prior to the present litigation. The reason pressed upon us for such a decision is, not that the decisions referred to are vicious in their results, but that the reasons assigned for them are insufficient, so that, logically, the courts ought to have come to a different conclusion. I doubt if it is a sufficient reason for overturning an established doctrine in the law, when its results are not mischievous, that strict logical reasoning should have led the courts to a different conclusion in the beginning. If it is, we may be called upon to examine the foundation of many rules of the common law which have always passed unquestioned." We adhere then to the rulings heretofore made in this court, as to the liability of a city for injuries resulting from negligence in the care of its sidewalks and streets.

We pass then to the second proposition of the learned counsel for the city; and here he contends that the defect in the sidewalk was a latent defect, and that the city had no notice of its existence or of facts sufficient to put it upon inquiry. If this be true, doubtless the city is not responsible, and if the testimony leaves no question as to its truth there was no error in sustaining the demurrer. This compels some notice of the testimony. The injury happened in this wise: Plaintiff stepped out of the door of a building upon the sidewalk, and as he stepped upon it, it gave way, and he fell through into an area beneath. There was testimony tending to show that this sidewalk was made of cottonwood, and had been built several years; that cottonwood in such a position is liable to decay in a less period than the time this walk had been there; that some of the joists underneath were decayed, and through their rottenness the walk gave way; that shortly before the injury an accident had happened on the walk in front of a near building, and that plaintiff had spoken to the street commissioner of the city about this walk, and requested him to repair it. It was by ordinance made the duty of the street commissioner "to thoroughly examine from time to time all walks, sidewalks, and to see that they are kept in good repair." Now it seems to us, that here was testimony which ought to have gone to the jury, and that the court erred in taking the question from them. We do not mean to intimate that a jury ought to find from this testimony that sufficient notice existed to charge negligence upon the city, but simply that here was a question of fact which it was for them, and not the court, to pass upon. And in order to guard against any misconception, we desire to emphasize the fact, that before the jury may find negligence they must be satisfied that the city had notice of the defect, or had knowledge of facts sufficient to put it upon inquiry long enough before the injury to have repaired the walk. Negligence implies some omission of duty. The city must have been in fault. And if it had no knowledge of any defect, or of any facts from which it might reasonably have presumed that there was a defect, it is not to blame, and cannot be said to have been guilty of negligence. On the other hand, though the rottenness of the stringers was not apparent, the circumstances might have been such that a man of ordinary prudence would have expected to find decay, and ought to have made examination. In R. & W. H. Township v. Moore, 68 Penn. St. 404, the defect was in a bridge whose timbers had decayed. The decay was not apparent to a mere outside inspection, but inasmuch as the timbers had stood for such a length of time under such surroundings as would ordinarily produce decay, the court properly held that a failure to make a critical examination was some evidence of negligence. See also, Weisenberg v. City of Appleton, 26 Wis. 56; City of Ripon v. Rittle, 30 Wis. 614; Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cases, 687. In this last case the House of Lords held, "that having the means of knowledge, and negligently remaining ignorant, is equivalent in creating a liability to actual knowledge."

As to the third proposition of counsel, it seems to us that the city is liable, whether it have a cause of action over against its codefendant, or not. The fee of the street is not in the lot-owner, but in the county. Comm'rs Franklin Co. v. Lathrop, 9 Kas. 453; A. & N. Rld. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kas. 552. <sup>s. Lot-owner; generally not liable.</sup> The control of the street is in the city. The lot-owner has no right to occupy the sidewalk with any improvement, nor to excavate beneath it for any area, or passage-way. (Smith v. City of Leavenworth, 15 Kas. 81.) If the city permits a lot-owner to occupy the sidewalk, or obstruct the free passage over it, or endanger its safety by excavations beneath it, it does not thereby relieve itself from responsibility. It is, as to third parties, the same as though it had done these things itself. In other words, it cannot transfer to private citizens that responsibility which, for wise purposes of public policy, the law casts upon it, in reference to the care and safety of its streets and walks. Was the demurrer of the defendant Otis properly sustained? We think it was. The only allegation in the petition pointing toward him was, that he was the owner of the lot and building in front of which the injury occurred. There was no allegation or intimation that the defect in the sidewalk resulted from any negligence or omission on his part. Negligence was charged upon the city, not upon him. So that, unless a lot-owner is responsible for all injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk in front of his lot, the petition stated no cause of action against him. Nor is there anything in the answer of the city of Atchison which discloses a cause of action against him. That simply admits that the city of Atchison is a city of the second class, denies all other allegations of the petition, and alleges that the injury complained of was caused by the negligence of plaintiff and others for whose negligence the city was not responsible. The answer of Otis does not make good the omissions of the other pleadings, nor state any facts tending to show a liability on his part. But passing beyond the pleadings, we do not think the testimony disclosed any liability on his part. It appears that the sidewalk, at the place of accident, was some twelve-and-a-half feet in width; that four or five feet from the building was an area wall. A part of the walk reaching from the curbstone

7. Area under sidewalk presumption.

Jansen v. City of Atchison.

---

to this wall rested on the ground. The balance on stringers let into the house on the one end, and resting at the other on the wall. This walk over the area was the part that broke. The area was partially filled with dirt, shavings, etc., and (according to the only testimony given thereon) was not and indeed could not be used for any purpose in connection with the building. It did not, according to the plaintiff himself, furnish air to the basement or cellar. Whether it furnished light or not, is not stated; and whether the front of the cellar or basement was walled or boarded up tight, does not appear. There is no testimony tending to show when this wall was built; by whom, or for what purpose. For aught that the testimony discloses, it may have been built there by the city to protect the dirt of the street from washing away, or as a support to the sidewalk, or for any other conceivable purpose. Now, ordinarily an area is supposed to be for the benefit of the adjoining building, for light, air, approach, or storing; and there may be a presumption that it was constructed by the owner, or at his instance, or for his benefit. But when, as in this case, the testimony shows that it was not for the benefit of the building, that it was not for air, approach, or storing, was not and could not be used for any purpose in connection with the building, it does away with any presumption that it was constructed by the owner, or that he is responsible for injuries resulting from it. He has not the fee of the street or sidewalk. He is not to be presumed to be trespassing upon the property of the public. The city has the possession and control of street and walk. Any work done above or below the surface, is presumptively done by it; and for any injury resulting from any obstruction or excavation, it is responsible; and it has a claim over against an individual only when it appears that such obstruction or excavation was made by the individual, or at his instance, or for his benefit. The liability of the individual is no greater because the injury took place on the sidewalk, than if it happened in the middle of the street, or from falling into a sewer rather than into an area. The only principle upon which the individual can be held responsible is, that the individual caused the injury — not that he owns a lot in front of which the injury was done. So far as the mere fact of a defect in the sidewalk is concerned, neither statute nor ordinance attempted to cast upon the lot-owner the duty of making or repairing sidewalks. An ordinance had been in force requiring lot-owners to keep the sidewalks in front of their lots in repair, but this had been repealed some two months prior to the injury. The only provisions in force authorized the city to make or repair, and to collect the cost thereof from the lots. There is, outside of positive law, no natural obligation on the part of a lot-owner to keep the street or sidewalk in front of his lot in good repair, and no liability for injuries resulting from a failure to do so. Hence, when a city has assumed the entire control of the matter, a failure to repair the sidewalk may be negligence on its part, but is not on the part of the lot-owner who has been ousted from all control. We think therefore, upon the testimony in this case, the demurrer of the defendant Otis was properly sustained. It is unnecessary to inquire what effect the fact that the step-mother of plaintiff, whose clerk and business manager he was, was the lessee of the building with a covenant in the lease to keep the premises in repair, would have upon the liability of Mr. Otis, if it appeared that he had constructed the area, or that it had been done at his instance or for his benefit.

The case therefore will be sent back with instructions to reverse the judgment in favor of the city, and grant a new trial; but the judgment in favor of defendant Otis will be affirmed. The costs in this court will be divided between the plaintiff in error and the city of Atchison.

Error from Dickinson District Court.

IN August 1860, W. J. Hobson gave to R. W. Ogden his due-bill for $559.12, with A. G. Hobson, as surety. In 1867 Ogden recovered judgments against said Hobsons on said due-bill, and executions thereon were returned "no property found." All the parties resided in Kentucky, and said judgments were recovered in the circuit court of Warren county in that state. A. G. Hobson, who then held the "Receiver's Receipts" showing the entry by him of some 800 acres of land lying in Dickinson county, Kansas, on the 23d of March 1870 assigned said "receipts" to his son Joseph V. Hobson, who also resided in Kentucky. In 1872 Ogden commenced a suit against said A. G. Hobson and W. J. Hobson in the district court of Dickinson county, on his Kentucky judgments, and sued out an order of attachment, which was levied upon 160 acres of the lands so as aforesaid transferred or conveyed to Joseph V. Hobson by his father. Said action was prosecuted to final judgment by Ogden, who recovered judgment therein for $953.70 and costs; and thereupon Ogden commenced this action against said A. G. and Joseph V. Hobson to set aside the assignment or conveyance of 23d March 1870, as to the 160 acres of land attached, and to subject said lands to the payment of his said judgment. The petition alleged that said conveyance was without consideration, and fraudulent as to Ogden. This action was tried at the March Term 1874. The district court found that said assignment or conveyance was without any consideration, and was made to defraud the creditors of said A. G. Hobson, and rendered a decree setting the said conveyance aside, and ordered and directed that unless the defendant A. G. Hobson pay to Ogden the amount of the judgment rendered in the former action, with interest and costs, within ten days, an order of sale be issued to the sheriff of Dickinson county commanding and requiring him to sell said attached lands, and out of the proceeds of such sale to pay the said judgment and costs. From this decree the Hobsons appeal and bring the case here on error. The errors and proceedings complained of are stated in the opinion. [After the action was tried in the court below, Ogden died, and his executors, W. V. and H. V. Loving, were substituted as plaintiffs, and the action here is against them as defendants in error.]

Case of Putnam, for plaintiffs in error:

1. After the trial commenced the plaintiff asked leave to amend his petition by inserting an averment that the debt was contracted prior to the conveyance. Objection was made on the ground that it changed the claim of the plaintiff. Objection overruled and excepted to. The plaintiff had not notified the defendants that they would be called on to rebut evidence of prior indebtedness, either to the plaintiff or other creditors. The amendment wholly changed the status of the case, and the court erred in allowing the amendment.

---

Hobson v. Ogden.

2. The evidence of the plaintiff below establishes the following facts only: That Atwood G. Hobson was the father of Joseph V. and W. J. Hobson; that they lived in Warren county, Kentucky; that the father was in debt, and unable to pay; that Joseph V. Hobson is a single man, about 23 to 25 years of age; that he has been government gauger in the provost marshal's office, and clerk in the post office; that he has been in the grocery and hardware business; is an active, sober, and industrious man, and has been for himself for the last eight or ten years; that he listed no property scarcely for taxation in Warren county, Kentucky; that if he had any property the witnesses did not know it, and they judge from the tax-list that he had none with which to purchase the land. This is the sum and substance of the evidence for Ogden, as contained in the depositions. The six certificates of land show that Atwood G. Hobson was the owner of them from October 1860 until March 23d 1870. He discloses in his answer in the action in the Warren county court that he was the owner of lands in other states, and as the court ruled him to disclose definitely where it was, there is no doubt he did so, or the plaintiff below would have shown his refusal. They were recorded on the 10th of November 1871, in Dickinson county, Kansas.

The evidence of the defendants below establishes these facts beyond question: first, that the trade for the land between Jos. V. Hobson and A. G. Hobson was made on the 9th of May 1869, and the price agreed on was $4,000; second, the amount of land was 794.28 acres; third, the value of the land was not to exceed $5 per acre, on the 9th of May 1869; fourth, that the agreement was, that Joseph V. Hobson should pay the $4,000 consideration by taking up, paying and canceling the indebtedness of Atwood G. Hobson, his father, to that amount; fifth, that he did so, and a trifle over. There is no witness in this case who has testified that the sale was not made, that the price was not paid, that the contract was not carried out to the letter by Joseph V. Hobson. The evidence, wherever the question of consideration is referred to, shows a good consideration, to-wit, the payment of the debts of A. G. Hobson. 8 Kas. 180; 9 Kas. 399.

N. C. McFarland, for defendants in error:

1. The amendment did not substantially change the plaintiff's claim. The indebtedness to the plaintiff must have accrued before the commencement of the action in which judgment was rendered in the Dickinson county district court at the April Term 1872. The amendment only makes the petition more specific by stating the time. It is such an amendment as the court might well allow after the trial, by conforming the pleadings to the evidence. Nor could the defendants be taken by surprise, for the court will observe that the plaintiff's evidence was in depositions, and must have been on file. The court had power to allow the amendment, and if the defendants were prejudiced thereby they should have asked a continuance.

2. The question then before this court is, whether it will reverse the finding of facts of the court below. The rule established by this court as to the weight of evidence necessary to overthrow such finding has been so often stated that no reference thereto is necessary. The record in this case is perhaps more remarkable for what it does not, than for what it does contain. Neither Atwood G. Hobson, the father, nor Joseph V. Hobson, the son, appears as a witness; and these are the only two persons who know absolutely whether the sale was fraudulent, and without consideration. But they call W. E. Hobson a son of A. G. H., and brother of J. V. H., who pretends to "know" that the sale was made in good faith, and that there was consideration paid, etc., all of which he must have learned from somebody, or, as he says, "These payments have been submitted to me by the parties and the credits mentioned by A. G. Hobson." He was not present when J. V. H. made any payments to his father's creditors. But he once carried a part payment to Dr. V., and does not personally know of any of the payments. Then another son and brother (Jonathan) tells what he has heard about the sale, and how the money was paid, etc.; and by these two witnesses it is mainly expected to be shown that this was a sale in good faith. The two Hobsons implicated state to two other Hobsons how matters stood, and then put them on the stand to tell what they (defendants) had told them. This gets the testimony in the depositions (not in court,) and avoids perjury. But it is all incompetent, as hearsay, and was objected to. The knowledge of the facts in respect to the payment for this land was in possession of defendants, and them only, and they ought to have produced the evidence by themselves, giving the facts. (23 Howard, 477.) When there are such suspicious circumstances as are shown conclusively in this case, the burden of proof is shifted, or at least it becomes necessary for the parties charged with the fraud to make satisfactory explanations. And this even when it is conceded that the consideration was ample, and paid. (6 Wallace, 299-315; 2 J. J. Marsh, 218.) What are the suspicious circumstances really not denied? A. G. Hobson, the father, was in failing circumstances and by repute insolvent for a number of years prior to the conveyance; he sold the land in controversy to his son, and so far as can be ascertained it was all the property he owned at the time. Various witnesses state the age of the son in 1873, when depositions were taken, at from 21 to 25 years, (and he was probably about 21 years old when the agreement to sell was made in 1869.) J. V. Hobson had not listed any property prior to this sale for taxation that could have included assets to pay for this land. The claim set up by the testimony of the brothers, that in 1861, (when about 12 years old,) Joseph V. H. was clerk in office of provost marshal, and made money—that in 1866, (when about 16 or 17 years of age,) he was a partner in grocery business, and a merchant, and that when he was 21 years old he had saved money enough to pay off $4,000 of his father's debts—is utterly absurd. But I claim that if he paid the money, (which is to me incredible,) he cannot be protected. If he had information sufficient to put him upon inquiry as to his father's insolvency, it is sufficient. (Pitney v. Leonard, 1 Paige Ch. 461.) Living with his father, the knowledge of his insolvency will be inferred. (Dunlap v. Hayes, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 476.) He is not a purchaser in good faith, who knows and assents to the design to defraud creditors, or who might have known by the exercise of ordinary diligence. (Garaby v. Bayley, 25 Tex. 294.)

Hobson v. Ogden.

---

Opinion of the Court.

There is no competent evidence in the record which shows the son ever paid anything on the pretended purchase. While these defendants have acted unwisely in attempting to perpetrate this fraud, yet it must be admitted they have acted wisely by not attempting to swear it through themselves.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action to set aside a conveyance of a tract of land, and to subject the land to the payment of the debts of the vendor. Three questions are presented. It is insisted that the court erred in permitting an amendment of the petition after the commencement of the trial. As the petition stood it alleged the conveyance in 1870, the recovery of a judgment against the vendor in 1872, and that the conveyance was fraudulent and with intent to hinder, delay and defraud the plaintiff. It did not allege when the plaintiff's claim accrued against the vendor, or even that it accrued before the conveyance. The court permitted an amendment to show that it accrued before 1868. This amendment was made before any testimony was received—was made upon the objection of defendants' counsel that the petition did not state a cause of action without such an allegation. No suggestion of surprise, or application for postponement, was made. Indeed, it is not possible that the party was surprised, for the petition in the action in which judgment was rendered, in the same court, alleged as its cause of action an indebtedness created in 1867. Therefore the claim of error is rested upon the simple proposition, that the court ought not at that time to have permitted such an amendment. We do not think the court abused its discretion in permitting the amendment; though we think as a general rule, and this does not seem an exception, that such amendments should be made upon terms. We cannot see that the defendants were materially injured by the amendment.

---

Hobson v. Ogden.

A second error is alleged in admitting a transcript of certain records of the circuit court of Warren county, Kentucky, the county in which all the parties resided. The principal part of this transcript consisted of verified answers of one of the defendants, the vendor of the land in controversy, filed in certain suits in that court, and were offered for the purpose of showing his financial condition which was stated by him in those answers. Of course, as admissions of one of the defendants, they were good against him. The remainder of the transcript, being an order of the court, and an opinion by its judge that a further disclosure was necessary, seem immaterial except perhaps as explaining the filing of an additional answer. We cannot see how either party was benefited or prejudiced by this portion of the transcript. If error to admit it, it was, because it was immaterial.

The principal error however alleged is, that the finding of the court is against the evidence. The court found that the conveyance was without consideration, and adjudged it void as against the plaintiff's claim. The vendor and purchaser were respectively father and son. All the parties, as we have seen, resided in Warren county, Kentucky. The father was and for several years had been embarrassed, and unable to pay his debts. The conveyance was of nearly 800 acres of land in Kansas, including the 160 acres in controversy. The contract therefor, as defendants claimed, was made May 9th 1869, and the conveyance, which was by assignment and transfer upon the land-office receiver's certificate, and not by separate deed, March 23d 1870. The consideration as testified to, for none is stated in the conveyance, was $4,000, and was paid by the son in paying certain debts of the father. The son was an unmarried man, of from 23 to 27 years of age, and at the time of this controversy was clerk in the post-office at Bowling Green. Prior to that he had been clerk in the provost marshal's office, whisky ganger, and for about a year

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

carried on a grocery store in company with his brother. Prior to the conveyance he had never been assessed a dollar, and subsequently only to the extent of a mule valued at $75, and a horse valued at $100. Neither vendor nor purchaser testified in the case, but two sons of the vendor (brothers of purchaser) testified to the terms of the contract, and to the performance by the purchaser, giving names and amount of the father's creditors whose debts were thus paid by the son. They also testified to the son's having money at different times, and they with other witnesses testified to the young man's industry, frugality, and correct habits. It does not appear that the purchaser ever came to Kansas to examine the lands before or after his purchase. Subsequently to the conveyance, the father came here, paid the taxes, filed the conveyance for record, made many inquiries concerning the land, and some statements concerning his intentions in reference to it, which appear to have been differently understood by those who heard them. This gives an outline of the testimony, and only an outline, for it comprises nearly two hundred pages of the record. The minor features of the case, the details of the testimony, it would be useless to attempt narrating. We have examined the entire testimony with care, and cannot say that the court erred in its conclusions. The silence of the parties to the transaction; the fact that the two principal witnesses for the defendants must necessarily have obtained much of their knowledge second hand; the conduct of the parties after the purchase in reference to the land; the successful and continued escape of the purchaser from the assessor; his employment, and apparent means of accumulation, during the years prior to the conveyance; the financial condition and embarrassment of the vendor, all tend strongly to support the conclusion of the court, that the conveyance was without consideration. At any rate, we do not see testimony in the record sufficient to justify us in reversing the judgment, and it will be affirmed.

PERRY PHILLIPS v. VICK REITZ.

1. FRAUDULENT SALES; Good Faith. To support a sale of personal property, where there is no change of possession, as against a creditor or subsequent purchaser, proof of good faith is as essential as proof of a sufficient consideration. [K. P. Rly. Co. v. Couse, 17-571.]
2. ——— Possession of Vendor. A continuance of possession by the vendor is evidence of a want of good faith, as well as of a want of sufficient consideration. It does not raise a presumption of law that the sale is fraudulent and void, but simply one of fact, which may be overcome by other testimony. Like the possession of recently-stolen property, it casts upon the party the duty of explaining the possession, and may, if unexplained, become conclusive evidence against the sale. [K. P. Rly. Co. v. Couse, 17-571.]
3. ——— Intent of Vendor; Knowledge of Vendee. Knowledge of facts sufficient to excite the suspicions of a prudent man, and put him upon inquiry, is, as a general proposition, equivalent to knowledge of the ultimate fact. [McDonald v. Gaunt, 80-693.]
4. ——— If a party knows of the fraudulent intent of a vendor, and buys with that knowledge, he is not a bona fide purchaser, for he is knowingly helping the vendor to accomplish the fraud and do the wrong. [Crapster v. Williams, 21-109.]

REPLEVIN, brought by Perry Phillips, for the undivided one-half interest in nine head of horses, one phaeton, two buggies, harnesses, etc. Phillips claimed to be the owner, and entitled to the possession of the property, and alleged that it had been wrongfully taken and was wrongfully retained by Vick Reitz. Reitz answered, that the property in question was the property of one I. N. Phillips, and not the property of plaintiff; that defendant was sheriff of Johnson county, and as such sheriff he had received and held a writ of execution to him duly issued and delivered, upon a judgment duly recovered in the Johnson county district court, by B. A. Feineman & Co. as plaintiffs against said I. N. Phillips as defendant, for $160.35 and costs, April 15th 1874; that by virtue of said writ of execution he (Reitz) as sheriff had levied upon said property as the property of said I. N. Phillips; that he found said property in the possession and under the control of said I. N. Phillips, and that he (the sheriff) had taken the same, and now held and retained the possession thereof as such sheriff, and by virtue of said writ of execution. Trial at the August Term 1874. The evidence showed that I. N. Phillips and one Thomas Muir had been partners, carrying on the livery business in the city of Olathe for a long time; that the horses, carriages, etc., levied on by sheriff Reitz had been owned by said Phillips & Muir, and used in their said business; that said I. N. Phillips, in March 1874, was largely indebted, and suits were pending against him; that his homestead, and all his real property except the undivided half of the livery-stable lot was mortgaged; that Perry Phillips, the plaintiff, was his brother; that Perry resided on a farm ten miles distant from Olathe; that on the 4th of April 1874 said I. N. Phillips and one McKeever went to the residence of the plaintiff, and there said I. N. Phillips sold his interest in the livery stable and stock to the plaintiff for $1,200, for which sum the plaintiff executed his promissory note, which was immediately indorsed to said McKeever as collateral security for the payment of the purchase-money of a farm sold by said McKeever to said I. N. Phillips, upon which farm McKeever held a mortgage given to secure said purchase-money; that the livery stock and property was all at Olathe at the time, and the plaintiff did not go to see or take possession of it; that I. N. Phillips and Muir continued the livery business as partners, but one witness for plaintiff had testified that plaintiff had employed him (the witness) to take charge of the stock and attend to the plaintiff's interests in the livery business. It also appeared that Feineman & Co. had recovered a judgment against I. N. Phillips, April 15th 1874, and an execution thereon had been issued, as alleged in Reitz's answer; that Reitz had levied said execution upon the property in controversy on the 20th of April; that thereupon I. N. P. dispatched a messenger for the plaintiff, who immediately came to Olathe, and then (after said levy) said I. N. P. went with the plaintiff to the livery stable, and undertook to make formal delivery of the property to the plaintiff, but they were notified by Muir that the sheriff had levied upon the property and had left it in his (Muir's) care, and that no delivery or change of possession could be made; that after said levy Muir and I. N. Phillips had a settlement between themselves, which included partnership accounts in the livery business down to the day of the settlement. It also appeared that Perry Phillips had obtained possession of the property, at the commencement of the action, and that at the time of the trial a part of the stock, and two of the carriages were in the possession of I. N. Phillips. The material part of the instructions is copied into the opinion, infra. The jury found for the defendant, and assessed the value of the property at $732.50. New trial refused, and judgment on the verdict in favor of defendant Reitz for a return of the property, etc. Phillips brings the case here on error.

John T. Burris, and John T. Little, for plaintiff:

1. The plaintiff contends that the evidence in this case proves clearly that there was an actual bona fide sale of the property in controversy, and that there was no fraud nor collusion on the part of plaintiff. He was a farmer, living some ten miles distant from his brother, and plaintiff knew nothing about his brother's condition. He bought the property in good faith, and gave his note therefor, which passed into innocent hands.

2. The jury were misled by the instructions given by the court in reference to a change of the possession. It was error to instruct the jury that if they found from the evidence that plaintiff had purchased the property for a fair price, and paid his money therefor, yet, if there was no change of possession at the time of the levy that this was evidence of fraud: 15 Cal. 503; 14 Cal. 384; 4 Kent's Com. 500. The evidence shows that long before the levy was made, plaintiff had taken possession and had employed hands to take charge of the stable and property. No removal of the property was necessary. It was such property as was not to be removed—a livery stable and stock. A delivery of the possession without a change of possession is sufficient: 5 Cal. 326; 14 Cal. 384; 19 Cal. 398; 25 Cal. 545. See also, 26 Cal. 316; 28 Cal. 13.

---

Opinion of the Court.

3. The court also erred in giving the instruction, that notwithstanding the vendee paid full value for the property, yet, if the circumstances which ought to have excited the suspicions of a prudent man, existed, (although the vendee knew nothing of the circumstances,) he is not a bona fide purchaser, and not entitled to protection as such.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action of replevin, and the question was as to the validity of a sale claimed to have been made by one L. N. Phillips to plaintiff. Defendant was sheriff of Johnson county, and under an execution against L. N. Phillips levied on the property. The property consisted of livery stock in the city of Olathe. Plaintiff was a farmer living some miles off in the country. The sale was made at the farm of plaintiff. He was not from the time of the sale to the time of the levy in Olathe, and L. N. Phillips remained in the actual charge, though, as was claimed, as the agent of plaintiff. The errors alleged are in the giving of instructions. The two propositions to which specific objections are made are—

1st, "The unexplained possession by the vendor, after the sale, is conclusive evidence of fraud."

2d, "The actual participation by the vendee in the vendor's fraudulent intent, is not necessary to avoid the sale. It is enough if he knew of such intent, or of facts sufficient to excite the suspicions of a prudent man, and put him on inquiry."

That good faith is as essential to support a sale like the one before us, as a sufficient consideration, will not be questioned. Twyne's Case, 8 Coke, 80; 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 42; Baldwin v. Peet, 22 Texas, 780; Chandler v. Van Roeder, 24 How. (U. S.) 224; Pullein v. Newberry's Adm'r, 41 Ala. 168. And that a continuance of possession is evidence of a want of good faith, as well as a want of sufficient consideration, is settled by the statute. Gen. Stat., p, 504, § 8. That possession may be retained, and still there be a valid sale, is also clear, and so in unmistakable language the court instructed the jury. And this instruction, as to the effect of an unexplained possession, must be considered in reference to and as qualified by the other instructions. There has been a vast amount of controversy as to the effect of a retained possession upon an alleged sale, when challenged by a creditor, or subsequent purchaser. It is all based upon the idea that possession follows title, and that where there is a transfer of title there should be a change of possession. In some courts it has been held, that a failure to change possession is so inconsistent with a transfer of title that it creates a presumption of law against the alleged sale. This presumption of law, no evidence of the good faith of the parties, and of the payment of full consideration, can overthrow. In others, such failure to change possession is merely evidence against a sale, which may be explained. The presumption is one of fact, and like all presumptions of fact open to explanation by other testimony. It is like the presumption of guilt which flows from the possession of recently-stolen property. It casts upon the possessor the duty of explanation. (See for a full discussion of this question and the authorities thereon, Twyne's Case, and notes thereon, in 1 Smith's Leading Cases, Hare & Wallace's notes, pp. 47, and following.) Our statute has accepted the latter construction, and provides in the section cited, that "Every sale * * * unaccompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, shall be deemed to be void, * * * until it is shown that such sale was made in good faith, and upon sufficient consideration." In other words, proof of actual good faith, and payment of sufficient consideration, does away with the presumption which flows from a retained possession—shows that such possession does not imply a retained title, or secret trust—in short, explains the possession. Until it is so explained, it is evidence against the sale; and unless so explained, it is conclusive evidence. To that extent, and only to that extent, do we understand the instructions

Phillips v. Reitz.

---

Opinion of the Court.

of the court, taken as a whole, to have gone; and in that is no error. (See upon this, Ayres v. Moore, 2 Stewart (Ala.) 336; Peck v. Laud, 2 Kelly (Georgia) 1; Flemming v. Townsend, 6 Georgia, 104; Beers v. Dawson, 8 Georgia, 557; Robinson's Ex'rs v. Robards, 15 Mo. 459.)

As to the second objection, the court distinctly charges that the vendee must be a party to the fraud to avoid the sale, and then, in another instruction, apparently in explanation of what was necessary to make him a party to the fraud, charged that it was enough if he knew of the vendor's fraudulent intent, or of facts sufficient to put him upon inquiry. Is this error? We think not. Knowledge of facts sufficient to excite the suspicions of a prudent man, and put him upon inquiry, is, as a general proposition, equivalent to knowledge of the ultimate fact. Garaby & Bayley, 25 Texas, (Suppt.) 294; Pitney v. Leonard, 1 Paige Ch. 461. And if the vendee knew of the fraudulent intent of the vendor, and bought with that knowledge, he can scarcely claim to be a bona fide purchaser, for he was knowingly helping the vendor to accomplish the fraud and do the wrong.

There appearing no error in these rulings, the judgment must be affirmed.

ACTION by Scoville, and two others, partners as Scoville & Smith, on a due-bill for $200 executed to them by Lane April 3d 1878, on which a payment of $100 was indorsed as having been made on the 16th of said April. Lane answered, and alleged that the due-bill was procured by fraud, and was without consideration. The opinion of the court was delivered by trial was had. Verdict and judgment were the for plaintiffs. Lane appealed. In the district court another jury trial was had, and the verdict was in favor of Lane. The district court sustained a motion for a new trial, and this is the ruling now presented for review. The district court overruled all the grounds for a new trial except one, misconduct of the jury. Upon this it granted a new trial. The misconduct was this: The foreman of the jury in the justice's court was a juror in the trial in the district court. He was called as a talesman, and on his voir dire testified that he knew nothing of the case, etc., and was not challenged. The plaintiffs and their attorney had forgotten that he had served on the trial in the justice's court, though they were present at that trial, and did not become aware of the fact until after the jury had been impaneled and the trial commenced. Before this juror was called one had been challenged because he had served on the trial below, and the transcript of the proceedings in the justice's court was passed to and examined by the plaintiff's counsel at that time. Upon this transcript appeared the name of the juror, for whose misconduct the new trial was granted, as foreman of the jury. The counsel doubtless overlooked this, and rested with the testimony of the juror on his voir dire.

Ought the ruling of the district court granting a new trial to be reversed? That the juror was incompetent, and that his service on the former jury was cause for principal challenge, is settled by the statute. Gen. Stat. p. 680, Code, § 270. On the other hand, it is clear that if the plaintiffs knew of his disqualification, and failed to challenge, they waived all objection: 2 Gra. & Wat. on New Trials, 467; Fox v. Hazleton, 10 Pick. 275; Barlow v. The State, 2 Blackford, 114; Glover v. Woolsey, Dudley, (Geo.) 85; Jeffries v. Randall, 14 Mass. 206; Booby v. The State, 4 Yerger, 111. But the point here is, that the plaintiffs were ignorant of the disqualification, having forgotten that the juror had served on the prior trial, then some ten months past, and that they resorted to the ordinary means of ascertaining his disqualification by examining him on his voir dire. In Barlow v. The State, supra, some of the grand jury who found the indictment were called and served as petit jurors. It was held that the objection was not good, on a motion for a new trial, although the defendant had forgotten the fact which disqualified when the jury was impaneled. The court says: "Here the defendant had once known that these men were on the grand jury. The statement of his not recollecting it, is insufficient. An affidavit to that effect could never be disproved." See also, State v. O'Drescoll, 2 Bay (S. C.) 153. In the case cited above from Dudley's Reports, the juror was security on the appeal bond, and though the party swore he was ignorant of the fact, it was held to be gross negligence not to be aware of it, and the objection to the juror was too late. In Jeffries v. Randall, supra, no inquiry was made of the juror on his voir dire, and the party was held to have waived any objection to him. In Rollins v. Ames, 2 New Hamp. 349, it appeared on the motion for a new trial that one counsel was at the time of impanneling the jury unapprised of the disqualification, but it did not appear whether the party or his other counsel were also ignorant, and the motion was overruled. In the case in 4 Yerger, 111, the affidavit of the juror, that he believed the party was not aware of his disqualification, was held insufficient to show the party's ignorance. On the other hand, Williams v. McGrade, 18 Minn. 82, where there were two trials, and a juror called and served on the second who had also served on the first trial, although the clerk's minutes showed the fact, yet, as nearly three years had elapsed between the two trials, and the juror on his voir dire disclaimed all knowledge of the case, the objection was held good on a motion for a new trial. In Rice v. The State, 16 Ind. 298, a grand juror was called as a petit juror. On his voir dire he swore that he had formed no opinion, etc. A motion for a new trial was sustained, and the court say: "Here the accused undertook to test the juror's freedom from bias, and being answered by the juror that he had formed no opinion on the case, he was not required to go further and ascertain whether he had been on the grand jury, or whether he was under any other disqualification." See also Herndon v. Bradshaw, 4 Bibb, (Ky.) 45.

Lane v. Scoville.

There is, it will be noticed, not entire harmony between the authorities.. It seems to us that these propositions, which find support in the latter authorities, are just and reasonable: Where a juror is called, and upon his voir dire testifies that he has no knowledge of the case, a party is ordinarily justified in resting on such testimony. Where there is no reason to suspect the juror who has thus testified, a party is, though there has been a former trial, under no obligations to examine the record of such trial to ascertain whether the juror did not serve upon such trial, nor is he ordinarily chargeable with gross negligence or laches in forgetting the fact of such service. Tried by these rules, the decision of the district court is correct, and must be sustained. We are aware, as counsel suggest, that, as the first jury found in favor of plaintiffs, suspicion might be aroused as to the actual forgetfulness of plaintiffs and their counsel; but the district court was satisfied of the truthfulness of their statements, and we have no right to question it. It seems from the affidavits that defendant's counsel was equally forgetful. We notice also that plaintiff's counsel had just examined the justice's transcript in reference to another juror. All that can be inferred from this is, that as to that juror the counsel had some suspicion, either from what the juror said or otherwise, that he had served upon the prior trial; not that he was bound to have the same suspicion, or make the same examination, as to each succeeding juror. The ruling of the district court was in favor of a new trial, and that, as often decided, is entitled to more consideration in this court than one refusing a new trial.

The order of the district court will be affirmed.

SCHOOL DISTRICT No. 10 v. W. H. COLLINS.

SCHOOL-DISTRICT ORDERS; Irregular Payment, held Good. On March 11 1874, a school-district order was drawn in favor of W. upon the treasurer of the district for $126, in payment of W.'s wages as teacher, and payable out of the teachers' fund belonging to the district. Prior to this time, but after the indebtedness to W. had nearly all accrued, he drew several orders upon the treasurer of the district as treasurer, for portions of this indebtedness, which orders were accepted and paid. These orders were to pay certain sums of money, and each contained the clause, "and this shall be your receipt to me for the same as teacher of school in said district." Upon the receipt of the school-district order, W. presented it to the treasurer and demanded payment. The treasurer tendered him the several individual orders above mentioned, and the balance in currency. W. refused to receive this, indorsed the school-district order to C., who received it with full knowledge of all the facts: held, that a judgment in favor of C. for the full amount of the school-district order was erroneous, and should be reversed.

Error from Washington District Court.

ACTION by Collins, as assignee of one C. W. Walker, to recover the amount of a school-district order issued to the latter in payment of teacher's wages by School District No. 10 of Washington County. The School District answered, setting up two defenses—first, a general denial; second, that said Walker, after his money was nearly all earned, and before the district order therefor was issued to him, had drawn his three several orders on the district treasurer—(these orders are fully described in the opinion, infra)—which orders were accepted by said treasurer, and by him paid out of the teachers' fund; that afterward said Walker presented to said treasurer said district order for payment, when said treasurer tendered him the three orders so drawn by Walker and paid by said treasurer, and the balance in lawful currency in payment of said school-district order, which Walker refused to accept; that afterward the plaintiff Collins, with full knowledge of all the facts, and well-knowing that said school-district order had been fully paid and satisfied, took the same from said Walker, but without paying anything therefor—wherefore, etc. To this second defense the plaintiff demurred; and the district court, at the August Term 1874, sustained the demurrer. The School District not wishing to answer over, the court gave judgment on said demurrer in favor of Collins for $180.15 and costs, and the School District brings the case here on error.

J. W. Rector, for plaintiff in error:

The court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the defendant's answer. Said district order was not a negotiable instrument. Such orders show on their face for what purpose, and by what authority they are issued, and thus carry notice to all holders, and they must ascertain, at their peril, what defenses exist against them. (Newel v. School District, Chicago Legal News, March 14th, 1874, page 198.) Hence there can be no such thing as an innocent purchaser or holder in good faith of such orders. But were it otherwise, still in this case Collins got said order after maturity, as Walker had demanded payment of it before assigning it to Collins, and it became due at the time of the demand, at the very latest. And even if said order were negotiable, and if Collins got it before due, still, said answer alleged that Collins took it with full notice, and without paying value. Therefore, in either event, Collins stood in the shoes of Walker, the original payee, and if Walker could not have compelled the district to pay said order to him a second time, then neither could Collins collect it. It is true, the money was paid on his private orders on the treasurer of the district, and not a regular order issued by the board; but after it had been thus paid at his request, and for his benefit, to pay his debts, he would not afterward be heard to deny that said payment was good in law and equity. Such a claim would be inequitable and fraudulent on its face, and he would be estopped from setting it up. Bigelow on Estoppel, 581; 5 Allen, 165; 97 Mass. 175.

Joseph G. Lowe, for defendant in error:

1. The second defense set forth in the answer of the school district constitutes no legal defense to plaintiff's cause of action. The treasurer shall pay over, on the order of the clerk, signed by the director, all moneys so received. (School Law, Gen. Stat. 923, § 38.) The duties of the treasurer are plainly prescribed by law. Any act of his unauthorized by the provisions of the statute is void. (6 Chicago Legal News, 198, March 14th 1874.) The payment by the treasurer of the order given by Walker to Barley & Young, Cullemore Bros., and Thomas Haak, was unauthorized, hence the payment did not amount to a payment by the district. It is but the individual payment of the treasurer of the private and individual orders of Walker, and did not liquidate the debt of the district upon the order regularly issued. It will be conceded that the treasurer exceeded his authority. Then, shall such violation of duty on the part of a public servant prejudice the claims of plaintiff below, who, acting upon the best authority in purchasing the order, found the same had not been paid, and that the district was liable on such order?

2. If it was error to sustain the demurrer to the second defense, such error did not prejudice the rights of the school district. (10 Kas. 128; 9 Kas. 620.) General denial raised every issue that could be raised by the special defense. If ordinarily the payment of the individual order by the treasurer would have been a defense, then as the record does not set forth the evidence the court cannot say whether there was error of the court below or not. The court should have a right first to correct its own errors. No notice for a new trial being made, no error appears.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action on a school-district order. The defense was payment. The facts are these: On March 11th 1874, a school-district order was drawn by the director and clerk of said school district upon its treasurer, and payable to C. W. Walker, or order, out of the teachers' fund, for $126, for teaching school. In February 1874, Walker drew upon the said treasurer in payment of certain indebtedness three several orders, amounting to $125.93, which, on the 10th of March, were accepted by the treasurer, and on or before the 16th paid by him out of the teachers' fund belonging to the district. This was one of the orders:

WASHINGTON, WASHINGTON COUNTY, KAS.,
February 18th, 1874.

Treasurer of District No. 10: Please pay to the order of Cullemore & Brothers twenty dollars, and this shall be your receipt to me for the same as teacher of school in said district.

C. W. WALKER.

The other orders were similar. On the 16th of March, Walker, then the owner and holder of the school-district order, presented the same to the treasurer, who tendered him the three orders so accepted and paid as aforesaid, and seven cents in currency, the same making the full amount of the school-district order, but Walker refused to receive this payment, and thereafter indorsed the order to plaintiff Collins, who received the same with full knowledge of all the facts.

Was the district liable? Of course, Collins has no higher rights than Walker; and any defense good against the latter is good against the former. And we think the facts make out a defense as against either. Of course, the district cannot avail itself of any private transactions between the treasurer and the teacher, or offset a debt due from the latter to the former against its own indebtedness. But on the other hand, if Walker has received out of the funds of the district payment of its indebtedness to him, no matter how irregularly it has been received, he is estopped from denying it to be payment. Supposing he had stolen so much money from the funds of the district in the hands of its treasurer: could not the district set off the amount thus stolen against his claim? So, if in any way without crime he has received out of the same funds any moneys, such receipt is to that extent payment of its debt. In the case before us, after the indebtedness had nearly all accrued he draws an order, not upon any individual as such, and without naming any individual, but upon the treasurer of the district, the custodian of the funds of that corporation which is in debt to him, and specifies in the order that it shall be a receipt to him for the debt due by the district. This order is accepted and paid. Grant that it was done irregularly, and that the treasurer should have waited until the official evidence of the district's indebtedness was presented; but as it was done, and Walker received the benefit of it, he at least is estopped from saying that it was not regularly done. He cannot say that it was a mere private transaction between himself and the individual who happened to be at the time treasurer of the district, for the order which he drew shows the contrary. He has received his pay once, and neither law nor good conscience will tolerate that he recover it again.

School District v. Collins.

It is scarcely necessary to say that after a question has been once fairly presented and decided on a demurrer, it is unnecessary, if it were proper, to raise it again by the offer of testimony.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the second defense, and for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

All the Justices concurring.

MELVIN R. ROSS V. COMM'RS OF CRAWFORD COUNTY.

1. CORRECTING ASSESSMENTS; *Compulsory Proceedings before County Clerk. In proceedings to correct an assessment under §§ 65, 66 and 67 of the tax law of 1868, the clerk is required to file in his office a statement of the facts or the evidence upon which he makes the correction. Where he filed a statement of the evidence, and the order is supported by the evidence, although he voluntarily and without any demand adds to his statement of the evidence something in the nature of a finding of facts, it is not a ground for setting aside his order that this finding of facts is not sufficiently precise and complete of itself alone to sustain the order. [See end of opinion.]
2. TRIAL BY JURY, *When Not a Matter of Right. That in proceedings which are merely proceedings to correct assessments there is no provision for a trial by jury, does not render them void, or make them in conflict with § 5 of the Bill of Rights which provides that "the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate." PROCEEDINGS to discover taxable property which the owner refused to list. The record of such proceedings is as follows:

COUNTY CLERK'S OFFICE, GIRARD, July 18th, 1874.

On this 18th of July personally appeared before me at my office in Girard, Crawford county, R. E. Carlton, township trustee, and informed me that one Melvin R. Ross of Baker township in said county of Crawford, did not list the true amount of his personal property, and that he believes that he has about fifty hogs, whereas he the said Ross only listed three; also, he believes he has a large amount of money, notes and mortgages that he has not given in to him the said Carlton as assessor of said township of Baker. Said Carlton also named certain citizens of said township as competent witnesses to prove said allegations and information. Thereupon, I, as county clerk aforesaid, set Monday July 27th 1874 as the hour for hearing the testimony in regard to the matter, and gave the said Melvin R. Ross due notice as required by the statute.

Monday, July 27th, 1874: Parties appeared pursuant to notice, Melvin R. Ross in his own proper person, as well as by his counsel, Daniel Scott, Esq. The county was represented by J. T. Bridgens, for the county attorney. * * * * The following witnesses were duly sworn and examined, on behalf of the county: R. E. Carlton, A. Adams, E. R. Clark, Wm. Callwell, E. Stillwell, John Harrison, Thomas Bates. P. F. Holden, J. Cheney, and Jesse Timmerman; and on behalf of said Ross, the following—M. Schultz and E. Keeler. After hearing the testimony of the witnesses, and arguments of counsel, I do find the information as alleged to be true, and do further find that said Melvin R. Ross had in his possession on the 1st day of March 1874, which he refused to list to the said R. E. Carlton, assessor of said township of Baker, the following personal property, to-wit: 8 horses, 27 hogs, 4 head of cattle; notes, $1,000; notes secured by mortgage, $1,210.

It is therefore considered by me, that said personal property above described should and of right be assessed against him the said Melvin R. Ross, and that he pay the costs and expenses of this examination taxed at $77.15. [Then follows an itemized statement of the costs.]

J. H. WATERMAN, County Clerk.

The transcript also contains "a synopsis of evidence taken down [on said examination] by Geo. W. Tipton, appointed for the purpose of writing down the testimony in the case of Melvin R. Ross." Ross, feeling aggrieved by the order and decision of the county clerk, removed said proceedings and decision to the district court by petition in error, where the action was docketed as "Melvin R. Ross, plaintiff in error against The Board of County Commissioners of Crawford County, defendant in error." Said petition in error was heard at the January Term 1875 of the district court, and said court affirmed the decision and order of the county clerk. Ross now brings the case here on error.

R. E. Burns, and Blair & Hill, for plaintiff in error:

This case originated under §§ 65, 66 and 67, of the tax law, and plaintiff submits the following legal propositions to this court for its consideration and opinion: 1st, Are the findings in this case supported by evidence? 2d, Are the findings supported by law? 3d, Is the act conferring judicial powers on the county clerk not in conflict with §§ 1 and 11 of article 3 of the constitution? 4th, Is not the whole act in conflict with § 5 of the bill of rights?

---

Brief of Plaintiff in Error.

1. The court finds that Ross had in his possession on the 1st day of March 1874, which he refused to list, certain personal property. This finding calls for an examination of the evidence, which the clerk returns as the evidence upon which he based his finding; and as the law requires him to preserve the evidence, his findings must stand or fall upon that evidence. Now, as to the horses, hogs, and cattle, all the witnesses testify that they know merely from hearsay, and from seeing the property on the premises of Ross. Ross admits that part of this property was on his place, but that it belonged to others, and there is nothing to show but that the proper parties listed that property, nor that the county ever lost one cent, and certainly nothing with which to support the findings. As to the $1,000 in notes: Where is there any evidence to support the theory that those notes, or any part of them, had any value whatever? Certainly none. Then, if they had no value, or if they were not good, certainly Ross was not compelled to pay taxes on them. As to the $1,210 secured by mortgage: Take first, the Runnick mortgage. Mr. Ross and Mr. Stillwell are the only two persons testifying on the subject, and neither testifies that Ross had that mortgage on the first day of March, consequently we suppose there will be no dispute among legal gentlemen on that point. The next is the Richards mortgage, and the sum total of Richards' evidence is, that he gave to Ross a mortgage previous to the 1st of March 1874, for the sum of $260, but he don't state one fact to support his conclusion that Ross held or owned that mortgage on March 1st. The next is the Wallace mortgage, for $1,000, and the evidence clearly shows that $700 of that was paid long before March 1st, leaving a balance of $300. The next and last is what is known as the Pearce mortgage; and this, we contend, was not taxable property in the hands of Ross. The evidence is clear and explicit, without contradiction, that Ross held no property in that mortgage, but that he only took said mortgage as the agent of a third person.

Ross v. Comm'rs of Crawford Co.

Again, where is the evidence showing what property, or how much was given in by Ross to the assessor? The list as made out and delivered to the assessor should have been introduced by the county, in order that the clerk should have taken official notice of the actual amount of property. No court can say that Ross did or did not list all of his money, notes and mortgages. 6 Kas. 408.

2. Is the finding sustained by law? The county clerk has failed to find the only facts which the law required him to find, viz.: 1st, the value of the property; 2d, that the property was in Crawford county on the first day of March; 3d, that the property belonged to Melvin R. Ross; 4th, that Ross willfully and fraudulently failed to list said property, in order to compel him to pay costs. But what kind of mortgages were these? If they were mortgages on personal property, he could properly deduct from his indebtedness. This court cannot tell but what these mortgages were chattel mortgages; and if so, if he owed an amount sufficient to cover them, they would not be taxable.

3. What does the constitution mean when it says, "All judicial officers shall be appointed by the governor?" Is this a judicial proceeding? What is the nature of this proceeding, if not judicial? Does not the tax act confer upon the county clerk all the duties and powers of a court? If so, is it not clearly in conflict with §§1 and 11 of art. 3 of the constitution?

4. In all cases in which at common law a jury trial was allowed, the same so remains, provided that no tribunal had jurisdiction of some especial offense or matter before the adoption of the constitution. (Bill of Rights, §§5, 10.) Is this one of those cases in which a jury trial was allowed at common law? Now, while it may be a case unknown to common law,

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

we find a safe criterion for a guide. A jury trial is allowed and guarantied by the constitution in all cases quasi criminal in their nature, depending upon a plea of not guilty for an issue. And this case does not come within the rule laid down in New York, viz., in cases where the tribunal trying the cause has not the power to call a jury, if there is an appeal to a court having a jury the act will not be deemed unconstitutional. As the act of the legislature is special, and must be followed, the clerk has no power to call a jury, nor to grant an appeal. Nor is this case within the rule laid down by some other states, viz., that when the act was special, and granted to a special tribunal, before the adoption of the constitution, the act will not be declared unconstitutional. This is an act found the first time in the statutes of Kentucky, and in that state the supreme court held the act unconstitutional. It is not found in the statutes of any other state or territory, so far as we have been able to investigate. The presumption of the law is that Ross did his duty. He listed his property, and swore to the listing. Now the issue is, that he wrongfully refused to list all his taxable property; and in this case we apprehend that he is entitled to a jury trial. The State v. Allen, 5 Kas. 218; Work v. The State, 2 Ohio St. 296; Green v. Briggs, 1 Curtis, 311; Carson v. Commonwealth, 1 A. K. Marsh. 290; Hughs v. Hughs, 4 Monroe, 48; 2 McCord, 55; 1 Howard, (Miss.) 102.

D. S. McIntosh, and Daniel Scott, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The proceedings in this case were had under §§65, 66 and 67 of the Tax Law, (Gen. Stat., page 1041.) Ross was cited to appear before the county clerk for failing to return all his personal property for assessment. He appeared, an inquiry was had, testimony heard, and the county clerk found that he had omitted from his return considerable property, and ordered that it be corrected. The case was taken on error to the district court, which affirmed the decision of the county clerk, and it comes to us on error from the district court.

Ross v. Comm'rs of Crawford Co.

Several objections are made to the record. It is claimed that the evidence does not support the findings of the clerk. It is unnecessary to say more than that after examining the evidence, we are satisfied that there is enough to support both the findings and the order made by the clerk. Again, it is said that the findings do not support the order. The findings are —

“That the information as alleged is true, and that Melvin Ross had in his possession, on the 1st day of March 1874, which he refused to list to the said R. E. Carlton, assessor of said township of Baker, the following personal property, to-wit: three horses, twenty-seven hogs, four head of cattle, notes $1,000, and notes secured by mortgage $1,210.”

The objections are, that he failed to find, “First, the value of the property; second, that the property was in Crawford county on the first day of March; third, that the property belonged to Melvin R. Ross; fourth, that Ross willfully and fraudulently failed to list said property—in order to compel him to pay costs.” The order made by the county clerk was as follows:

“It is therefore considered by me, that said personal property above described should and of right be assessed against him, the said Melvin R. Ross, and that he pay the costs and expenses of this examination.”

The record stops with this order, and shows no further proceedings. Whether the county clerk himself valued this property, or referred the matter back to the assessor, and indeed whether the personal assessment of Mr. Ross has actually been raised a single dollar, are matters not appearing in this record. Perhaps if raised at all, it was only raised to the amount of the notes, whose face is prima facie their value. At any rate, until we are informed as to the actual increase in the amount of the assessment, we cannot say that there was error in failing to place a value upon any specific property.

In reference to the site and ownership of this property, it may be said that we may not expect the same precision in these proceedings as in those of courts, at least those of superior jurisdiction. The information given to the clerk was that Mr. Ross “did not list the true amount of his personal property.” He finds this information to be true. Now what is fairly implied by this information—that he had failed to list all his personal property? or, that he had failed to list all that he ought to have listed—the true amount subject to assessment? This last seems a reasonable construction; and when the clerk finds the information to be true, he finds that Ross failed to list all his property subject to assessment, and then specifies the omitted property.

---

Opinion of the Court.

In reference to the costs, the statute provides that if the party makes “a false statement of the amount of property for taxation, to evade the payment of taxes,” he shall pay all the costs and expenses of these proceedings. Where there is no intention to evade the payment of taxes the county pays the costs; (§ 66.) The county clerk charges the costs upon Ross. He finds that he “refused” to list this property. Such a refusal, it is true, may be consistent with an honest belief that the property was not taxable, and may not have been made with the intention of evading the payment of taxes. But there is no finding that the omission was from mistake, or an honest error of judgment; and a man is presumed to intend that which is the natural and necessary result of his actions. But again and chiefly, in these proceedings separate and distinct findings of fact are not essential, certainly not when none are demanded. The order is evidence of what the clerk found to be the facts. He may and must, it is true, file in his office a statement of the facts, or the evidence, on which he has made the correction; but it may be either the facts, or the evidence. Here he filed a statement of the evidence, and also of the facts he found therefrom. But as the latter was unnecessary, there is no error if it be incomplete. We can regard simply the evidence and the order. And when he charges the costs against Ross, it is equivalent to or rather implies a finding that Ross made an untrue return to evade the payment of taxes.

Again, it is said that the conferring of judicial powers upon the county clerk is in conflict with §§ 1 and 11 of article 3 of the constitution. The point in the counsel’s mind seems to be, that as a vacancy in a judicial office is, according to the constitution, to be filled by appointment of the governor, while a vacancy in the county clerk's office is according to the statute filled by appointment of the county board, that therefore the county clerk is not a judicial officer, and no judicial functions can be committed to him. If it were conceded that these sections confer judicial powers upon the county clerk, that thereby he becomes pro tanto the judge of a court, and holds a judicial office, and that the constitution requires that all vacancies in judicial offices shall be filled by appointment of the governor, and that such provision applies to such an officer, the result, it seems to us, would be, that the statute providing for appointment by the county board would be void as conflicting with the constitution, and not that the grant of powers would be null because the constitutional method of filling vacancies was ignored in the statute. So that, if all be as counsel seem to claim, the result would not be as contended for. We do not wish however to be understood as deciding that the premises are as claimed.

Ross v. Comm'rs of Crawford Co.

Finally, it is insisted that these provisions of the statute are void, because there is no allowance for a trial by jury. We do not understand that the right of trial by jury, as preserved in the state constitution, entitles a party to a jury except in such cases and proceedings as prior to the constitution gave a right to a jury. As to all matters which prior to constitution were disposed of by summary proceedings, the legislature may make similar provision to-day. As to proceedings which (like the one before us) are simply proceedings in assessment, and not to enforce in any way a penalty, either by fine or by double or treble tax, no right to a jury existed prior to the constitution. It would be strange indeed if the state had not the right in a speedy and summary way to complete its assessments; and that is all these proceedings contemplate. (See ante, p. 411, and citations.)

We see no error in the record, and the judgment must be affirmed.

THOMAS MOODY V. CLARA ARTHUR, et al.

1. FINDINGS AND VERDICT; Evidence not Preserved. Unless it clearly appears that all the testimony given on the trial is preserved in the record, this court cannot set aside the verdict of a jury or the finding of a court on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence.
2. ——— Where the record reads that "the plaintiff, to maintain the issues on his part, offered testimony as follows, to-wit," then gives certain testimony, and adds, "Here the plaintiff rests," shows the same as to defendant's testimony, but omits such statements as to testimony in reply, of which the record contains some, and contains no affirmative statement that all the testimony is preserved in the record, and no other matter or statement tending to show such to be the fact, held, that it does not appear that all the testimony on the trial is in the record and before us for consideration. [A. & N. R. R. Co. v. Wagner, 19-335.]
3. PLEADING; PETITION; Objection as to Sufficiency. An objection to a pleading, that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, presented for the first time in this court, is good only when there is a total failure to allege some matter essential to the relief sought, and is not good when the allegations are simply indefinite, or statements of legal conclusion. [Brenner v. Weaver, 1-488; McBride v. Hartwell, 2-411; Hale v. Johnson, 6-137; Greer v. Adams, 6-203; Laihe v. McDonald, 7-254; Moore v. Wade, 8-380; Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11-625; Polster v. Rucker, ante, 115; Nickliss v. Holman, 17-22.]
4. ——— General Averments, When Sufficient. Where a party, in attempting to allege a valid preëmption of a tract of land in this state, alleges that the land was, at a specified date, open to preëmption, that he was a citizen of the United States, a resident of Kansas, and entitled to a preëmption right to said tract; that he did, at the given date, in strict conformity to the acts of Congress thereon, preëempt said lands at the proper land office, make full payment therefor, and receive a certificate of purchase duly executed by the proper officers; Held, That these allegations were sufficient to show a legal preëmption as against an objection (raised for the first time in this court,) that it was not stated that the party was the head of a family, an inhabitant of the tract, or had in person made a settlement and erected a dwelling house thereon prior to the time the land was applied for.
5. ——— Statement Showing Title held in Trust. Where after allegations of a valid purchase, as indicated in the above paragraph, the pleading also alleges that of all said facts the opposite party had full knowledge, and that more than a year thereafter in some manner and by some means to him unknown such opposite party obtained a certificate of purchase and a patent for said tract, and that his so doing was a violation of the laws of the United States and of the rights already vested in the first party, held, that the pleading (as against any objection raised for the first time in this court,) contained a sufficient showing of a full equitable title in the one party, and a naked legal title wrongfully obtained by the other, and held by him in trust for the first party.

6. PRACTICE; General Findings. Where there has been no demand for special findings, and the court finds generally that all the allegations of the pleadings of one party are true, such general finding will support a decree in favor of that party, although the general finding is followed by certain special findings which of themselves alone may not be sufficient to support the decree.
7. ACTION TO QUIET TITLE; Possession; Improvements. In a case involving the quieting of a title, and where no judgment for the possession is entered, no question can be raised as to improvements under the occupying-claimant act.

ACTION brought by Moody to quiet his title to the W.½ of N.W.¼ of section 31, township 12, range 24 east, in Johnson county. He claimed said land by virtue of a patent issued August 1st 1860, to one Daniel Wisely, and through mesne conveyances from the heirs of said Wisely and others to himself. His action was against Clara Arthur, James M. Arthur, and Fisher Hamilton, heirs of Susan Arthur, deceased, and he alleged that said defendants claimed title to said premises adverse to the rights and title of the plaintiff. The defendants answered and filed a cross-bill, claiming therein the equitable title to said land by virtue of a preëmption certificate, issued by the register of the land-office at Lecompton, Kansas Territory, on the 27th of April 1858, to one Thomas Taylor, and by a deed to said Taylor and wife to Susan Arthur, the ancestor of defendants, which deed is dated October 14th 1858, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county April 5th 1864. Trial as the November Term 1873 of the district court. Finding and judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff brings the case here on error.

Brief of Plaintiff.

Holmes & Dean, for plaintiff:

1. It is a presumption of law, that the patent to Wisely passed the whole title to the land in controversy. The patent itself is prima facie evidence that all the incipient steps had been regularly taken, authorizing the issuing of the same. 9 Cranch, 87; 3 Peters, 820; 6 Peters, 828; 13 Peters, 436; 19 Mich. 56. And before the defendants will be permitted to call in question the proceedings through which the patent issued to Wisely, they must allege in their cross-bill that Taylor possessed all the qualifications, and complied with all the conditions which the law prescribes authorizing him to preempt. This they have failed to do. 40 Cal. 373; 24 Cal. 630; 27 Cal. 483. The cross-bill should affirmatively show that Taylor had a right to preëempt the land in question. It should appear therein, (1st,) that he was the head of a family, or a single man over the age of twenty-one years; (2d,) a citizen of the United States, or that he had filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen according to law; (3d,) that he was an inhabitant on the tract sought to be entered, (4th,) upon which in person he had made a settlement and erected a dwelling-house since the first of June 1840, and prior to the time when the land was applied for—the Indian title having been extinguished and the land surveyed. The bill alleges only that said Taylor was a citizen of the United States and a resident of the territory of Kansas, and failed, as we think, to state any cause of action in their cross-bill, and the same is wholly insufficient.

2. Defendants' cross-bill professes to be a proceeding in equity, but there is nothing alleged therein entitling them to the relief asked for, much less showing themselves worthy of it by their evidence. If they rely on fraud or imposition, they must specifically plead it, setting out the facts which constitute the fraud or imposition. Again, if they rely upon a trust, the facts which constitute the trust must be pleaded. Unless some question of fraud, imposition, or trust intervenes, a state court will not take cognizance of the case. 40 Cal. 166, 273; 54 Ill. 48; 45 Miss. 106; 19 Wallace, 646. The defendants allege that "in violation of the laws of the United States," and "in violation of the rights of said Taylor," and those claiming under him, Wisely obtained his patent. These are mere conclusions of law. It does not appear that it was by any act of fraud on the part of Wisely that Taylor was prevented from getting a patent to the land in question. 12 Minn. 236; 19 Mich. 56. The allegation that Wisely's patent was issued without the knowledge or consent of Taylor, or those claiming under him, avails nothing. In cases arising under conflicting entries of government land, the doctrine of notice is not recognized. 37 Ill. 32; 26 Iowa, 493; 16 Ark. 440; 7 Minn. 450.

Moody v. Arthur.

3. We admit that this court rightfully regards with great disfavor questions raised before it for the first time as to the sufficiency of the petition, or cross-bill. But we take it for granted, where a party has procured a judgment or decree in his favor, when he shows by his own declaration to be entitled to none whatever, or when he obtains a judgment or decree which is manifestly wrong and unjust, that this court will not affirm it simply because no proper objection was made to it in the inferior court. In the case at bar, after the lapse of many years from the issuing of a patent, and the property therein described had been greatly improved in value, these defendants come into court and seek to attack it without pretending to show that they or those under whom they claim were injured by any fraudulent act on the part of the patentee, or that the patentee was guilty of any fraud whatever, or that any privity existed between him and Wisely, or that Taylor had ever performed the obligations and requirements of a law whose benefits he invokes. 8 Kas. 380, 390.

4. It may be fairly assumed that the record purports to contain all the evidence. The recitals in the record are equivalent to a statement that certain evidence, which is set out in full, was offered and received, and that the parties introduced no more, but ceased at that point. If this be true, then the record contains no evidence to prove that Taylor possessed the qualifications or performed the conditions entitling him to preëempt; that any fraud or imposition was practiced by Wisely on Taylor; that any privity existed between Wisely and Taylor which authorized the court to find that the former was the trustee in equity for the latter; that the plaintiff purchased with a notice of the claims of Taylor and those succeeding to his rights to the land in suit. On the contrary, it appears that, long before he purchased, Taylor's certificate had been canceled; that he paid value for the land, had taken possession of the same, and had made valuable improvements thereon. And the court erred in allowing defendants, after they had rested, and plaintiff had closed in chief and in rebuttal, to introduce Taylor to show that he had no notice of the cancellation of his certificate.

Devenney & Green, for defendants:

1. The "case made" does not contain all the testimony—a great portion being omitted—hence, this court will not review the facts. Nor does the record purport to contain all the evidence. It is well settled, this is fatal to a request to review the facts. It is also well settled, that the court below having sat as a jury, he being the judge of the facts and his finding being general, and there being some evidence to support the finding, this court ought not review the facts.

2. The plaintiff cannot now for the first time and in a reviewing court, raise the question, whether defendant's answer or cross-bill contains facts sufficient to constitute a defense or for affirmative relief, as against the cause of action stated in plaintiff's petition. 10 Kas. 266; 11 Kas. 617.

3. Where a person has acquired the legal title to that which another has a better right, a court of equity will convert him into a trustee of the true owner, and compel him to convey the legal title. This doctrine is applicable to a second preëemptor who has obtained a patent over the first preëemptor without legal authority on the part of the ministerial officers of the general government. 4 Wall. 232; 2 Black, 554; 6 Wall. 418; 16 Mo. 543; 14 Kas. 259. The "certificate of purchase" issued to Taylor, gave to him a "vested right" in and to the lands, and is prima facie evidence that he held the first and paramount equity to the land. 31 Cal. 264; Macklot v. Dubroil, 9 Mo. 473; 36 Iowa, 207. It was not necessary for defendants to allege or prove fraud in Wisely in order to recover on their cross-bill, as they could stand alone on the fact of Taylor's purchase. 7 Ala. 594; 28 Ill. 528; 7 Sm. & Marshall, 694; 10 Ohio St. 93; 2 Wallace, 535; 9 Iowa, 586. But we did prove it, without objection, and we are entitled to the benefit of it, as though we had pleaded it. 57 N. Y. 274.

Moody v. Arthur.

If it appear on the face of the patent, or from the evidence, that the patent was issued in a case not authorized by law, the patent is inoperative and void, and may be assailed collaterally. 38 Cal. 80; 12 Ill. 317, 334.

The plaintiff endeavors to rebut our equities by showing attempts of the land officers to cancel Taylor's entry or "certificate of purchase;" and it may be inferred from certain letters (read in evidence by plaintiff, over objections of defendants,) that there had been a contest in the Lecompton land-office, between Taylor and Wisely, but, if any such attempts were made or proceedings had thereto, the "case made" discloses that they were purely ex parte. No notice to Taylor—no day in court—no opportunity to appeal from any decision that those officers might make in the premises. A judicial decree would not be binding on Taylor in such case—it would be an absolute nullity; and so, for a much stronger reason, is the decision of a mere ministerial officer.

Taylor had power to sell and convey, although he had not received a patent; and a sale and conveyance to a bona fide purchaser by one holding a "certificate of purchase," is protected by the very words of the preëmption law. 1 Brightly Digest, 474, § 86; 2 Minn. 168; 6 Kan. 112, 122; 33 Iowa, 374; 12 Kas. 284; 13 Wall. 296.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action to quiet title. Plaintiff alleged title and possession, and that defendants claimed title.

Opinion of the Court.

Defendants in their answer, and by way of cross-bill, alleged title in themselves, that plaintiff claimed title, but that such title was without foundation, and prayed that their title might be quieted. A decree was entered in favor of the defendants. To reverse this decree plaintiff comes to this court.

There are two principal questions before us on the record. Does the answer state a cause of action in favor of the defendants, and against the plaintiff? Do the facts as found, sustain the decree? We do not think the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings is presented by the record, for the reason that it does not appear that all the evidence is preserved. There is no affirmative statement that the record contains all the evidence. Perhaps that is not always necessary. Following certain testimony offered by the plaintiff, is the statement, "Plaintiff then rested." A similar statement follows testimony offered by the defendants. Then comes testimony of plaintiff, given in answer to the testimony of defendants in support of their cause of action, followed by a like statement. After this appears testimony of defendants in reply, but without any similar closing statement. Each party's statement opens with a statement that he "offered testimony as follows, to-wit." Now, whatever might be the legitimate inference, if the defendants' reply-testimony had been followed by a statement that, "here the defendants rested," or any statement clearly showing that at such point the introduction of testimony ceased, without any such statement it is clear that there is nothing upon which to found an assertion that all the testimony is given. Much other testimony might have been given, making clear and plain the very matters which plaintiff's counsel say are not proved, and still not a statement in the record be untrue in letter or spirit. We pass therefore to the first question.

1. Where record does not contain all the evidence.

Does the answer of defendants state a cause of action in their favor and against the plaintiff? : And here it may be remarked, that no objection to the sufficiency of the answer was raised in the court below. The parties tried the case as though defendants had stated a good cause of action against plaintiff. In this court, for the first time, is any question made as to its sufficiency. In such a case the objection is good only when there is a total failure to allege some matter essential to the relief sought, and is not good when the allegations are simply incomplete, indefinite, or statements of conclusions of law: Laithe v. McDonald, 7 Kas. 254; Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kas. 617. Turning to the pleadings, we find that the answer alleges, in that defense which is in the nature of a cross-bill, or counterclaim, that on April 27th 1858, and for a long time prior thereto, the land in controversy was a part of the public lands and open <sup>4. General averments, when sufficient.</sup> to settlement and preëmption at the land-office at Lecompton; that Thomas Taylor was a citizen of the United States, a resident of Kansas Territory, and entitled to a preëmption-right to said lands; that he did upon that day, in strict conformity to the acts of congress thereon, preëempt said lands at said land-office, pay the full amount ($210) therefor, and receive a certificate of purchase, entry, and preëmption, duly signed and executed by the proper officers, of all of which facts Daniel Wisely, his heirs, grantees, and the plaintiff, had due and legal notice; that said Taylor's title, by certain conveyances, describing them, is vested in defendants; that after such preëmption and purchase, and on June 20th 1859, Daniel Wisely, by some means and in some manner unknown to the said Taylor, or to these defendants, and without the assent, knowledge, consent or notice of his so doing, obtained a pretended certificate of preëmption or purchase from said land-office, and afterward, and on August 1st 1860, a patent for said lands; that the issue and delivery of said certificate and patent to said Wisely were in violation of the laws of the United States, in violation of the rights of said Thomas Taylor, and these defendants, and void as against them, and by said certificate and patent no valid legal or equitable title was conveyed to said Wisely, and that said Wisely's claim had passed to the plaintiff. This was followed by a prayer for a decree quieting title and for possession of the lands. Upon this answer counsel for plaintiff claim, that "The cross-bill should affirmatively show that Taylor had a right to preëempt the land in question. It should appear therein, (1st,) that he was the head of a family, or a single man over the age of twenty-one years, (2d,) a citizen of the United States, or that he had filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen according to law, (3d,) that he was an inhabitant on the tract sought to be entered, (4th,) upon which in person he had made a settlement and erected a dwelling-house since the first of June 1840, and prior to the time when the land was applied for—the Indian title having been extinguished, and the land surveyed." Perhaps all these matters are essential to give a right to preëempt; and if objection had been raised at the proper time, perhaps the court would have been compelled to sustain it. But it is alleged that he was entitled to a preëemption-right to said lands, and that he did preëempt them in strict conformity to the requirements of the acts of congress thereon. Now, this as a general allegation includes and covers all those specific statements; and if parties are content to try their case upon such general allegation, they waive all objection to it.

Again, it is claimed by counsel that the allegations of the answer show no fraud, imposition, or trust, and that unless some of these appear, a state court will not take cognizance of the case; that the allegations are, that the issue of & Allegations showing title held in trust. the certificate and patent were in violation of the laws of the United States, and the rights of Taylor—without showing how or in what respect they were so in violation. To this it may be replied, that the allegations show a valid preëemption and purchase by Taylor, that of all this Wisely had full knowledge, that more than a year thereafter in some manner and by some means to the defendant unknown Wisely obtained a certificate of purchase and patent, and that his so doing was a violation of the laws of the United States and the rights of Taylor and his grantees. Does not this disclose a trust? Does it not show a complete equitable title in Taylor, and that Wisely by some illegal means had acquired the legal title?

Moody v. Arthur.

Is not the legal title then held in trust for the equitable? It is true, the precise steps by which this legal title was acquired, are not shown, and the pleading could have been more full and specific; but still the fact is alleged, that it was acquired after the vesting of a complete equitable title in Taylor, and by some illegal means. This is now sufficient. It shows the equity in one person, the legal title in another, obtained illegally, and with full knowledge of the equity. In Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wallace, 419, it is said to be the well-settled doctrine, "that where one party has acquired the legal title to property to which another has a better right, a court of equity will convert him into a trustee of the true owner, and compel him to convey the legal title." See also, Garland v. Wynn, 20 How. (U. S.) 6; Hughes v. U. S., 11 How. 568, and 4 Wall. 282; Lindsey v. Hawes, 2 Black, 554. These are all cases of contested titles; and in the last three cases a prior certificate prevailed over a subsequent patent. Counsel contends, that "it is a presumption of law that the patent to Wisely passed the whole title to the land in controversy. The patent itself is prima facie evidence that all the incipient steps had been regularly taken, authorizing the issuing of the same." This doubtless is correct; and it is a proposition equally correct when applied to the preëmption certificate to Taylor. That is prima facie evidence that all prior steps had been regularly taken, and that Taylor had acquired the full equitable title. The prima facie evidence of either may be overthrown by other testimony; but in the absence of any other testimony the title which is prior in time is the stronger in right. In Carroll v. Safford, 3 How. 441, the court uses this plain language, quoted in the case of Stone v. Young, 5 Kas. 282: "So far as the rights of the purchaser are concerned, they are protected under the patent-certificate as fully as under the patent. Suppose the officers of the government had sold a tract of land, received the purchase-money, and issued a patent-certificate: can it be contended that they could sell it again, and convey a good title? They could no more do this than they could sell land a second time which had been previously patented." It seems to us therefore, that as against any objection that can now be raised the answer must be held sufficient to sustain a decree for affirmative relief.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

This really disposes of the case, for in respect to the second question, it may be said that no special findings of fact were demanded, and that while the court does find specially certain facts, it prefaces them with a general finding that, "the allegations, all and singular, contained in the answer of the said defendants are true"—so that, whether the facts specially mentioned in the findings are of themselves sufficient to support the decree, is practically immaterial, the court having covered all with a general finding.

So far as the matter of improvements is concerned, that cannot be inquired into in this case. No judgment for possession was rendered, but only a decree quieting title. Whenever in an action of ejectment judgment is rendered for possession, the question of improvements under the occupying-claimant act will properly come up for decision.

The judgment will be affirmed.

It is understood that the case of the same plaintiff against Alexander Brown is similar, and the same judgment will there be entered.

THIS action was commenced in the district court January 2d 1875. The petition, after the caption and title, was as follows:

"Center township, in the county of Wilson, and state of Kansas, plaintiff, states that it is a municipal corporation, duly organized under the laws of the state of Kansas, and complains of the Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of Kansas, Alexander Hunt, treasurer of Wilson county, John Francis, treasurer of the state of Kansas, and O. V. Small, defendants, for that, whereas, heretofore, to-wit, on the 20th of March 1873, at the county of Wilson aforesaid fifty-six citizens, the same being electors and tax-payers of Center township in said county of Wilson, presented to the trustee, clerk and treasurer of said township a petition asking and praying that a special election be ordered in said township for the purpose of voting on a proposition to donate the sum of $50,000 to the Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Company to aid said Railroad Company in the construction of a proposed line of railroad from the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston railroad at or near Thayer to the city of Fredonia, in said Center township, upon certain conditions therein named; whereupon the trustee, clerk and treasurer of said Center township, after considering said petition ordered that an election be held in said Center township at the usual place of voting therein on the 7th of April 1873, and that due and legal notice of the same be given for the purpose of voting upon the following proposition, viz.:” [Here is set forth the proposition in full, followed by a statement that the election was held, the votes canvassed, showing 108 votes “for the donation and bonds,” and “30 votes against the donation and bonds.” After which the petition proceeds:] “Afterward, to-wit, on the 8th of April 1873, the trustee, clerk and treasurer of the said township of Center, on behalf of said township, in pursuance of the election aforesaid, made and entered into the following contract with the said Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Co., viz.:” [Here follows the contract, after which is the following:] “And afterward, to-wit, on the — day of — 1873, the said township of Center by its trustee and clerk executed and issued its said bonds, with coupons attached, in the sum of $50,000 as follows, viz.: fifty bonds, with coupons attached, for the sum of $1,000 each, numbered consecutively from 1 to 50, which said bonds are in words and figures as follows:” [Copy set forth, showing the bonds to be payable in 30 years, with interest at 7 per cent., payable semi-annually on the 1st day of July and January. And then the petition alleges:] “And afterward, on the — day of — 1873, the said fifty bonds of $1,000 each, with the coupons attached as aforesaid, were delivered to the treasurer of the state of Kansas to be held by him in escrow, and delivered to the said Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Company on the conditions aforesaid. And plaintiff shows and alleges, that said railroad company, in pursuance of said contract before mentioned, proceeded and did grade said portion of said line of railroad to the said city of Fredonia, together with the stonework and masonry thereof as before mentioned; that afterward, on the 5th of September 1873, the said treasurer of the state of Kansas delivered to said railroad company $28,000 in bonds, part and parcel of said $50,000 in bonds delivered to him by the said Center township as aforesaid, and the remaining $22,000 in bonds, part and parcel of said $50,000 in bonds as aforesaid, are still and now are held by the said treasurer of the state of Kansas, who refuses and fails to cancel and deliver the same to said Center township, although due demand therefor has been made by the said Center township. Plaintiff further says that a full and complete record of all and singular the things heretofore stated and alleged are now, and at all times have been, in the office of the clerk of said Center township.

“Plaintiff further says, that a large proportion of said bonds have been by the said Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Company sold and delivered to various parties who are unknown to the plaintiff, and that a portion of said bonds are now held by the said Railroad Company, and that a portion of said bonds are now owned and held by the defendant O. V. Small; and that the said Alexander Hunt, treasurer of Wilson county, owns and holds a portion of said bonds issued as aforesaid.

“Plaintiff further says, that the said Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Company, after having done the grading and masonry as aforesaid, have wholly abandoned the building of said railroad, and have wholly failed and neglected and refused, and still doth refuse, fail and neglect to complete said railroad, or any part thereof, according to the contract, as before set out, and have not nor will they construct and equip said railroad or any part thereof, or build and maintain the passenger and freight depots as agreed to in said contract before mentioned; that what work was done by said railroad company, to-wit, the grading and masonry, is poorly constructed, and so negligently and carelessly done as to render it of no value whatever; that the consideration, and the sole consideration for the issue and delivery of said bonds aforesaid was that the said railroad company construct and equip the said line of railroad as aforesaid, and erect and maintain good passenger and freight depots within the corporate limits of the said city of Fredonia, in said Center township, all of which the said railroad company hath wholly failed and refused to do or attempt to do according to the terms of said contract, within the time or within a reasonable time thereafter, and that the work already done, without the completion of said railroad, is of no value whatever to the said plaintiff, or any other person or persons.

“Plaintiff further complaining, says, that on the — day of — 1874, William Edminster, W. H. Morgan and P. S. Booth, the commissioners of said Wilson county, levied a tax of one and forty-five hundredths per cent. upon the taxable property of the said Center township, and caused the same to be placed upon the tax-rolls of said Wilson county, for the purpose of paying interest now due and to come due on the coupons attached upon said bonds issued to the said Memphis & Northwestern Railroad Company as aforesaid; that said tax so levied as aforesaid and placed upon the tax-rolls as aforesaid, is without authority of law, and is irregular, illegal and void. Plaintiff further says that the assessed value of the taxable property of said Center township, at the time said donation aforesaid was voted and donated, did not exceed the sum of $218,492, and that the highest assessed value of said Center township for any year from its organization to the present time will not exceed $220,000. Plaintiff avers that at the time of the issuing and delivery of said $50,000 in bonds as aforesaid, for the purpose aforesaid, the said township of Center had an outstanding and existing bonded indebtedness in the sum $7,000. Plaintiff further avers that the said $50,000 in bonds issued by said Center township, and for the purpose aforesaid, and interest coupons thereto attached, and each and every part thereof, are illegal; that they were issued without authority of law, and are void, and that the said defendants, and each and every of them, and the owners and holders of each and every bond issued as aforesaid, had due and legal notice of the illegality and irregularity of said bonds before purchasing the same or any part thereof.

“Plaintiff further complaining says that the tax-rolls of Wilson county containing said illegal tax upon the taxable property of Center township, illegally levied as aforesaid, and for the illegal purpose as aforesaid, are placed in the hands of Alexander Hunt, treasurer of Wilson county, who will enforce the payment of the said illegal tax immediately, to the irreparable injury of the plaintiff, unless restrained by this honorable court. Wherefore,” etc., [followed by a prayer for a temporary injunction, restraining the defendants from selling or assigning said bonds, or any of them, and that defendant Hunt, as treasurer, be restrained from collecting said taxes, etc., and on final hearing that said injunction be made perpetual, and that said bonds be surrendered up for cancellation, etc.]

This petition was duly verified. The then district judge, (Hon. JOHN R. GOODIN,) granted a temporary injunction. Defendant Hunt, the county treasurer, demurred, “for that it appears from the plaintiff’s petition that said plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue.” He also moved to vacate the temporary injunction, on the same ground, and because it did not appear that the plaintiff had or ever had any taxable property or any taxes to pay in said Center township. This motion was heard on the 3d of March 1875, before District Judge TALCOTT, who ordered that "said temporary injunction be so modified as to allow said Alexander Hunt to collect the taxes so as aforesaid enjoined." From this ruling and order the plaintiff, said Center Township, appeals, and brings the case here on error.

Kirkpatrick & Burge, for plaintiff:

1. The sole question presented by the record is, did the district judge err in dissolving the temporary injunction in this case? It is claimed that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. Neither the corporation nor its officers can do any act, make any contract, or incur any liability not authorized by law. All acts beyond the scope of the power granted, are void. Much less can any power be exercised, or any act done, which is forbidden by statute. 1 Dillon Munic. Corp. 173, §55. And every person dealing with a municipal corporation must at his peril, inquire into their power to make the contract. And every person dealing with the agents of such corporation, is likewise bound to ascertain the extent of the agent's authority; and every contract made beyond the scope of their authority is void in the beginning—void in whomsoever's hands it may come. 1 Dillon on Munic. Corp. 463, §372; Cooley's Const. Lim., §§196, 212 to 215; 9 Kas. 690; 12 Kas. 186. The plaintiff is not estopped from setting up its own want of power to make the contract in question. 2 Dillon on Munic. Corp., §749.

The bonds for the payment of which the tax in question was levied are void because they were issued in excess of the statutory limit, and the plaintiff is no more legally bound to contribute to their payment than it is to the public debt of Cuba; and to appropriate the plaintiff's property for such illegal purpose would not be taxation, but plunder. Sec. 1 of ch. 68 of the laws of 1872 contains a proviso which ex pressly prohibits issuing bonds in excess of a certain limit. This limit is made to depend upon the value of the taxable property of the township. At the time this law was passed a prior law was already in force prescribing the method by which to ascertain the value of the taxable property of the township, and also providing that such value so ascertained should be a matter of record in the office of the recording officer of the board of county commissioners. Gen. Stat. 68, §48. When the legislature passed this law of 1872 making the value of the taxable property of the township the standard by which to determine the amount of bonds which could lawfully be issued, it had reference to existing law on the same subject, and intended the value, as shown by the last assessment-roll on file in the county clerk's office, at the date of issuing the bonds. The bonds in question were issued 8th April 1873, and their validity must be tested by the assessment of 1872, which was the only evidence known to the law from which the officers of plaintiff corporation could then ascertain the value of the taxable property of the township. The issue of $50,000 is $35,000 in excess of the statutory limitation, as will be seen by reference to the record. Such a disregard of the statutory provisions invalidates the entire issue.

Brief of Plaintiff.

2. It is an undisputed fact that the railroad company failed to comply with the terms of the contract with the plaintiff, and that the consideration for the issue and delivery of said bonds has wholly failed; that said railroad company, and others, hold $28,000 of plaintiff's negotiable bonds, who received the same with full notice that the consideration of the same had wholly failed. Under such circumstances, a court of equity will order said bonds to be delivered up and canceled. 8 Ohio St. 565.

3. The tax in question is void for want of power in the commissioners to levy the same. The power to tax rests upon necessity, and is inherent in every sovereignty; but a mere municipal corporation cannot exercise this power, unless conferred by legislative grant. (Cooley's Const. Lim., §479; Blackw. Tax Titles, 3.) Then, most certainly one municipal corporation cannot impose a tax upon another without legislative grant. The board of county commissioners would have no more power to impose a tax on a township, than it would upon the District of Columbia. It is contended however that §13 of the laws of 1874, page 48, confers such power. That section only refers to bonds to be issued in pursuance of that act, and not bonds already in existence. Section 7 of the same act, found on page 45, laws of 1874, in express terms makes it the duty of the proper officers of any township to levy a tax for the payment of all bonds issued prior to that act.

Center Township v. Hunt, Treasurer.

4. But it is said that the plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue. Such objection is only tenable where the petition discloses some legal incapacity in the plaintiff, such as infancy, lunacy and the like. 11 Kas. 128.

5. The last objection stated in said motion is, that plaintiff's petition does not show or allege that it has any property to be affected by said tax. The plaintiff states that the county commissioners levied a tax on all the taxable property of the plaintiff. If the petition is not definite and certain in this respect, a motion to have the same corrected would have been proper. 10 Kas. 131. Is it necessary that the plaintiff's petition should state such facts? We maintain it is not. The plaintiff stands charged with an unjust and illegal tax. It has, under the statute, a right to relieve itself of that charge, whether it had property or not. Its right to the remedy does not depend upon the extent of its possessions. 8 Kas. 284.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by Center township against Alexander Hunt and others for the purpose of having certain bonds delivered up, declared void and canceled, and also for the purpose of obtaining a perpetual injunction forever restraining the collection of a certain tax. The plaintiff also prayed for a temporary injunction for various purposes, among which was that the defendant Alexander Hunt, treasurer of Wilson county, should be restrained pendente lite from collecting a certain tax levied on the taxable property of said township for the purpose of raising a fund with which to pay the interest on said bonds. Said temporary injunction was granted, but afterward it was so modified as not to further restrain said treasurer from collecting said tax. It is this order modifying said temporary injunction of which the plaintiff now complains.

---

Opinion of the Court.

Was said order erroneous? This is the only question in the case. The petition of the plaintiff was verified by affidavit; and the petition thus verified seems to have been the sole foundation upon which the plaintiff rested his temporary injunction. Was it sufficient? Where a petition is used merely as a petition, it may sometimes be held sufficient, although its statements of the facts are so general and comprehensive as to be styled conclusions of fact, or conclusions of law. But where it is also used as an affidavit, and as evidence, as in this case, it must state the facts with all that fullness of detail required in affidavits or depositions. (Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kas. 124; Gen. Stat. 675, code, § 289.) Every lawyer knows the difference between the statements of the facts in a petition, and the statements of the facts in an affidavit or a deposition. In an affidavit or deposition they are stated in such minute detail as to be proof or evidence of the more general facts as they are usually stated in a petition; and we generally call such detailed statements of the facts, evidence. In a petition, if the facts should be stated obscurely, the court upon motion of the adverse party may require that the petition be made more definite and certain by amendment. But no such practice is allowed with reference to affidavits. Hence, an affidavit must stand or fall upon the facts as it alleges them. If the affidavit is to be used as evidence, as in this case, and it should state the facts in such general and comprehensive terms as to be styled conclusions of fact, or conclusions of law, the affidavit would not be sufficient. Now for the purposes of this case we may admit that the petition was sufficient as a petition to sustain said temporary injunction; but was it sufficient as an affidavit? Most clearly not. It does not show that the plaintiff would be injured in the slightest particular by the collection of said tax. It does not show that any of said tax was charged against the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff was in the slightest danger of ever being compelled to pay the least portion of the same. It is true, the petition alleges that the tax was levied "upon the taxable property of said Center township;" but from all the allegations of the petition, it is clear beyond all doubt, that the pleader meant that the tax was levied upon all the property taxable in said township. The court below so construed the petition; and unless it were clear that the court below erred we would not reverse its ruling. The petition does not allege that any tax was ever levied upon "the taxable property of the plaintiff," or that the plaintiff ever owned any property. The petition simply alleges, as we have before stated, that the tax was levied "upon the taxable property of the said Center township." Now this allegation would not be sufficient as evidence to prove that the township owned certain property upon which said tax was levied, even if it stood alone, and was not shown to mean otherwise by the other allegations. But other allegations show that this was intended to mean otherwise.

Center Township v. Hunt, Treasurer.

It is claimed by plaintiff that the tax is void because said bonds are void, and that said bonds are void because issued in excess of ten per cent. of "the taxable property of said Center township." (Laws of 1872, p. 110, § 1.) The petition alleges that the assessed value of "the taxable property of said Center township" never exceeded $220,000, and therefore it is claimed that because more than $22,000 of bonds were issued, the whole of such bonds are invalid. Now suppose they are invalid, still the plaintiff has no right to enjoin the tax levied upon the taxable property of the various individuals of the township to pay the interest on them. If any tax should be assessed against the plaintiff, the plaintiff might then perhaps maintain an action to enjoin that tax. But it cannot maintain an action to enjoin a tax assessed against the other taxpayers of the township. One taxpayer cannot enjoin a tax levied against another taxpayer. Each taxpayer must sue for himself, either in an action brought by himself alone, or in an action brought by himself and others with like interests. (Bridge Company v. Wyandotte Co., 10 Kas. 826, 331, et seq.; Hudson v. Atchison, 12 Kas. 140, 146, et seq.) The mere fact that the plaintiff is a public corporation, is not enough to entitle it to sue for the taxpayers in such a case. There is no law making it the guardian of private rights. Besides, if it were as unfortunate in the protection of private rights as it has been in the protection of public rights, it would not be a very safe guardian. It is admitted that it has violated law, reason, and morality by issuing illegal bonds to the amount of $50,000, without any adequate consideration therefor, probably without sufficient capacity to pay them, and certainly with no intention of ever paying them. It has made promise which it never intends to fulfill, and probably could not well fulfill. We think it would be better for it to let the private individuals of the township take care of their own interests. (As to the validity of similar bonds in the hands of a bona fide holder, see Marcy v. Township of Oswego, Labette Co., Kansas, recently decided by the supreme court of the United States.) But the law of this state is such that the public cannot sue merely for the protection of private rights. (The State, ex rel., v. McLaughlin, 15 Kas. 228.) Nor can private individuals sue merely for the protection of the rights of the public. (Craft v. Jackson Co., 5 Kas. 518; Bobbett v. Dresher, 10 Kas. 9; Turner v. Jefferson Co., 10 Kas. 16; Bridge Company v. Wyandotte Co., 10 Kas. 826; Miller v. Palermo, 12 Kas. 14.) Public rights and private rights, public actions and private actions, are kept separate; and no action can be brought except by the party having a special interest in the result. (Crowell v. Ward, ante, p. 60.) That is, the public must sue to protect public interests, and private individuals must sue to protect their own interests. And each must sue in his or its own name. (Crowell v. Ward, supra.) The public must sue in the name of the state, county, city, township, etc., as the case may be; and each individual must sue in his or her own name. An action cannot be brought merely for the benefit of an individual in the name of the public. (The State v. Jefferson Co., 11 Kas. 66; The State v. McLaughlin, and Crowell v. Ward, supra.) If said tax is illegal, then there can be no question as to the right of the individual taxpayers to sue separately, or jointly, as they may choose, for the purpose of enjoining the tax levied against them respectively. (Gilmore v. Norton, 10 Kas. 491; Gilmore v. Fox, 10 Kas. 509.)

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The State, ex rel., v. Majors.

It is understood that precisely the same questions are involved in the case of Cedar Township v. Alexander Hunt, and the City of Fredonia v. Alexander Hunt, as are involved in this case; and therefore this opinion is intended for each of the three cases, and the same judgment will be rendered in each of said cases.

The order of the judge of the court below in modifying said temporary injunction will be affirmed.

THE STATE OF KANSAS, ex rel., v. E. W. MAJORS.

1. COUNTY TREASURER; Removal from Office; Constitutional Law. Sections 3 and 4 of the act passed by the legislature in special session on September 21st 1874, entitled "An act to provide for the publication of statements showing the condition of county treasuries, and examinations of same, and to prevent the improper use of public moneys, and for the punishment thereof," are constitutional and valid.

amination of the county treasurer's office—the treasurer making such explanation as he could, and furnishing such vouchers as he had—and the commissioners also found a deficiency in said funds, and thereupon, in order to protect the public interests made an order removing said treasurer from office, and appointed another person in his place, held, that the acts of the commissioners in so removing said treasurer, and in appointing another person in his place, were and are valid.

Original Proceedings in Quo Warranto.

PETITION in the nature of quo warranto, filed in this court April 8th 1875, by the county-attorney of Crawford county, as relator, to oust Majors from the office of county treasurer of said county. The grounds upon which the removal was claimed are stated in the opinion.

Daniel Scott, county-attorney, for The State.

Playter & Pursel, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: The constitution of the state of Kansas provides, that "All county and township officers may be removed from office in such manner and for such cause as shall be prescribed by law." (Const., art 9, § 5.) On September 21st 1874, the legislature in special session passed an act containing among others the following provisions:

"SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the probate judge in each county, once during each quarter of each year, without notice to said county treasurer, to examine and count the funds in the hands of the county treasurer; and the county commissioners of each county shall, prior to each examination, appoint two persons, citizens and taxpayers of the county, whose duty it shall be to assist the probate judge in making the examination aforesaid; but no person so appointed shall act as examiner more than once in the same year.

"SEC. 4. If the probate judge and the examiners find the funds in the treasury, as appears by the books of the county treasurer, they shall so certify in a report to be filed with the county clerk, and make oath to the same; and if they find a deficiency of funds in the treasury, they shall report the facts immediately in writing to the county clerk, and the county clerk shall immediately notify the county commissioners of the filing of said report, and the county commissioners shall meet forthwith and take such action as may be necessary to preserve and protect the funds of the county, and also to take any other action that may in the judgment of the commissioners be necessary and proper to protect the public interest, including the power to remove or suspend such treasurer, and the appointment of some competent person to discharge the duties of such treasurer during the time of such suspension, or for the unexpired term in case of a removal; and the person so appointed shall give a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the county commissioners." (Laws of 1875, pp. 263, 264, §§ 3, 4.)

On November 9th 1874, the board of county commissioners of Crawford county, in accordance with the provisions of said act appointed two examiners to assist the probate judge in examining and counting the funds in the office of the county treasurer. The defendant, E. W. Majors, was at that time, and had been for several months prior to that time, the county treasurer of said county. The probate judge and said examiners performed their duty, and on December 4th 1874 made a written report of their proceedings to the county clerk of said county. Said report shows a deficiency in the funds of the county treasurer's office amounting to at least $3,701.35. The county clerk immediately notified the county commissioners, and they met on December 5th in special session to consider the matter. They immediately notified the treasurer, who appeared before them, and they then proceeded to make another examination of the books, papers, funds, etc., in and belonging to the county treasurer's office. The treasurer made such explanations as he could, and supplied them with such vouchers as he had. After making a full examination the commissioners found that there was a deficiency in the funds of the county treasurer's office amounting to the sum of $6,246.25. They therefore, on January 15th 1875, made the following order:

"Now therefore, in order to protect the interests of said county, the board of county commissioners, by authority in them vested by virtue of said law approved September 21st 1874, do hereby order, that E. W. Majors, county treasurer of Crawford county, Kansas, be and is hereby removed from said office, and further order and declare the said office of county treasurer for Crawford county to be vacant.”

---

Opinion of the Court.

The county board also on the same day appointed Nelson Sennit to fill said vacancy. Sennit qualified, and demanded the office, but Majors refused to give it up; and this action is now prosecuted by the county-attorney of said county for the purpose of removing Majors from said office.

The pleadings are so framed that no question is raised as to whether Majors was in fact guilty of any dereliction of duty in said office or not. The only question under the pleadings, is, whether said proceedings of the commissioners, the probate judge, examiners, county clerk, etc., were had or not. The petition alleges them, and the answer denies them. The allegations of the petition are however amply proved by the evidence submitted to us, which of course puts an end to the issues raised by the pleadings. But a more serious question arises. Are said proceedings sufficient to authorize the present action? The defendant claims that the act of the legislature under which they were had, is unconstitutional, and urges many reasons therefor. Now we shall consider the question with reference to the present case only; for the act may be constitutional when applied to some cases, and unconstitutional as to others.

We do not think the act is unconstitutional because passed by the legislature in special session; for, although they were convened for another and different purpose, yet when they were assembled together they had the power to legislate upon any subject not specifically withdrawn from their consideration by the constitution.

We do not think that a county treasurer has such a vested right in his office that no law can be passed during his term of office creating a new cause in law for his removal therefrom, and creating a new tribunal and a new procedure for such removal, provided of course that the law shall apply to such causes of removal only as shall in fact be brought into existence subsequent to the passage of the law. The legislature may create new offices, or new tribunals; or may confer new duties—judicial, quasi-judicial, or ministerial—upon officers already in existence. (In re Johnson, 12 Kas. 102, 104, and cases there cited; Young v. Ledrick, 14 Kas. 92.) The title to said act is evidently broad enough to cover all the provisions contained in the body of the act.

The State, ex rel., v. Majors.

The proceedings authorized by the act are evidently “due process of law,” because the act itself is authorized by the constitution. The legislature is clearly authorized by § 5 of article 9, if not by § 1 of article 2 of the constitution, to provide for the removal of county treasurers for just such causes, by just such a tribunal, and by just such a mode of procedure, as are provided for in said act. The wisdom of conferring such plenary powers upon county commissioners in such important cases, may well be doubted. But the power of the legislature to do so, if it chooses, we suppose cannot be doubted. It was evidently the intention of the legislature to confer upon county commissioners the power to remove county treasurers by proceedings summary in their nature, and not more formal than the ordinary proceedings of county commissioners are. About the time this act was passed, and immediately prior thereto, several county treasurers had become defaulters; and evidently the legislature intended to provide a means for the removal of county treasurers more speedy in its nature, and less formal than the ordinary action in the nature of quo warranto. And although the proceedings may be hasty, summary, informal, and by a tribunal not skilled in the law, yet the proceedings are none the less “due process of law.” (Gilchrist v. Schmidling, 12 Kas. 264, 271, et seq.) It has been settled for more than forty years, that the 5th article of the amendments to the constitution of the United States applies only to the government of the United States, and does not apply to the several state governments. (Barrow v. Mayor, &c., 7 Peters, 247.) Of course, it was necessary for the county commissioners to have jurisdiction in order to make their proceedings legal and valid. But how their jurisdiction could be questioned in this case, we cannot understand.

Opinion of the Court.

---

The law gives them jurisdiction in this class of cases. And they obtained jurisdiction of this particular case by proceeding precisely in accordance with the statute. The defendant must have had knowledge of the fact, at the time it occurred, that the probate judge and the examiners were examining his books and counting the funds in his office. Then, on the very next day after the probate judge and examiners made their report, the commissioners gave him notice thereof. And he immediately appeared before the commissioners, and seems to have been present and participating in all the proceedings pertaining to his office, until the final termination of the commissioners' examination. Did not the commissioners then have jurisdiction of his person? It is not claimed that any unfairness was practiced by the commissioners in their examination. They examined all the vouchers the defendant presented to them, and listened to all his suggestions. They undoubtedly intended to act fairly and honestly. The defendant however claims in his brief that they were mistaken; that in fact there never was any deficiency in the funds of his office since he held it. What the real facts are, we are unable to determine from anything presented to us. But the commissioners found that there was such a deficiency; and for the purposes of this case we must presume that such finding is true. The commissioners undoubtedly had jurisdiction, and whether we consider that they acted judicially, quasi-judicially, or ministerially, still their acts must be considered as at least prima facie correct until the contrary is shown, and there is nothing in the case that tends to show the contrary. We therefore think that their action in removing the defendant from the office of county treasurer is valid; and therefore judgment of ouster must be given in this case in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant.

All the Justices concurring.

WILLIAM H. ODELL V. EDWARD J. DODGE.

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, Chosen at First Election, hold for Unexpired Term Only. Barton county was organized May 16th 1872. Great Bend township was organized May 23d, and the first election held in said county and township was on July 1st. At this election county and township officers were elected, among which were two justices of the peace for said Great Bend township; Held, That, (under the rule prescribed by section 8, page 251, Gen. Stat.,) the justices elected at the first election held on said first day of July 1872 were elected to hold their offices only until the next annual township election to be held in April 1873, and until their successors were elected and qualified. [Jones v. Gridley, 20-584; Wood v. Bartling, ante, 109.]
2. ——— First Full Term. The justices elected in and for said township at the election in April 1873 were elected for a full term of two years.
3. ——— To Fill Vacancy. An election held in April 1874 in said township for justices was a nullity, unless it was to fill vacancies; and even if it was to fill vacancies the terms of those elected would expire in 1875.
4. ——— Regular Elections for Justices of the Peace. The election for justices of the peace, and other township officers, held in November 1875, was valid, and a person duly elected to the office of justice of the peace for said Great Bend township at said election is entitled to the docket, books, papers, etc., pertaining to the office, and may recover them from one who wrongfully withholds the same from him. The regular time for electing justices for said Great Bend township is at the regular township election in each alternate year, commencing with the year 1873.

Original Proceedings in Quo Warranto.

ODELL, as plaintiff, brought his action of quo warranto against Dodge, to determine his right to the office of justice of the peace of Great Bend township, Barton county. His petition was filed December 1st, 1875. All the necessary facts are stated in the opinion.

C. P. Townsley, for plaintiff.

Clayton & Clayton, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This is an original action in the nature of quo warranto. The action was commenced for the purpose of having the question determined, whether the plaintiff Odell, or the defendant Dodge, is entitled to the office of justice of the peace for the township of Great Bend, Barton county. This is the only question in the case. The facts upon which this question depends are substantially as follows: Barton county was organized May 16th 1872. Great Bend township was organized May 28d, and the first election held in said county and township was on July 1st. At this election county and township officers were elected, among which were two justices of the peace for said Great Bend township, one of whom was the defendant Dodge. All these proceedings were had under the acts relating to the organization of new counties. (Gen. Stat. 249, et seq.; Laws of 1872, p. 243.) At each of the next two annual township elections held in said township, to-wit, on the first Tuesday of April 1873, and on the first Tuesday of April 1874, two justices of the peace were elected for said township, (provided of course that justices of the peace were to be elected at such elections,) one of whom was the defendant Dodge, who each time qualified and accepted the office. No election was held in April 1875, for before that time the legislature so changed the law that the annual township election is held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November of each year. (Laws of 1875, p. 128.) At the annual township election held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November 1875, (which was also the day on which the general election was held,) four different candidates were voted for, for the office of justice of the peace for said township; and if that was the proper time for holding elections for said offices the plaintiff Odell, and one Sells, were duly elected such justices, and the defendant Dodge and the other candidate were defeated. Both Odell and Sells qualified — Sells becoming his own successor, and the county commissioners designating Odell as the successor of Dodge, and causing a certificate to that effect to be entered in the docket kept by Dodge. (Gen. Stat. 817, § 194.) Odell then demanded the docket, books, papers, etc., pertaining to the office, and Dodge refused to give them up. Dodge claims that on July 1st 1872 he was elected for a full term of two years, less the time that had elapsed between the first Tuesday of April of that year, and said 1st day of July; that his term did not expire until the first Tuesday of April 1874, when he was reëlected for another full term, and that his second term will not expire until the holding of the annual township election for the year 1876, and therefore, that the election of Odell in 1875 was a nullity. The only defect in this reasoning is in the starting-point; but that is fatal. Dodge was not elected for a full term in 1872, but only to hold his office until the next annual township election. Section 8 of the act authorizing the election upon which the whole claim of the defendant is founded, and at which he was elected in 1872, provides that "Any person elected to a township office at the first election shall, when qualified as the law directs, continue to hold his office until the next annual township meeting, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified; and all county officers shall, in like manner, hold until the next general election, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified." (Gen. Stat. 251.) Said § 8 has been held to be constitutional and valid with reference to county officers. (Hagerty v. Arnold, 13 Kas. 867.) And hence it must also be held to be constitutional and valid with reference to township officers. For every ground upon which said section may be claimed to be unconstitutional, or invalid, when applied to township officers, may be interposed with equal or greater force when the section is applied to county officers. We suppose that it is admitted, that justices of the peace are township officers. (Const., art. 3, § 9; art. 9, § 4; Gen. Stat. 1083, ch. 110, §§ 3, 4, 5.) Now the regular term of office for a justice of the peace is two years. (Const., art. 3, § 9.) And all the justices for any given township, when elected for full terms must be elected in the same year, and at the same election. That is, they must all be elected at a regular township election held in each alternate year. (Gen. Stat. 1083, § 4.) But which of the alternate years—whether the election is to be held in the even years, or in the odd years—is nowhere designated by either the constitution or the statutes. We therefore think it follows from the foregoing premises, as necessary and logical sequences, that the justices elected in Great Bend township in April 1873 were properly elected at that time; that they then were each elected for a full term of two years; that they were the first justices elected for full terms in said township; that the first Tuesday of April 1873 was the first regular election for the election of justices of the peace for full terms in said township; and therefore, that the regular times for holding elections for the election of justices of the peace for full terms in said township has been and will be at the regular township election held every alternate year commencing in April 1873. And therefore it further follows, that the election of justices of the peace at the township election held in November 1875 was regular and valid as to time—that the plaintiff Odell was duly elected to said office, and is entitled to the docket, books, papers, etc., pertaining to the office, and that the defendant Dodge wrongfully withholds the same from him. The election for justices in said township in 1874 was a nullity, unless it was to fill vacancies. And even if it was to fill vacancies, the terms of those elected would expire in 1875. (Hale v. Evans, 12 Kas. 562.) So in any event, the election of Odell in 1875 was valid. For a further discussion as to the times when justices of the peace are to be elected, see case of Wood v. Bartling, ante, p. 109.

Judgment will be rendered for the plaintiff.

COMM'RS OF LABETTE COUNTY V. G. W. FRANKLIN.

1. SHERIFF'S FEES; Mileage on Tax Warrants. A sheriff is not entitled to mileage on a personal tax warrant returned "no property found." [Titus v. Comm'rs Howard Co., 17-363; Thralls v. Comm'rs Sumner Co., 24-594; see Comp. L. 1881, chap. 39, § 3.]
2. SERVICE OF WRITS; "Not Found," No Service. Service of a writ is the actual performance of the duty commanded by it; and when there is no performance of that duty, from whatever cause, there is no service.

Error from Labette District Court.

IN February 1874 the county treasurer of Labette county issued to Franklin, as sheriff, a large number of tax warrants for the collection of personal-property taxes levied in and for the year 1873. Many of these tax warrants were returned "no property found," etc., and in July 1874, Franklin made out and presented to the county board four bills for sheriff's fees on said warrants, as follows: One bill set forth the names of 260 persons against whom tax warrants had been issued, as to each of which persons the warrant was returned "no property found," and upon each warrant the sheriff charged $3.20 as mileage, and 25 cents for return, making $3.45 on each warrant, or $897 on the 260 warrants. Another bill was for fees on 17 other warrants, on seven of which he had returned "not found," or "gone," and on ten "no goods"—his bill for "mileage" and "return" amounting to $42.45. A third bill was for fees on 18 other warrants, all of which he had returned "no goods," his claim for "mileage" and "return" amounting to $18.45. The fourth bill was for fees on 16 other warrants, on two of which he had returned "not found"—five, "gone"—seven, "no goods"—one, "dead," and one, "tax remitted by county board," his fees for "mileage" and "return" amounting to $74.85. The total of the four bills was $1,032.25. The county board allowed Franklin on the first of said bills the sum of $68.20; on the second, $18; on the third, $7.55; on the fourth, $18, (total $101.75,) and disallowed the balance. (Such allowances were evidently intended by the county board, and counsel for plaintiffs in error in their briefs so state, as an allowance for making the "return" on each warrant, and for "mileage for the longest distance actually traveled on any batch of warrants.") Franklin refused to accept the amounts so allowed, and appealed to the district court, as provided by § 30 of ch. 25 of Gen. Stat. The case on appeal was tried at the November Term 1874 of the district court, D. K., judge pro tem., presiding. A jury was waived. The court found in favor of Franklin, and gave judgment in his favor for $1,055.65, being the whole amount of his several claims or bills, with interest—and the Board of Commissioners now appeal, and bring the case here on error.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Willard Davis, and A. H. Ayres, for plaintiffs in error.

H. G. Webb, and W. B. Glasse, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: There is but a single question in this case which requires consideration, and that is, whether a sheriff is entitled to collect mileage on tax warrants which are returned by him indorsed "no property." This is a mere question of the construction of the statute. The sheriff can collect just such fees as the law gives him, whether in the particular case they are adequate compensation for the work done or not. He is entitled to the same fees on tax warrants as on executions. (Gen. Stat., p. 1060, § 128.) He is given for "serving and returning any writ, process, order, or notice, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, for the first person 50 cents; for return of no property found, 25 cents; for every mile necessarily traveled in serving any writ, process, order, venire, or notice, 10 cents." (Gen. Stat. p. 476, § 3.) In § 32, page 485, Gen. Stat., it is provided that "no officer shall receive any fees for constructive services or mileage in any case." These are all the provisions to which our attention is directed, or which seem to bear upon the question. And under them, we think the sheriff is not entitled to mileage where he returns the warrant "no property found." He cannot be said to have served the warrant when he has not found any property upon which to levy it; and mileage is only given when he has served a writ. There must be an actual service. Nothing is to be taken by construction. Service of a writ, is the actual performance of the duty commanded by it. If that duty is unperformed, there is no service. It matters not what has caused the non-performance, whether the negligence of the officer, or the departure of the party against whom the writ runs, or his want of property, there is still no service. Whether mileage ought to be given to encourage effort on the part of the officer, is a question for the legislature. The function of the court is not jus dare, but jus dicere.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to grant a new trial.

THE STATE OF KANSAS V. ANDREW H. HORNEMAN.

1. CRIMINAL LAW; Appeals, When to be Taken. A defendant in a criminal case cannot bring to this court on appeal the ruling of the district court sustaining the demurrer on the part of the state to a plea of autrefois acquit, until after the trial and judgment on the merits. [Cummings v. State, 4-225; State v. Freeland, ante, 9.]
2. ——— Autrefois Acquit; One Act—Distinct Offenses. To an indictment charging a shooting with intent to kill, defendant plead, that he had once been tried and acquitted under a charge of maliciously shooting and wounding a horse, and that the shooting charged in the two prosecutions was one and the same shooting: Held, That a demurrer to this plea was properly sustained. [For discussion of autrefois acquit, see State v. Ingram, ante, 14; State v. Shafer, 20-226; City of Olathe v. Thomas, 26-233; State v. Curtis, 29-384; State v. Kuhuke, 30-462; *State v. #### Appeal from Cowley District Court.

INDICTMENT, charging that Horneman, at the county of Cowley, on the 18th of September 1875, with malice aforethought, unlawfully and feloniously assaulted one Enoch Willett, and with a certain loaded pistol or revolver shot him the said Willett with intent then and there him the said Willett to kill and murder. This indictment was found at the September Term 1875 of the district court. The defendant was arrested, and when arraigned for plea, he pleaded that he had already been arraigned and pleaded not guilty to the following complaint:

(Title, and Venue.) "George Hafer being first duly sworn says, that one Andrew H. Horneman, at the county of Cowley, on the 13th of September 1875, with a pistol or revolver loaded with powder and ball, willfully and maliciously did shoot and wound a horse, the property of one John W. Meadows, and hired by the said Meadows to this affiant"—(describing the horse, and stating its value.)

The record showing a trial of defendant upon said complaint, and his acquittal of the charge therein made against him, was made a part of his plea to the indictment; and Horneman alleged, "that the shooting stated and charged in said complaint, of which he was duly acquitted, and the shooting of which he is now indicted, are one and the same shooting, and not other and different shootings." To this plea the county-attorney demurred. The court sustained the demurrer; and from such decision and judgment Horneman appeals to this court.

Hackney & McDonald, and Pryor & Kager, for appellant.

A. J. Pyburn, county-attorney, for The State.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Appellant was indicted for the crime of shooting with intent to kill. To this indictment he pleaded autrefois acquit. A demurrer to this plea was sustained; and without waiting until after a trial of the merits, defendant has appealed to this court from the ruling sustaining the demurrer. Doubtless the appeal is premature, and the case not properly before us. No judgment has yet been rendered, and appeals in criminal cases are only from judgments. (Gen. Stat., p. 865, § 281; The State v. Freeland, ante, p. 9.)

But waiving this, we think the ruling of the district court

The State v. Horneman.

---

was correct. The plea disclosed a prosecution against appellant for maliciously shooting and wounding a horse, not the property nor in the possession of the party upon whom the assault with intent to kill is charged to have been made, and alleged that the shooting charged in the two prosecutions was one and the same shooting. Does this disclose an acquittal of the offense of which he is now charged? We think not. The two offenses are entirely distinct. One is not included in the other—is not a lesser degree of the other. The character of the testimony must be different in each. One fact, that is, “shooting,” may be necessary for conviction under either charge. But something more is necessary in each, than the mere fact of shooting. The rule is thus stated by Wharton in his Criminal Law, (1 Wharton, 7th ed., §565:) “It may be generally said, that the fact that the two offenses form part of the same transaction, is no defense, when the defendant could not have been convicted at the first trial, on the indictment then pending, of the offense charged in the second indictment.” And again: “Where the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first, the plea is generally good, but not otherwise.” It was said by Lord Denman, in Regina v. Button, 11 Ad. & Ellis, New Series, 946, “The same act may be part of several offenses. The same blow may be the subject of inquiry in consecutive charges of murder and robbery. The acquittal on the first charge is no bar to a second inquiry, where both are charges of felonies; neither ought it to be, when the one charge is of felony, and the other of misdemeanor.” In 1 Russell on Crimes it is laid down, that “The acquittal on one indictment, in order to be a good defense to a subsequent indictment, must be an acquittal of the same identical offense charged in the first indictment.” In the case of the Commonwealth v. Harrison, 11 Gray, 308, a party who had been tried for selling liquors without license was convicted of the offense of keeping his saloon open on Sunday, although the sale of the liquor was part of the evidence to sustain the latter charge. In Commonwealth v. Bakeman, 105 Mass. 58, the defendant had been acquitted under a charge of willfully obstructing the engines and carriages of the C. Rld. Co., by placing an iron rail across the track, and was subsequently convicted upon a charge, under a different section of the statute, of willfully putting a rail across the track with intent to obstruct the engines and carriages of the same company, and the conviction was sustained, although the same act was referred to in the two charges. The court uses this language: "It may well be that both indictments refer to the same transaction; but that fact is not decisive as to the legal identity of the two offenses. The test as to the legal identity of the two offenses is to be found in the answer to this question: Could the prisoner, upon any evidence that might have been produced, have been convicted upon the first indictment of the offense that is charged in the second?" See also, Commonwealth v. Roby, 12 Pick. 496, in which it was held, that a conviction of an assault with intent to murder could not be pleaded in bar to an indictment for murder. In Price v. The State, 19 Ohio, 423, the rule is stated as taken from Archbold's Cr. Pleading, and also from Roscoe's Cr. Ev., that "the true test, by which the question, whether such a plea is a sufficient bar in any case, may be tried, is, whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to prove a legal conviction in the first." These authorities are decisive of the question, and the ruling of the district court was correct.

The appeal will be dismissed.

THE M. K. &amp; T. RAILWAY CO. v. WM. WEAVER.

1. EXCESSIVE DAMAGES; New Trial; Prejudice of Jury. The mere fact that damages are excessive, is not a ground for new trial. They must appear to have been given under the influence of passion, or prejudice. [U. P. Rly. Co. v. Hand, 7-380; U. P. Rly. Co. v. Milliken, 8-647; U. P. Rly. Co. v. Young, 19-488; *Clark v. 2. ——— Injuries Sustained. Where a passenger is wrongfully expelled from the cars, and it appears that while there was a sharp scuffle, some blows given, and some blood drawn, there were no broken limbs or bones, no permanent injury or disfiguration, no long confinement, no protracted pain and suffering, no heavy expenses for medicine, nursing, or physician, little loss of time, not to exceed a day's delay, and no circumstance of outrage and insult independent of the actual expulsion, held, that a verdict awarding $5,000 damages was excessive.
3. GENERAL VERDICTS—Sustained by Evidence; Particular Questions of Fact. Where a general verdict is returned for the plaintiff, which is correct if either one of three several facts exist, and special questions are submitted to the jury as to existence of these facts, and all answered in the affirmative, the verdict will not be set aside as against the evidence if one of these answers is supported by the testimony, although the second answer is clearly and the third probably against the evidence.
4. ——— But the fact that these questions are thus answered, tends to show passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, and in this case does, with the amount of the verdict, show such a wrong as calls for the interference of the court, and a reversal of the judgment.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWSTER, J.: This was an action brought by Weaver to recover damages for a forcible expulsion by the company from one of its coaches. Verdict and judgment were in favor of Weaver for $5,000. Special questions of fact were submitted to the jury, and answered as follows:

1st.—Was the plaintiff informed by the agent of the defendant at New Chicago, that the paper in his possession, and upon which he demanded a ride in defendant's cars to Chetopa, was not a good ticket, and would not entitle him to a passage on defendant's cars? Answer, No.

2d.—Was the conductor of defendant's train, upon which the plaintiff entered, instructed by the defendant to eject from the cars any person who refused to produce a ticket or pass, duly signed, or to pay the money for his passage? Answer, Yes.

3d.—Did the plaintiff tender to the conductor of the defendant's cars a ticket entitling him to be carried from New Chicago to Chetopa, or any other point on defendant's road? Answer, Yes.

4th.—If the jury answer the last question in the affirmative, please describe the ticket. Answer, From Kansas City to Chetopa.

5th.—Did the plaintiff offer to pay his fare at any time before the stoppage of the train and the commencement of his expulsion, or did he offer a pass duly signed by any authorized officer of the company? Answer, Yes.

6th.—Did the conductor of the defendant's train inform the plaintiff that, in the absence of a ticket, he must pay for his passage in defendant's cars? Answer, Yes.

7th.—Did the conductor of the defendant's train inform the plaintiff that unless he so paid he should be compelled to stop the train and expel him from the cars? Answer, Yes.

8th.—After he so informed him, did plaintiff refuse to produce a ticket or pay for his passage before the train was stopped, and his expulsion attempted? Answer, No.

9th.—Did the servants and agents of the defendant use more force in the expulsion of the plaintiff from the cars of the defendant than was necessary to eject him and overcome his resistance? Answer, Yes.

10th.—Was any unusual or unnecessary violence or force employed by the defendant's servants and agents, before the plaintiff was put upon the ground? Answer, Yes.

11th.—After the plaintiff had been ejected and put on the ground, who was the aggressor in the conflict that afterward ensued, if there was any conflict? Answer, Defendant.

A motion was made to set aside the verdict on the ground that it was against the evidence, and that the damages were excessive. This motion was overruled, and this presents the principal question for our consideration.

Are the damages excessive? We are constrained to think they are greatly excessive. We quote so much of the plaintiff's testimony as bears upon this matter. He testified as follows, on his examination in chief:

"Mr. Hall was the conductor. He passed on some distance in the cars, and came back to me, and he asked me something in regard to my ticket, where I purchased it, and said I had the wrong coupon. He stated I'd have to pay my fare to Chetopa. I remarked that I did not feel willing to pay it a second time; that I paid it once. We discussed the matter in friendly tone and quiet, in the beginning of it. I told him that if a mistake was made, it was their mistake, and not mine. Hall said he should put himself to no trouble to correct the mistake of the other road. I said I did not intend to deprive them of anything; that as soon as we arrived at a station they could telegraph to know if I had bought a ticket. I told him I would deposit a hundred dollars with him or any other responsible man in the car, for the purpose of indemnifying the company that I was not wronging them out of their rights. He then stated I should pay, or he would put me off the train; and I refused to pay under the circumstances. He stopped the train, and there was two or three men came to his assistance. I did not think they were going to do it, and I held on to the seat some time, and they finally pulled me loose and took me toward the door. I offered to pay, and Hall said, 'Pay hell,' and shoved me out. There were three, and perhaps four, had hold of me. There was nothing unusually abusive until I was out of doors. I don't remember anything that occurred after I reached the steps. I had used a great deal of exertion in trying to keep in. The last I remember we were all tugging on the platform—some had hold of me in front, and some behind. The blood rushed to my head so that I was as blind as a bat. I remember

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

nothing after that. I was sitting on the ground when I came to myself. My face was bloody, and my mouth was bleeding. My mouth was cut, and there were two other wounds on my head. About the time I got up, some one threw my hat out of the window. The cars were just moving off. I walked about forty rods, to what I took to be a railroad station-house. There I washed, and lay down, and rested a while. The section hands I hired to take me to New Chicago on the hand-car.

“Q.—What was the condition of your health at the time you were ejected from the cars?

“A.—It was poor; I had been in poor health for four years, and had been to the mountains to see if I could improve it. This trip was on my return from the mountains.”

On cross-examination he testified: “Hall insisted on having the money. Don’t think he said anything about instructions. I refused to pay, and he put me off. I was very near the center of the car. I struggled and held on to the seats as long as I could. I was very near the steps when my recollection ceased. Don’t remember when striking the ground of hitting any one a severe blow. At the time my consciousness ceased, there had been no blows struck at all. I don’t recollect of striking Alexander a severe blow and cutting his cheek open.”

Wm. A. Nichols, who saw the plaintiff after his expulsion; and the same day, testified:

“Plaintiff’s appearance at the time was that of a man who had had a fight. I think there was a cut about Mr. Weaver’s mouth. His clothes were bloody. I think it was his shirt the blood was on. I saw no other wounds but those he complained of.

“Q.—You may state whether at the time he complained of physical suffering or wounds? [Objected to by defendant, as incompetent, as calling for declarations of party. Objection overruled, and excepted to by defendant.]

“A.—He complained about his head. He said he was suffering from the rush of blood to his head.”

Joseph A. Wells, also a witness for the plaintiff, testified:

“About this time the train came to a stand-still, and Hall said he had no time to talk now—that he must get off the train. They then started to eject him from the train, and he held on to a seat on the left side. Then he was dragged to a seat on the right side of the car, and he then clutched a seat

M. K. & T. Rly. Co. v. Weaver.

on the other side of the car before he reached the door. About the time they reached the door, Weaver remarked to the conductor, not to put him off on the open prairie—remarked he would pay his fare to the next station, rather than be put off there. The proposal not being accepted, he was taken to the door onto the platform, and to the steps leading to the right side of the coach, his face fronting to the coach, with one hand holding to the platform, and one to the car railing, when one of the parties jumped down on the ground from the car and took hold of Weaver in the rear, and by the efforts of the three they put him on the ground. My impression is, that he struck the ground with his feet and staggered backward, and recovered, coming nearly to an upright attitude. After they were off the car, Weaver made a kind of old-woman's lick, sorter round like. I thought he was trying to strike the brakeman. The brakeman came at him, and struck him three or four times. Weaver got up afterward, and staggered off to the side of the ditch and sat down. I then went in the car and took Weaver's hat and ticket, and threw off the hat and ticket. I was present when it was done. I saw the parties that removed Weaver from the cars after they came back, and were washing up. The smallest one of the three got his face cut with the glass of the door. I believe now that Hall got cut with the glass, and that the smallest one of the three got a cut under the left eye. I could not say positively that Weaver hit him or not."

This was all of the testimony given by the plaintiff which in any way bears upon the question of the injuries sustained. The expulsion was participated in by three parties—Hall, the conductor, and two other employes, Alexander, and Holcomb. All were retained in the employ of the company thereafter, and one, Holcomb, was shortly promoted. They were all witnesses on the trial. We quote the testimony of Alexander—the others being far more favorable to the company, and being less full and detailed than his. Alexander says:

"The first I noticed was when the train stopped, and I went back to see. When I went back into the coach, Hall and Holcomb, the brakeman, were trying to get Weaver out of the train. Hall ordered me to assist in expelling him. We took hold of him and started to get him toward the door, when he got down into another seat. Next move we got him on the platform, and he got hold of the railing of the car. I then jumped down on the ground and got hold of him by the right arm and pulled him down on the ground. I turned round partly to get on the train, and Weaver invited Hall to get down and fight him. Hall didn't accept the invitation, and he turned round to me, and said, You son of a bitch, I'll give you one—and turned round to strike, and struck round this way, (witness motions,) and hit me here. Weaver had something in his hand that cut me. Then I struck him. The blow from Weaver didn't knock me down. No force was used except what was necessary."

---

Opinion of the Court.

On cross-examination, witness said: "I did not know of any difficulty. My going back into the car was simply caused by the train stopping. When I went in, Weaver was in a seat. They were trying to get him out. I believe Hall had hold behind him, and Holcomb was in front. They got him started before I took hold of him. When about three seats from the door, Weaver got into another seat. Holcomb said, You may as well get off first as last. We got him into the aisle, and to the door. When outside of the door Weaver got hold of the railing of the car. When I got down on the ground and took hold of his right arm, Holcomb and Hall were on the platform of the car, when Weaver invited Hall to fight. The blow he gave me was not so heavy, but it cut my face. Next I struck him, and knocked him down. I attempted to strike him again; he put his hands over his face. I got on him; I was trying to take his arms away so that I could strike him. There was so much blood flowing from my face that I could not see whether any come from plaintiff or not. I did not see any blood coming from his nose or mouth. Weaver did not say, 'enough.' Hall called me, and I got on the train. Did not hear Weaver say that he would pay when on the ground, if they would let him ride."

Now, what may fairly be deduced from this testimony? That there was a sharp scuffle in which three men overpowered one, and ejected him from the cars; that some blows were given; some blood drawn, but no broken limbs or bones, no permanent injury or disfiguration. There was no aggravated insult and abuse; no circumstances of gross outrage independent of the forcible expulsion. There was little loss of time, as the expulsion was within three miles of the place where Weaver entered the cars, and he was taken back there the same day. There was no long confinement, no protracted pain and suffering, no heavy expenses for medicine, nursing, or physician. In short, if an individual had committed the assault and battery, a few hundred dollars would have been deemed ample compensation for the injury. We know that this is not a parallel case—that there is a special duty on the carrier to protect his passengers, not only “against the violence and insults of strangers, and co-passengers, but a fortiori, against the violence and insults of its own servants,” and that for a breach of that duty he ought to be compelled to make the amplest reparation. The law wisely and justly holds him to a strict and rigorous accountability. We would not relax in the slightest degree this strict accountability. We know that upon it, in no small degree, depends the safety and comfort of passengers. The carrier selects his own agents, and unless he finds that violence and abuse on the part of such agents toward his passengers meets with swift and severe punishment, he will soon become indifferent to the character and conduct of such agents, and rudeness, insult and violence will take the place of politeness, courtesy, and assistance. Any one who travels sees so much of rudeness and inattention on the part of employés, is subjected to so many annoyances, petty and large, and not seldom is witness to so much actual outrage and abuse, that we would be exceedingly loth to have any relaxation of the rule which holds carriers to the most rigorous accountability for violence and wrong to their passengers. We know that in the case of Goddard v. G. T. Railway Co., 57 Maine, 202, where the supreme court of Maine discussed the obligations and liabilities of railroad companies in an opinion of great ability, and with an exhaustive examination of authorities, (and with the general conclusions of which we heartily agree,) a verdict for $4,850 was sustained where there was no actual battery, but only a gross, outrageous, and protracted assault. But the circumstances of that outrage were so wanton, so vilely abusive, as perhaps to justify the verdict. Here, the expulsion may have been wrongful, but it does not seem to have been wanton, or excessively cruel.

---

Opinion of the Court.

We are constrained therefore to believe that this verdict was excessive, and that the jury, in their anxiety to punish the company for its wrong, have failed to administer equal and impartial justice between it and its passengers.

Was the verdict, or were any of the answers to the special questions, against the evidence? Counsel contends earnestly that some of them were. He challenges, in the first place, the third and fourth answers, and contends that it is clear that Weaver had no ticket when he entered the company's train at New Chicago. Upon this point we think the counsel is mistaken, and that there was testimony sufficient to support these answers. Weaver testifies that he purchased a ticket at Kansas City for Chetopa, and paid between eight and nine dollars for it, and gives the day upon which he purchased. There is no contradictory testimony upon this. It was evidently a coupon ticket, for he says that soon after leaving Kansas City a conductor came along and tore off a portion, and afterward another conductor tore off another portion. Upon cross-examination he says that there were two coupons and a stub to the ticket. When he reached New Chicago he unquestionably had some portion of the paper given him as his ticket at Kansas City. Here he entered the cars of the defendant. Before entering, he presented this paper to the baggage-master, who upon the faith of it checked his baggage to Chetopa. The baggage-master, who was also ticket agent, testified to a conversation with Weaver concerning this paper, which Weaver denies. The conductor took up this paper, punched it, and passed along through the car. He shortly returned, and told Weaver that he had the wrong coupon. There was some talk about a mistake having been made by the conductor on the other road, (the L. L. & G. railroad,) and Hall said he should put himself to no trouble to correct the mistake of that road. Nichols testifies to seeing this paper, that on it was printed, "Kansas City to Chetopa," and also in one corner, in small letters, "Chetopa," and that it was punched. The conductor testifies that Weaver handed him a "portion of a coupon reading from Kansas City to

M. K. & T. Rly. Co. v. Weaver.

Tioga;" that he said to him that it was not good; may have said that it belonged to L. L. & G. road, and did tell him that he could hold the ticket, and that it was as good as a bank note. He says that "punching" generally destroys a ticket, and that he does not recollect whether he punched this ticket or not. The paper itself was lost before the trial. There seems no reason to doubt the good faith and honesty of Weaver. He offered to deposit $100 with the conductor, to be forfeited if his statement as to the purchase of the ticket was not correct. And it is clear that he bought a ticket to Chetopa, and that he had in his possession all that had not been taken off by prior conductors. This remnant was good enough to secure the checking of his baggage, and was taken by the conductor at first as good for his ride. Further than that, the testimony is conflicting. It seems quite probable that the conductors on the L. L. & G. road had removed all the coupons, and left nothing but the stub; but still this is not clear, certainly not so clear as to entirely do away with the presumption arising from the purchase and use of the ticket. We think therefore, the answers of the jury to these questions cannot be held to be against the evidence and wholly unsupported by it.

The answer to the fifth question is challenged, and it is claimed that there was no testimony tending to show a "pass," or that Weaver offered to pay the fare before the stoppage of the train and the commencement of his expulsion. Here we think counsel is correct. There was no pretense that Weaver had a "pass," and the testimony of Weaver and Wells (his witness) heretofore quoted, plainly shows that Weaver's offer to pay was not till after the stoppage of the train and the employes had commenced to eject him. We fail to find any testimony which tends to show any offer to pay before the stoppage of the train and the commencement of the expulsion.

The answer to the ninth question is also challenged, and it is contended that it is clear that no unnecessary violence was offered. We think the testimony discloses about this, that no unnecessary force was used in actually removing plaintiff from the cars, but that after he was landed on the ground there was unnecessary violence done to him. Whether this needless violence was so disconnected from the expulsion as to be wholly a volunteer assault by the brakeman, or a part of the force used to complete the expulsion, by preventing Weaver from getting onto the train, is not clear, though we are inclined to consider it a mere volunteer assault. If a volunteer assault, the answer was not supported by the evidence; if not, it was.

---

Opinion of the Court.

A general verdict was returned. This verdict can be sustained upon either one of three facts, that Weaver tendered a ticket entitling him to a ride, or that before the stoppage of the train he offered to pay his fare, or that unnecessary violence was used in ejecting him. In our review of these facts, it will be seen that we have concluded that the findings of the jury can be sustained as to the first fact, that it is clearly against the testimony as to the second, and probably so as to the third. The first fact however sustains the verdict as against a motion to set it aside on the ground that it is against the evidence. What then should be the disposition of the case in this court? We have found that the damages were excessive, that to each of the three principal questions asked of the jury they answered yes—one of which was clearly not warranted by the testimony, one probably not, and the third only barely supported by the evidence. The mere fact that damages are excessive, and above that amount which the court thinks would be just, is not of itself sufficient ground for a new trial. The statute says, "excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." (Gen. Stat. p. 687, Code, § 306.) But often the amount of the verdict may be so excessive as of itself to indicate passion or prejudice. It may be so wholly disproportioned to the wrong done, and injury sustained, as to be susceptible of no other explanation than that the jury were carried away by an improper eagerness to punish. We are not prepared to say in this case that the mere size of the verdict carries a conviction of that, considering the special duty of care and protection due from the company to the passenger. It would, if the assault were free from that special consideration, and regard were to be had simply to the extent of the injuries received by Weaver. But here, in addition, the state of mind of the jury is disclosed by the answers they returned. Everything was decided against the company, and in favor of Weaver, and decided too in some instances in plain disregard of the testimony. Not content with resolving every doubt in his favor, they answer every question in the same way, and without regard to the facts. This shows that they were not so impartial, so free from passion or prejudice, as to be fit triers of this controversy. It shows that they failed to give due consideration to those matters making in favor of the company; and if they did as to the facts of the case, it tends strongly to show that they did also as to the damages sustained. We are constrained therefore to order a reversal of the judgment, and remand the case for a new trial.

McGlothlin v. Madden.

---

H. H. MCGLOTHLIN V. JOHN H. MADDEN.

1. REPLEVIN—When not Maintainable; Property in Custodia Legis. Where after the expiration of the time for which execution of the judgment of a justice of the peace has been stayed, the justice issues execution under § 12 of chapter 88 of the laws of 1870, against the judgment-debtor and the surety on the undertaking for the stay, and the constable finding no property of the judgment-debtor levies upon the unexempt property of the surety, held, that the latter cannot maintain an action of replevin therefor against the officer. [Westerberger v. Wheaton, 8-169; Bailey v. Bayne, 20-660; Blair v. Shew, 24-280.]
2. EXECUTION AGAINST SURETY, on Justice's Judgment. While the legislature has unquestionably the power to authorize the entry of a judgment as upon confession upon an undertaking to stay execution, it is doubtful whether further legislation directing the entry of such a judgment be not necessary before execution can properly issue against the surety on such undertaking.

Error from Linn District Court.

REPLEVIN, brought by Madden, against McGlothlin, to recover the possession of one horse and one colt which McGlothlin had seized and held upon an execution as constable. The material facts are stated in the opinion. The district court, at the October Term 1874, gave judgment upon demurrer for the plaintiff, and McGlothlin brings the case here on error.

Stephen H. Allen, for plaintiff in error.

James D. Snoddy, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: On the 10th of June 1872, Decker & Bro. obtained a judgment before a justice of the peace against Josiah Sykes. Sykes obtained a stay of execution, Madden, the defendant in error, going upon the undertaking therefor as surety. When the stay expired, the judgment still remaining unpaid, the justice issued execution against Sykes as principal, and Madden as surety, as authorized by §12 of ch. 88 of the laws of 1870, and placed the same in the hands of the plaintiff in error, as constable. The latter, finding no property of the principal, levied as directed by the writ on certain personal property of the surety. The surety brought his action of replevin, claiming that said §12 was unconstitutional, and that therefore the writ was no protection to the officer. The writ was in the exact form prescribed by the statute; so that the only inquiries in the case are, whether the proceedings before the justice of the peace were such as to warrant him in issuing an execution against the surety, and if not, whether that can be determined in an action of replevin against the officer. The latter question seems to be settled by the case of Westenberger v. Wheaton, 8 Kas. 169. In that case the Chief Justice, giving the opinion of the court, uses this language in reference to one portion of the statute: "The object of the clause, as drawn from its language, and from other parts of the section, as well as from the history of the action known as replevin, is to compel a party who desires to test the validity of any judgment or order of a court, or any tax, fine or amercement, or any other mesne or final process, so to do in some other way than by seizing property already in the custody of the law." That language is appropriate to the facts of this case. Here was process issued from a magistrate having unquestionably jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It was in the form of final process—a writ of execution. It recited the fact of a judgment against one party, and also subsequent proceedings by another, and commanded the officer to levy upon the goods of these two parties. It was really a notice to the officer, that the magistrate had adjudged a liability against both the parties. It was final process, which he had issued upon proceedings had before him in matters within his jurisdiction. Now, whether he had erred or not in those proceedings and his adjudications thereon, was a question which under the authority cited could not be raised by an action of replevin against the officer. It was not a case, it may be remarked, where the writ reciting a judgment against "A.," without any semblance of excuse therefor commands a levy upon the property of "B." It recites proceedings against both "A." and "B.," and gives the officer no alternative but to obey the process or review the rulings of the magistrate. We think therefore, under the authority of that decision this action cannot be maintained. As the writer of this opinion was the counsel for the unsuccessful party in the Westenberger case, and strenuously and honestly contended for an opposite doctrine, he is unwilling to do more than rest the decision of this case upon the authority of that.

As to the other question, it may be remarked that it seems clear from the authorities that it is within the power of the legislature to provide that the execution of a bond to stay a judgment shall be taken as the confession of a new judgment upon which final process may issue at the end of the stay without further inquiry. See among many authorities, the following: Ramsey v. Luck, 8 Munford, (Va.) 434; Bank v. Patton, 5 How. (Miss.) 200; Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. (U. S.) 4; Car- ender v. Heirs of Smith, 5 Iowa, 157; Buckman v. Williams, 10 Iredell, 126; Murray v. Edmonston, 6 Jones Law, (N. C.) 515; Williams v. Hall, 2 Dana, 97; Roberts v. Cross, 1 Sneed, 235; Hemigar v. Mee, 4 Sneed, 38; Morgan v. Coleman, 3 Head, 352; Cheatham v. Brien, 3 Head, 53; Robinson v. Yon, 8 Florida, 350. In some cases it would seem that the old judgment was extinguished, and a new judgment entered upon the bond against both principal and stayor. In other cases the stayor simply became a party defendant to the existing judgment. It is immaterial which practice may prevail. The principle which underlies both is the same, that of judgment by confession. And surely, there is no constitutional inhibition upon such judgments. The real question then is, whether the provisions of the statute can fairly be construed as making the proceedings of stay tantamount to a confession of judgment. It is clear that there is no express direction or authority to enter a formal judgment, and it is a matter of grave doubt whether further legislation be not necessary to warrant such an execution against one who has simply signed as surety an undertaking for a stay. We forbear however deciding that question until it is strictly before us.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the answer, and for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The district court sustained the demurrer to the petition, and this is the ruling complained of. The petition is as follows:

(Court, and Title.) "The plaintiff, Thomas Hudson, shows to the court and alleges, that at the time of the committing of the wrongs and grievances hereinafter mentioned, the defendant, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company, was a railroad corporation duly incorporated and acting under the laws of Kansas, and doing business as a public carrier of persons and goods in and through the city of Parsons, in Labette county, and was the owner of a certain railroad known as the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad, together with the tracks, cars, locomotives, engines, depots, freight-houses and appurtenances thereunto belonging; and that said defendant had at said city of Parsons freight-houses and depots for the purpose of receiving, storing and caring for the goods and freight shipped on and over the said railroad, by and for the patrons of said defendant; that said defendant, on February 7th 1874, had in its employ, at the said city of Parsons, one certain Marcus L. Trotter, as agent, whose duty and business it was, under and by virtue of his said employment, to have the care, charge and control over the said freight-houses and depots of the said defendant, and to receive and deliver freight and goods consigned to and delivered at said depot, to or from the proper parties and their agents entitled thereto; and that at the time, and while said freight-house and depot were in the possession of, and under the control of the said Trotter, under and by virtue of his said employment as agent of said defendant, and when said freight-houses and depots were open for the free exit and entrance of persons who had business of any kind or nature appertaining thereto, to transact in or about said freight-houses or depots, and while the said plaintiff was in the due and legal prosecution of his business, on said February 7th 1874, at and in the said freight-houses and depots of the said defendant, with proper orders and authority from Vanmeter & Bro., John Conroy, M. M. Neely, and other merchants and persons, as the hired agent of said persons, and for them asking and demanding of the said defendant, and its agent said Marcus L. Trotter, the delivery of, and to him, the said plaintiff, certain goods and freight which had been shipped and carried on and over the said defendant's railroad for him, the property of said Vanmeter & Bro., Conroy, and Neely, and others in whose employ the plaintiff was, and which goods and freight were consigned to said parties at Parsons, and by said defendant placed in the said freight-houses and depots at said Parsons, the said defendant, by its said agent Marcus L. Trotter, did unlawfully and of force assault, insult, beat, bruise and wound the said plaintiff, by striking him the said plaintiff on his head, face and neck, with a large iron rod or poker, by means of which striking by the defendant the plaintiff was felled to the floor, and the bones of his face and neck fractured and broken, and the defendant by its agent then and there assaulted, struck, kicked, beat, bruised and otherwise misused and maltreated the said plaintiff, by reason of which striking with the iron rod or poker, and the kicking, knocking, beating, bruising and wounding of the plaintiff, by said defendant, and its agent said Marcus L. Trotter, he the said plaintiff became and was sick and disabled for a long space of time, and was obliged to and did expend large sums of money in doctoring and trying to cure himself from the sickness, wounds, and bruises so as aforesaid inflicted and caused by the said defendant, and its said agent, all to his great damage of $8,000—wherefore," etc.

The question of course raised by the demurrer is, whether the facts stated show a cause of action against the company for the assault and battery actually committed by one of its agents. The mere fact that Trotter was in the employ of the defendant at the time of the assault, does not render it responsible therefor. It must appear that the assault was a part of the employment, or in the course of the employment; otherwise the assailant is himself alone responsible. There is no question as to the rule of law applicable, as will appear from the following citations:

"A master is ordinarily liable to answer in a civil suit, for the tortious or wrongful acts of his servants, if those acts are done in the course of his employment in his master's service. The maxim applicable to such cases being, respondeat superior, and that before alluded to, qui facit per alium, facit per se. This rule, with some few exceptions which will hereafter be pointed out, is of universal application, whether the act of the servant be one of omission or commission; whether negligent, fraudulent, or deceitful; or, if it be an act of positive malfeasance or misconduct, if it be done in the course of his employment, his master is responsible for it civiliter to third persons."—Smith's Master and Servant, p. 151.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

"It has already been said that to make the master liable for the servant's negligence, this negligence must be in the course, or, as it is sometimes called, 'scope' or 'range' of the latter's employment."—Law of Negligence, Wharton, § 162.

In Story v. Ashton, 4 L. R. Q. B. 426, Chief Justice Cockburn laid down the rule as follows: "The true rule is, that the master is only responsible so long as the servant can be said to be doing the act, in the doing of which he is guilty of negligence, in the course of his employment as servant."

"A master is not responsible for any act or omission of his servants which is not connected with the business in which they serve him, and does not happen in the course of their employment."—Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 62.

The only difficulty is in the application of this rule to the facts. Was Trotter acting in the course of his employment in making the assault? For it does not appear that it was a part of his employment, that is, that he was employed directly to make the assault. Was it in the line of his duty, and growing out of the services he was employed to perform? He was as it appears in charge of the company's depot. As such it was his duty to remove therefrom all persons improperly there, or improperly conducting themselves, though otherwise lawfully there. If in the supposed performance of this duty, and in ejecting plaintiff from the depot he had improperly ejected him, or had used unnecessary force in ejecting him, the company would have been liable, because he was doing that which the company had employed him to do, acting in the very line and course of his employment, and any mistake or violence on his part was the mistake or violence of his principal, the company. But it is not pretended in the petition that this assault was committed in ejecting or attempting to eject plaintiff. Neither is it pretended that the assault was made in preventing or attempting to prevent the plaintiff from improperly taking away goods, or from committing any injury to the property of the plaintiff, or from transgressing any of its rules for the regulation of its depot or the transaction of its business. It is merely charged that the assault was committed by Trotter upon plaintiff while he was asking and demanding freight which he was entitled to receive. The gist of the complaint is very fairly and forcibly stated by the learned counsel for plaintiff in error when they say, "The plaintiff at the time he received the injury complained of was rightfully in defendant's depot inquiring about and demanding the freight of his principals of and from the said agent of the defendant; and while there, in the prosecution of his duties with the said defendant, and in their depot, he received from the said agent, not the freight of his principals, but the iron poker of the defendant, causing the injury complained of." In other words, Trotter was employed to deliver freight; plaintiff came and demanded freight; Trotter replies to his demand with an assault. Was such assault in the course of Trotter's employment? Did it grow out of any services he was engaged in, or was it in the line of his duty? It seems to us it was clearly disconnected therefrom, and a mere volunteer assault. True, the employment may have given the opportunity and occasion, but it was not an act which in any fair sense the company could have been said to have employed him to do, or to have anticipated that he would do, nor an act which was the act of the company. Reverse the circumstances, and suppose that plaintiff, as the servant and in the employ of certain merchants, went to the depot of defendant in charge of the agent Trotter, to receive their freight, and while so demanding and receiving freight assaulted Trotter with a poker: would the merchants, his masters, and in whose employ he was, be responsible for that assault? Would it have been in the line or scope of his employment? Clearly not. A party goes into a store to purchase goods, and is therefore rightfully there. He makes an inquiry as to the price of an article of a clerk behind the counter, who in reply takes a weight and knocks him down with it. Can this be said to be an act which the proprietor contemplated, when he employed the clerk? That it was in the line of the clerk's employment, and that therefore the employer was responsible? But the cases are parallel. The employment in each furnishes the opportunity and the occasion; but in each the act is not one the agent was employed to perform, nor within the scope of his employment. The general allegation, that the company by its agent made the assault, signifies nothing when the actual facts and circumstances of the assault are disclosed. See upon the general questions here involved, Little Miami Rld. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 110; Baker v. Kinsey, 38 Cal. 631; Malis v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381; *I. P. & C. Rly. Co. v. ### THE STATE OF KANSAS V. ANDREW M. BOWEN.

The State v. Bowen.

1. CRIMINAL LAW; Verdict to be Construed as a Whole. Under an information charging murder in the second degree, this verdict was returned: "We the jury find the defendant not guilty in manner and form as charged in the information, but do find him guilty of manslaughter in the second degree." Held, that all the parts of the verdict should be considered in determining its effect, and that so considered, it was evident that the jury only intended to acquit of the major crime in terms charged, to-wit, that of murder in the second degree, and did not intend to acquit of the lesser offenses, the different degrees of manslaughter included therein.
2. JUDICIAL NOTICE, Taken of all Prior Proceedings in an Action. The court takes judicial notice of all prior proceedings in a case, and it is unnecessary to offer evidence of a former trial, and the verdict returned on such trial, on the hearing of a plea in bar of "once in jeopardy" by such trial and verdict.
3. QUESTIONS OF LAW—Exclusively for the Court. Where the question is purely one of law, it is, although arising in a criminal case, one exclusively for the court.

The State v. Bowen.

4. INFORMATION FOR MURDER; Venue; Place of Death. An information for murder is sufficient which charges the giving of the fatal blow in the county in which the prosecution is had, and the fact of ensuing death, although it failed to allege specifically in what county or state the death took place.

Appeal from Wilson District Court.

INFORMATION for murder—the information charging that Bowen, “at the county of Wilson, on the 10th of October 1874, with a double-edged dagger or stiletto, purposely and maliciously did inflict two mortal wounds in and upon the side and abdomen of one John Hoppeler, then and there being, of which said two mortal wounds the said John Hoppeler afterward, and on the 13th of October 1874, died.” Plea, not guilty. There were two trials—the first at the November Term 1875, at which a verdict was set aside and a new trial granted. A second trial was had at the February Term 1876. Verdict, “guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree,” and Bowen was sentenced to “imprisonment in the county jail for a period of nine months.” From this judgment and sentence the defendant appeals.

Kirkpatrick & Hudson, for appellant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Appellant was convicted of manslaughter in the fourth degree, under an information charging murder in the second degree; and from such conviction brings this appeal. Three questions are presented.

I. Two trials were had. Upon the first, the jury returned the verdict, “We the jury find the defendant not guilty in manner and form as charged in the information, but do find him guilty of manslaughter in the second degree.” Upon this defendant moved to be discharged, on the ground that, as murder includes all the degrees of manslaughter, the information in fact charged all those degrees, and the first part of the verdict finding him “not guilty in manner and form as charged," was responsive to all the charges, and acquitted him of guilt, not only as to murder, but as to all the degrees of manslaughter; and that therefore the latter part of the verdict must be disregarded as surplusage. The point was not well taken. The verdict must be taken as a whole, and its meaning determined from a consideration of every part. So taken, there is no chance for misconception as to the meaning of the jury. It finds the defendant guilty of a crime, and states the crime of which it finds him guilty. That crime is included in the offense charged, and the verdict of guilty is good under the information. So much as declares the defendant not guilty, is plainly, when taken in connection with the other part of the verdict, to be limited to the major offense in terms charged.

II. After the motion to discharge defendant had been denied, a motion for a new trial was sustained. Before the second trial the defendant entered a plea in bar of "once in jeopardy," and by it presented anew the question of the effect of said verdict. Upon this plea he demanded that the state be compelled to demur, or reply, and also that a jury be called to try the truth of the plea; but the court refused. Now whatever might have been the proper course, if the plea had raised a question of fact to be settled upon evidence, we see nothing in the ruling here of which defendant has cause to complain. All that was presented was as to the effect of a prior proceeding in the case. Upon this, no testimony was required, because the proceedings of record had in a case are always taken judicial notice of. It was a question of law, as to the effect of a certain verdict, which it was proper for the court to determine; and changing the mere form of presenting the question, did not affect the right of the court to determine it.

2. Judicial notice taken of all prior proceedings.

3. Questions of law.

III. It is claimed that the information is insufficient, in that it fails to allege the place of the death. It charges that on the

4. Indictment; homicide; place of death. 10th of October 1874, at the county of Wilson, the defendant inflicted two mortal wounds upon John

---

The State v. Bowen.

---

Hoppeler, of which wounds the said Hoppeler afterward, and on October 13th 1874, died, but it does not charge that he died in Wilson county, or in the state. Hence it is said, that as the offense of murder or manslaughter is consummated only by the death of the party assailed, the place of the death is as important as the place of the assault, and that a failure to allege the one is as fatal as a like failure to allege the other. Waiving any question as to the effect of the second clause of §110 of the criminal code, (Gen. Stat., p. 838,) and conceding that except upon a strained and unnatural construction there is no allegation as to the place of Hoppeler's death, we still think the information must be sustained. It does not appear that any question was raised in the district court as to the sufficiency of the information. The defendant plead "not guilty," and went to trial upon it. Perhaps this is immaterial, and the defendant has waived nothing. There has been much confusion and conflict as to the jurisdiction and power to punish in cases in which the fatal blow is given in one county or state, and death ensues in another county or state. So far as counties are concerned, the statute settles all question. (Gen. Stat., p. 824, §29.) It is however silent as to cases in which the wound is given outside the state and death ensues within, or the reverse. In The State v. Carter, 8 Dutch. 400, the power of the state to punish, was denied in a case where the fatal blow was given in New York and the injured party voluntarily came into New Jersey and there died. On the other hand, the power was sustained under similar circumstances in the cases of Tyler v. The People, 8 Mich. 320, and Commonwealth v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 1, in which last case is a very full and exhaustive examination of the authorities, English and American. In the case in 8 Mich. is a dissenting opinion by Judge Campbell, whose judgment in criminal cases is entitled to the highest consideration, in which he holds the law to be, in the absence of statute, that jurisdiction to punish for the homicide is in the state and county in which the fatal blow was struck. In Riley v. The State, 9 Humph. 646, the supreme court of Tennessee decided that according to the principles of common law, where the fatal blow was given in one county, and death ensued in another, jurisdiction of the homicide was in the first county. In State v. McCoy, 8 Rob. Rep. 545, followed in State v. Foster, 7 La. An. 255, and same cases in 8 La. An. 290, the supreme court sustained the jurisdiction where the fatal blow was given within but death ensued without the state. They rested their decision however, it should be said, upon the act of the legislature of 1805 adopting the common law of England, which they construed as including a statute of 2 Geo. II, upon this matter. In The People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 637, where intermediate the blow and the death a change in the statute had been made, the crime was held to be of the date of the blow, and governed by that law. See also, Grosvenor v. St. Augustine, 12 East, 244; 1 Bishop Cr. Law, §§112, 116; 1 Bishop Cr. Procedure, 51, 52, and cases cited on both sides of the question. It seems to us, without pursuing the authorities further, reasonable to hold that as the only act which the defendant does toward causing the death is in giving the fatal blow, the place where he does that is the place where he commits the crime, and that the subsequent wanderings of the injured party, uninfluenced by the defendant, do not give an ambulatory character to the crime; at least, that those movements do not, unless under express warrant of the statute, change the place of offense; and that while it may be true that the crime is not completed until death, yet that the death simply determines the character of the crime committed in giving the blow, and refers back to and qualifies that act. It follows, that there was no error in rendering a judgment against the defendant upon this information. No other question being presented the judgment must be affirmed.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

THE CITY OF OSWEGO v. W. H. BELT.

1. CRIMINAL TRIAL; Verdict, or Finding, of "Not Guilty," Conclusive. In a criminal prosecution, where the defendant has pleaded not guilty to the charge, and where the case is submitted to the court without a jury for decision, either upon testimony or an agreed statement of facts, and the court finds the defendant not guilty, such finding is conclusive, and cannot be set aside and a new trial granted either upon appeal or by petition in error. Error from Labette District Court.

COMPLAINT against Belt for selling intoxicating liquors without license. The district court, at the May Term 1875, found defendant not guilty, and The City of Oswego brings the case here for review.

Nelson Case, for plaintiff.

F. A. Bettis, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Defendant was charged with selling liquor without a license in the city of Oswego, in violation of an ordinance of said city. He was convicted on a trial before the police judge of the city. On appeal to the district court, the case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts to the court, who found the defendant not guilty. The city seeks by petition in error to reverse this acquittal, and secure a retrial of the charge. This cannot be done. City of Olathe v. Adams, 15 Kas. 391.

THE MISSOURI VALLEY LIFE INS. CO. v. DAVID KELSO.

1. LIFE INSURANCE; Contract—Stipulations—Policy Obligations. A life-insurance policy issued on the joint lives of husband and wife for $5,000 to be paid to the survivor, contained the following stipulation, to-wit: "And the said company promises and agrees that if default shall be made in the payment of any premium after the second annual payment, it will issue a paid-up policy for a sum equal to the full amount of the ordinary annual premiums so paid at the time of such default, provided written application be made therefor, and this policy and all interest therein be surrendered within three months of the day of such default." The first two annual premiums were paid, amounting to the sum of $570. The third annual premium was not paid. The original policy was then surrendered, and the proper application was made for a paid-up policy in accordance with the terms of said stipulation. The company failed and refused to issue said paid-up policy. The insured then assigned their claim to the plaintiff: Held, That the company should have issued to the insured a paid-up policy for the amount of $570.
2. ——— Breach of Contract; Liability. By failing and refusing to issue said paid-up policy, the company rendered themselves liable to an action by the insured for damages for breach of their contract, or for the specific performance of their contract, at the option of the insured.
3. ——— Measure of Recovery. In the action for damages where both of the insured are still living, a judgment cannot be rendered for more than the survivor of the insured would be entitled to at the end of their joint lives, if the paid-up policy had been issued.
4. ——— Damages. Ordinarily, in an action for damages, in such a case, where both the insured are still living the plaintiffs should recover an amount as damages which would be sufficient to purchase just such a policy as was stipulated for in a good and responsible life-insurance company.
5. ——— In such a case it devolves upon the plaintiff to prove damages, and where no damages are proved, the plaintiff can at most recover only nominal damages.
6. Assignment, by Assured. The claim for damages against the insurance company, in such a case, is assignable.

Error from Labette District Court.

THE FACTS fully appear in the opinion. Trial at the May Term 1874. Findings and judgment in favor of Kelso for $614, and the Insurance Company brings the case here on error.

T. A. Hurd, for plaintiff in error.

W. C. Webb, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: On the 23d of March 1871, the plaintiff in error issued to Joseph A. Cox and Mary Cox a joint life-policy of insurance in the sum of $5,000, loss payable to the survivor, the annual premium on which was $285, payable on or before the 23d day of March in each year. The first and second annual premiums were paid, but the premium which became due March 23d 1873 was not then paid, nor has it since been paid. In the body of the policy is a stipulation in these words:

“And the said company promises and agrees, that if default shall be made in the payment of any premium after the second annual payment it will issue a paid-up policy for a sum equal to the full amount of the ordinary annual premiums so paid at the time of such default, provided written application be made therefor, and this policy and all interest therein, be surrendered within three months from the date of such default.”

In the body of the policy were several conditions, the 2d, 3d, and 5th being in the words following:

“2d. If the said premiums shall not be paid at or before 12 o'clock noon, on or before the day above mentioned for the payment thereof, at the office of the company, or to agents when they produce receipts signed by the president or secretary, then and in every such case, the company shall not be liable for the payment of the whole sum insured, but only such parts thereof as is expressly stipulated above, and the remainder shall cease and determine.

“3d. In case this policy shall cease and become null and void, all payments thereon shall be forfeited to the company.”

“5th. If this policy is assigned or held as security, written notice shall be given to the company, and due proof of interest produced with proof of death.”

A complete copy of the policy is attached to the answer.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The assured, on the 21st of April 1873, returned the policy to the company for the purpose of obtaining a paid-up policy. The policy has ever since remained with the company, and no paid-up policy has ever been issued. The policy was not assigned to the plaintiff below, nor ever delivered to him. On the 23d of January 1874, the assured made a written assignment, as follows:

“For value received we hereby transfer and assign to David Kelso our claim and account amounting to $579, with the interest thereon, against the Missouri Valley Life Insurance Company.

JOSEPH A. COX,
“Oswego, Kansas, January 23d, 1874. MARY COX.”

The insurance company now claims that neither the petition below, nor the evidence, shows any cause of action in favor of the plaintiff below and against the insurance company. We however think they both do. The fault of the insurance company was, in failing and refusing to issue a paid-up policy in accordance with the terms of its agreement. And this failure and refusal we think the petition sufficiently alleges, and the evidence sufficiently proves. A correspondence was had between the company and the insured with regard to the issuing of a paid-up policy prior to any default on the part of the insured, and the correspondence was continued until after such default. The company seemed to be entirely willing to issue a paid-up policy until April 23d, 1873, when its secretary wrote and sent the following letter to the insured, to-wit:

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS, April 23d, 1873.

J. A. Cox, Oswego, Kansas.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of your favor of the 21st instant, with policy 2870, for commutation. We discontinued the issue of joint policies a year ago, and consequently have no blanks of that form. We would be glad to issue you a paid-up policy of increased amount upon the life of either yourself or Mrs. Cox, if such an arrangement could be effected. Please let us hear from you.

Truly yours, J. I. JONES, Secretary.

No offer was subsequently made by the company to issue a paid-up policy on the joint lives of Cox and his wife. And no

---

Life Insurance Co. v. Kelso.

paid-up policy of any kind was ever in fact issued. This letter we think proves that the insured made the proper application for a paid-up policy, and it, together with the fact that the company never issued such paid-up policy, proves that the company were in default. And this default we think furnished a sufficient basis for a cause of action. But it is claimed that an action for damages cannot be maintained, but only an action for the specific performance of the contract. Now we should think that the insured would have his election as to which kind of action he would bring. He might not want a paid-up policy in an insurance company that had already violated its contract with him. He might not consider a policy in such a company as very valuable. But whatever his opinion might be, we would think that he would have the right to sue the company for damages for the breach of the contract, or to sue the company for a specific performance of the contract, at his option.

But probably the most difficult question in an action for damages, such as this, is, what should be considered the measure of the damages? In the present case the paid-up policy should have been issued on the joint lives of Cox and wife, and under it the survivor would have been entitled at the death of the other to the sum of $570. But when such death would occur, or when this sum would become due, of course no one can tell. It might be on the same day on which the policy were issued, or it might not be for fifty years thereafter. Evidently then, while both the parties are living, they should not be entitled to recover in an action for a failure to issue the policy more than one of them would be entitled to recover on such policy at the death of the other. In fact, it would not seem that they would be entitled to recover as much. The use of the money is surely worth something. If one of the parties should die before judgment were rendered, then the amount of the judgment should probably be the amount for which the policy should have been issued, together with interest from the date of such death. If however both of the parties were living at the date of the judgment, the judgment should probably be for a sum which would purchase such a policy in a good and responsible life-insurance company. But if no evidence should be introduced—and that is the case—to show what such a policy could be purchased for, then we would think that the judgment should be rendered for nominal damages only. It always devolves upon the plaintiff to prove his case, and to prove his damages; and where he does not do so he can at most recover only nominal damages. In the present case, the insured are both still living, and there was no evidence introduced to show what their damages were. We would therefore think that it would hardly be fair that the plaintiff should now recover, because of said failure to issue such paid-up policy, more than either of the parties could ever under any circumstances recover under or by virtue of the said paid-up policy if the same had been issued. As we have before stated, the amount for which the policy should have been issued was $570. The court below however rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for $614 and costs. And this was done without any evidence or finding showing specifically what the damages were. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and no evidence was introduced showing what the damages were, and the only finding of the court is in the following words, to-wit: "It is the finding of the court therefrom, that the plaintiff's petition is true, and that he is entitled to the judgment therein demanded." The defendant moved the court for a new trial upon nearly all the statutory grounds, but the court overruled the motion. In this we think the court erred. And the court also erred in rendering the judgment it did.

Opinion of the Court.

---

As the cause of action in this case arose out of contract, and is for damages to be paid in money only, we suppose there can be no question as to its assignability.

The judgment of the court below will be reversed for the errors above mentioned, and cause remanded for a new trial.

facts: On January 13th 1873, the "Iola Bridge Company" (a duly-organized corporation,) owed the plaintiffs the sum of $980.65; and on that day the secretary of the defendant, B. M. Smith, and the vice president thereof, Daniel M. Adams, executed said note to the said plaintiffs for said sum. The note purports on its face to be the note of the defendant; but it is signed only by "Daniel M. Adams, V. President," and "B. M. Smith, Secretary." Smith then caused an entry of the note to be made in the "bill book" of the defendant, and three entries thereof to be made in the ledger of the defendant. But the same were afterward canceled by order of certain other officers of the defendant. There is no evidence that Smith and Adams, or either of them, ever had any authority from the defendant to execute or sign said note, except the general power they had as officers to sign notes in proper cases. And there is no evidence that the defendant ever ratified their acts. The plaintiffs had no actual knowledge of any want of power on the part of Smith and Adams to execute said note, but they received the same in good faith. About the time this note was signed, but whether before, or after, is not very clearly shown, the defendant bought of the Iola Bridge Company its goodwill, and certain property, and assumed and agreed to pay certain indebtedness of said Iola Bridge Company, but the claim of the plaintiffs was not included in said indebtedness. The witness Ennis testifies: "The claim of Ehrgott & Krebs was never mentioned, and I am quite positive that their claim was not assumed at any meeting of the board of directors or stockholders." There is no evidence that the defendant ever assumed or agreed to become responsible for the payment of said note, or said claim of the plaintiffs, further than we have already stated. There was some evidence contained in the deposition of the witness Mills, and possibly some in the deposition of the witness Gress, tending to show that the defendant assumed and agreed to pay the plaintiffs' claim; but all of such evidence was stricken out by the court, and was not permitted to be read to the jury. We do not think that the court committed any error in this respect; but still, as the question is not presented to us by the plaintiffs' brief, it is not necessary to decide the same. The only question therefore, for this court to decide, is merely this: Where certain officers of a corporation, (for the defendant is a corporation,) having general authority to execute promissory notes for their corporation in proper cases, but having no authority in the particular case in question, do, in a transaction having no connection with the corporate business, and not authorized by the corporation, and without any consideration going to the corporation, execute in the name of their corporation to a third person who has no actual knowledge of their want of authority a promissory note for a claim which such third person holds against another and a different corporation, is the first-mentioned corporation liable on said note to the payee thereof, where there has been no subsequent ratification by the corporation of the acts of its officers? We answer this question in the negative. Rahn v. Bridge Manufactory, ante, p. 277.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

Error from Montgomery District Court.

ONE Seth B. Doane commenced an action in the district court of Montgomery county against one Richard Bird, and obtained therein an order of attachment, which Stone, as sheriff, levied upon a stallion and a filly, as the property of said R. B., and took them into his possession. Thereupon Albert Bird, as plaintiff, brought replevin against Stone to recover possession of said stallion, claiming ownership and right of possession in himself. Trial at the December Term 1874. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Stone brings the case here on error.

Turner & Ralstin, for plaintiff in error.

Nathan Cree, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The question in this case is, whether at the time of the seizure the property in controversy belonged to Richard Bird, or to the plaintiff, Albert Bird. Said Richard and Albert were father and son, the latter being at the time of the attachment, 22 years of age. Up to that time they had lived together, and upon the father's farm. The horse was a stallion of some speed, and had been driven in a race or two, the father handling and training him. Albert claimed to have bought the animal when a colt from his father, and given him two calves in exchange. Several witnesses were permitted to testify in behalf of the plaintiff, that prior to the seizure he claimed the horse as his, stated that he owned him, and what he intended to do with him; and the admission of this testimony is alleged as error. We quote the testimony of one witness, Robert Bates, which perhaps is as open to criticism as any:

1. Evidence; striking out improper answer.
"I am acquainted with the parties herein, and the horse and filly. They belong to Albert Bird. He has owned them always, so he told me. Don't know only what Albert Bird told me. Have known Albert Bird a little less than two years. He told me several times within the last year that he owned the horse, and a year ago last August he showed me the horse, and said the horse was his—said he always owned him; he said he considered the horse valuable."

At the close of the entire testimony on behalf the plaintiff, appears the statement, that "All the foregoing testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, proving or tending to prove the statements of plaintiff on his own behalf, were objected to at the time they were offered," etc. The questions propounded to these various witnesses are not preserved; and there is nothing in the record, other than as quoted, tending to show in what manner the question was presented to the court for its decision, or upon what its ruling was made. Now in support of the ruling of the court, it may be said that if a proper question is asked, and an improper answer given to it, the only way to get rid of that answer is by motion to strike it out. Simply objecting to its being received, raises no question for the court to act upon. (Hynes vs. Jungren, 8 Kas. 391.) Thus, supposing in the case before us the question had been asked the witness, "To whom do these animals belong?" No objection to it could have been sustained. It would have been a perfectly legitimate and proper question. If to that the witness had answered, as we find in the record, that "They belong to Albert Bird; he has owned them always, so he told me; don't know only what Albert Bird told me"—merely objecting to the answer, would have raised no question for the court to act upon, even though a part of the answer was conceded to be improper. The only way to have brought the matter properly before the court for decision, would have been by a motion to strike out the improper part. And that much of the testimony objected to must have come in, in this way, seems probable. Indeed, it seems wholly improbable that questions could have run, not merely to every sentence in the testimony, but also to every clause in each sentence. And the first clause in each sentence of the testimony quoted, and very generally through the entire testimony, seems to be not only perfectly competent and proper testimony, but naturally responsive to a perfectly legitimate and proper question. Again, it may be remarked, that while as a general rule the declarations of a party are not admissible in his own behalf, yet an exception to the rule exists where the declarations accompany some principal fact which they serve to qualify or explain, and are thus said to be a part of the res gestæ. And the exception has been held to cover cases where the possession of personal property has been a principal fact in the case. Oden v. Stubblefield, 4 Ala. 42; Thompson v. Mcwhinney, 17 Ala. 366; Nelson v. Iverson, 24 Ala. 9; Upson v. Rasford, 29 Ala. 188; Overseers, &c., v. Overseers, &c., 2 Caine, 106; Willis v. Farley, 8 Car. & Payne, 395; Yarbrough v. Arnold, 20 Ark. 592; 1 Phillips on Ev. (C. H. & Edw. Notes,) p. 188, and note. In this very case a considerable portion of the testimony of the defendants consisted of the statements and declarations of Richard Bird made while in possession of the declarations of party.

Opinion of the Court.

---

Stone v. Bird.

horse, and tending to show a claim of ownership by him. A common application of this exception is in the case of a party charged with larceny, where recent possession of the stolen property is a principal fact in the evidence of the state. The defendant may offer in his own behalf proof of the statements he made while holding that possession, in explanation and qualification of it. It may be that some of the testimony objected to in this case, may be upheld as coming within the terms of this exception. We do not decide that either this exception, or the proposition we first suggested, make it perfectly clear that no error was committed in the admission of testimony. It may be that some of the testimony was nothing more than the mere declarations of plaintiff, disconnected from the actual possession of the horse, and in no way qualifying or explaining any act of his in connection with the animal. And it may be that such testimony was admitted over objection in response to a question as improper as the answer; or that in some other way a direct ruling of the court was obtained in such a manner as to preserve the error. But we are in so much doubt upon these matters, that we are constrained to hold that no error is apparent. The party who alleges error must make it clear that there was error, otherwise the presumptions in favor of the rulings of the district court will compel an affirmance.

A second proposition of counsel is, that the verdict was against the evidence. This claim cannot be sustained. The only positive and direct testimony as to the ownership, was from Albert and Richard Bird, and both testified that the animal belonged to the plaintiff. It is true, this testimony was very much shaken by the other evidence in the case; but still upon the whole case a fair question of fact was presented to the jury, and their decision thereon is conclusive.

Again, it is claimed that no demand was alleged in the petition, and none proved on the trial. The petition was in the ordinary form in replevin, alleged in general terms that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession, and

Opinion of the Court.

4. Replevin; demand and refusal. that the defendant wrongfully detained the property. It did not attempt to specify how the defendant obtained possession, or under what claim he held it.
Under those circumstances it was unnecessary to specify what particular fact, whether demand, or other matter there was, that made the detention wrongful. The testimony of plaintiff was, that when the officer came with the writ against Richard Bird and took the horse, it was in his (plaintiff's) possession, and that he told the officer it was his, and forbade him to take it. The officer denied this. Upon this the court charged that a demand was necessary, unless at the time of the seizure the officer was notified that the property belonged to the plaintiff and not to defendant in the attachment. Of this we think the plaintiff in error has no cause of complaint.
A writ against A. gives the officer no authority to take the property of B. And if the officer takes the property of B., and is notified at the time that it is the property of B., the taking is unlawful, and the subsequent detention wrongful.
The circumstances under which demand is necessary have been recently considered by this court in the case of Shoemaker v. Simpson, ante, p. 48, and it is unnecessary to enlarge upon the matter here.

4. Agreeing to a verdict on Sunday. A final objection is, that the verdict was returned on Sunday. The journal entries show that the proceedings were had upon Saturday and Monday; but an affidavit of one of the attorneys of the defendant was filed on the motion for a new trial, alleging "that the verdict of the jury in the above-entitled case was arrived at by the jury and returned into open court on Sunday, the 20th day of December 1874, between the hours of 12 o'clock midnight and 10 o'clock A. M., and about 20 to 30 minutes past midnight." There is nothing other than this affidavit tending to show that any proceedings were had on Sunday, or that all proceedings were not, as appears by the journal entries, on Saturday and Monday. Though we were to concede that this affidavit must be taken, even against the journals, as conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated, still we should be constrained to sustain the verdict. The question is not one of morals, or propriety, but one of strict law. Does the fact that the jury, at the close of a trial had during the hours of Saturday, fail, after retiring to consider of their verdict, to agree before midnight, do not actually arrive at and return their verdict until the close of the half-hour thereafter, vitiate the entire proceedings, and compel a new trial? The question as to how far judicial proceedings are vitiated by being had on Sunday, has been frequently before the courts. In Bass v. Irwin, 49 Geo. 436, a verdict received on Sunday was declared a nullity. In Arthur v. Mosby, evidence was received, the case submitted to the jury, verdict returned, and judgment rendered on Sunday, and the proceedings were set aside and a new trial ordered. In Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Greene, (Iowa) 410, the charge was given to the jury, the verdict returned, and judgment entered on Sunday, and they were held erroneous. In Shaw v. McCombs, 2 Bay, 232, a verdict received on Sunday was set aside, but in the subsequent case of Heller v. English, 4 Strobbart, (S. C.) 486, the court, in an elaborate opinion, after saying that the opinion in 2 Bay was incorrectly reported, sustained a verdict agreed upon and returned into court after midnight of Saturday, and before morning of Sunday. In Huidekoper v. Cotton, 3 Watts, 56, a verdict returned at 5 o'clock Sunday morning was held good. In the following cases verdicts returned on Sunday were held good: Commonwealth v. Marrow, 3 Brewster, 402; Cory v. Silcox, 5 Ind. 370; Rosser v. McColby, 9 Ind. 587; McCorkle v. The State, 14 Ind. 39; Houghtaling v. Osborn, 15 Johns. 119; *Baxter v. The great weight of authority goes to this extent, (and it is sufficient to sustain the proceedings in this case,) that where the trial is completed by the introduction of testimony, the arguments of counsel, and the charge of the court, and the case has passed to the jury for consideration before midnight of Saturday, the fact that they do not finally arrive at and return a verdict until

CITIES; REASSESSMENT OF SPECIAL TAXES; Power to Reassess, after Injunction Decreed; Legislative Authority. Where in consequence of the omission of some statutory prerequisite which the legislature might in the first instance have dispensed with, the assessment proceedings taken by a city to collect from certain lots the cost of improvements on the street in front of said lots are defective, and the city is in consequence thereof enjoined from collecting the special taxes thereon, and where it appears, that the improvements were among the ordinary objects of municipal government, and it is not inequitable that the adjoining lots bear the burden thereof, that there was no fraud in the contracts for the work, no excessive expenditures, and no inequality or injustice in the apportionment, held, that the city might, notwithstanding said injunction, and after the passage of an act of the legislature curing such defects and granting new authority, proceed by a reassessment and levy to collect from said lots the cost of said improvements. [Assessment, etc., under curative acts, see Hines v. City of Leavenworth, 3-186; City of Emporia v. Norton, 13-569; post, 498. Error from Lyon District Court.

THE City of Emporia levied certain special taxes or assessments in 1871 to pay for certain street improvements which had been constructed under a contract with the city. The collection of these taxes was perpetually enjoined by decree of the district court, at the April Term 1872, at the suit of Bates and nine others, abutting lot-owners. In July 1872 the mayor and council of said city passed an ordinance for the reassessment of said taxes, and in August thereafter said city council reassessed the same. This action was commenced in December 1872, to enjoin the collection of said reassessed special taxes, the plaintiffs, Bates and others, claiming that such reassessment was an evasion of the injunction previously decreed. Trial at the October Term 1873. Judgment and decree in favor of plaintiffs, and the City of Emporia appeals, and brings the case here on error.

J. Jay Buck, for plaintiff in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This case is stated by counsel for plaintiff in error, to be in all respects save one, similar to the case of the same plaintiff in error against Norton and others, heretofore decided by this court and reported in 13 Kas. 569. An examination of the record seems to support the statement of counsel; and as no brief is filed for the defendants in error, and no question made as to the correctness of the statement, we shall assume it to be true. It will be needless therefore to consider any of the questions considered in that case, either upon the hearing, or the motion for a rehearing, (ante, p. 236.) The point of difference is this: It appears that subsequent to the first proceedings of the city to assess and collect the special assessments, an injunction suit was brought to restrain the city from collecting said assessments, in which suit a final judgment was rendered as prayed for, enjoining the city from collecting said assessments, which judgment was not appealed from, and remains in full force and effect. Thereafter, to subject the lots to the payment of the same improvements, and after the curative legislation of 1872 noticed in the opinion in 13 Kas. 569, the city proceeded to a reassessment and relevy; and it is claimed that the former judgment operates, on the principle of res judicata, to prevent such reassessment and relevy. The defect in the prior proceedings was in this, that no estimate of the cost of the improvements was ever made by the city engineer, or submitted to the city council. It was not pretended that the improvements were not among the ordinary objects of municipal government; or that there was any fraud in the contracts; or that it was inequitable that the adjoining lots should bear the burden thereof; or any excessive expenditures, or any inequality or injustice in the apportionment. There was simply the omission of one of the statutory prerequisites to a valid assessment. Now the injunction restrained any further proceedings to collect the tax under that assessment; but it does not appear that it went beyond that. The city is not disobeying that injunction. It has abandoned that assessment, and does not seek to collect any tax under it. But it is attempting, by new proceedings, and under new authority from the legislature, to charge upon and collect from the lots the cost of the improvements made in front of them. That this may be done, is clear. In State v. City of Newark, 34 N. J. 86, a similar question was presented, and in deciding it the court uses this language: "The contention is, that this court having in 1868 set aside the assessment made against the prosecutor for the improvement in question, the judgment then pronounced cannot be nullified or rendered inoperative by act of the legislature. The legal proposition is undoubtedly correct. The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be reversed, avoided, or set aside by the legislative power. The question here is, whether the act of 1868 properly considered, has the effect ascribed to it. It must be borne in mind that the act does not revive or attempt to render valid the assessment which this court has declared illegal and set aside. It simply orders a new and independent assessment to be made to collect moneys which the city had expended for the benefit of the prosecutor and others. It leaves the judgment of the court upon the first assessment untouched. Its effect is not to nullify the judgment of this court, but to reimburse the city, by means of a subsequent assessment, for moneys expended in improving a street. I know of no provision of the constitution which restrains the legislature from passing an act authorizing such an assessment, and thus compensate a municipality for benefits conferred." See also, Howell v. City of Buffalo, 37 N. Y. 267; Mills v. Charlton, 29 Wis. 400. In this last case the court says: "The reassessment of a tax, the proceedings for the collection of which have once failed, is not a reopening of the judgment by which such former proceedings were declared invalid. Such judgment remains a perpetual stay of the proceedings to enforce the first assessment; but it only affects that assessment, and does not operate upon new proceedings subsequently taken to reassess. It is a judgment merely in abatement of the original proceedings, and by which they are annulled, and not one affecting the groundwork or basis of the tax itself, upon which the legislature may again proceed in the exercise of its unrestricted power over the subject. The original proceedings having failed for reasons which the legislature may lawfully obviate, and the basis for taxation still remaining, namely, the public benefit or improvement received, for which the legislature say the property of the citizen should pay, a reassessment may be authorized."

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Comm'rs of Sedgwick Co. v. Bunker.

The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in error, defendants below. It is understood that the next three cases on the docket—City of Emporia v. N. Whittlesey and others, City of Emporia v. I. D. Fox and others, and City of Emporia v. H. Conner—are similar, and the same judgment will be entered in them.

Original Proceedings in Mandamus.

PETITION for a mandamus filed in this court in December 1875 by the Board of County Comm'rs of Sedgwick Co., as plaintiff, to compel Bunker, as county clerk of Harvey county, to enter upon the tax-roll of his county, and against the taxable real estate therein which was detached from Sedgwick county and included within the new county of Harvey created by §5 of ch. 97, Laws of 1872, (p. 184,) certain taxes certified to him. An alternative writ was issued. Bunker answered, and among other reasons for not inserting said taxes, he submitted that, at the time said territory was detached from Sedgwick and included in Harvey county there was no law requiring Harvey county nor any part thereof to pay any portion of the bonded indebtedness of said Sedgwick county; and second, that ch. 142 of the laws of 1873, under which the plaintiff levied the taxes in question, "does not provide for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation," in this, that it "provides for the assessment and taxation of real property only, exempting from taxation the personal property situated upon the territory detached from said Sedgwick county and attached to Harvey county, and that by reason thereof said ch. 142 of the laws of 1873 is null and void." The case was heard upon an agreed statement of facts, which sufficiently appear in the opinion.

W. E. Stanley, for plaintiff.

C. S. Bowman, and H. W. Cook, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: On the 29th of February 1872, the county of Harvey was created, and in establishing the boundaries thereof a certain strip of territory was detached from the county of Sedgwick, and incorporated into the county of Harvey. (Laws of 1872, p. 184, § 5.) At the same time, and by the same act, the legislature specifically expressed their intention that said detached territory should not be relieved from any obligation which it was then under to pay its proper proportion of the railroad bonded indebtedness previously incurred by said Sedgwick county; (§ 6 of said act.) And only three days prior to that time the same legislature, by a general law, expressed its intention that no detached territory should, by reason of any change in county boundaries, be released from the payment of its just and equitable proportion of any indebtedness previously incurred by the county to which it had formerly belonged. (Laws of 1872, p. 180, § 9.) But the legislature failed to make its will and intention as expressed in these acts effective, as applied to this particular case. The provisions by which the legislature attempted, in the act creating Harvey county, to make its said will and intention effective, were not covered by the title to the act, and were therefore unconstitutional and void. (Sedgwick County v. Bailey, 13 Kas. 600.) And the general law above mentioned (Laws of 1872, p. 177, et seq.,) applies only where county lines are changed by the county commissioners and a vote of the people, and not where new counties are created and county lines changed by a special act of the legislature. Said strip of territory was therefore left by the legislature under a supposed moral obligation to pay its proportionate share of the said bonded indebtedness of Sedgwick county, but without any legal means of enforcing such moral obligation. Now in all cases, as we understand the law, where the legislature divides a county without making any legal provision for a division or apportionment of the debts or property thereof, the old county pays all the debts, and takes all the property. (Larmie Co. v. Albany Co., recently decided by the supreme court of the United States, 13 Albany Law Journal, 229.) But we do not understand that the legislature is in all cases and under all circumstances bound to make the provision for such division or apportionment of the debts and property in the same act by which they divide the county. They may certainly provide for such division or apportionment by a general law passed previously to the act dividing the county. And in some cases and under some circumstances we think that they may, by either a general or special act, make provision for such a division or apportionment even after the act dividing the county has itself been passed. Why should they not have such power, where the very act dividing the county expressly contemplates such a thing? Probably in such a case the county would not be divided except for such contemplated division and apportionment. It would seem that when the legislature divides a county, and attempts in the same act to make an equitable apportionment of the debts, but fails to do so merely because of a failure (as in this case) to make the title of the act comprehensive enough to include the provision making such apportionment, then the legislature should have the power by a subsequent act to provide for such apportionment. Perhaps the legislature would have the power to do so indirectly, by reannexing the detached strip to the old county, and then detaching it again. But they ought to have the power to do the same directly, for doing it indirectly and in such a manner would seem like trifling. But subsequently to the passage of the act dividing Sedgwick county, and on March 8d 1873, the legislature passed the following act, to-wit:

"SEC. 1. All bonds heretofore or hereafter legally authorized and issued by a vote of its electors in any county or township, shall become and be a lien upon all the real estate in such county or township for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds.

"SEC. 2. No person or property hereafter attached by a change of boundary lines to any county or township wherein any bonds previously authorized by a vote of the electors of such county or township shall have been previous to such change of boundary lines legally issued, shall be subject to taxation for the payment of the principal or interest of such bonds.

Comm'rs of Sedgwick Co. v. Bunker.

"SEC. 3. All real estate heretofore or hereafter detached by a change of boundary lines from any county or township, wherein any bonds shall have been previous to such change of boundary lines legally authorized and issued by a vote of the electors of such county or township, shall be subject to taxation for the payment of such bonds and the interest thereon, in the same manner as though no such change of boundary lines had been made.

"SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the county clerk of every county from which any real estate shall be detached, as soon as it shall be determined, to certify to the county clerk of any county to which any such real estate shall have been attached, the per centum of tax to be levied for the payment of any bonds, or interest thereon, issued, as in the last section described; and such tax shall be levied and collected by such last-mentioned county from the real estate so attached thereto, the same as other taxes, and when collected, shall be paid over to the county treasurer of the county to which such taxes belong."—(Laws of 1873, p. 267, ch. 142.)

Prior to the passage of the act of 1872 detaching said territory, Sedgwick county had subscribed to the capital stock of the Wichita & Southwestern Railroad Company to the amount of $200,000, and had received from the railroad company that amount of stock; and had, in consideration therefor, legally issued to the railroad company $50,000 of the bonds of the county, and had also "signed, executed and placed in escrow" $150,000 more of the bonds of said county "to be delivered to the [said] railroad company whenever they complied with the terms and conditions prescribed in the [said] subscription." At the time of the passage of said act of 1872 said terms and conditions had not yet been fully complied with, and said $150,000 of bonds had not yet been delivered. But afterward said terms and conditions were fully complied with, and on June 1st 1872 said bonds were duly delivered to said railroad company.

The question now to be considered is, what force and effect has said act of 1873, with reference to the liability of said strip of territory to pay a proportion of the indebtedness created by the issue of said $50,000 of bonds, and said $150,000 of bonds. That is, to what extent does said act apply to this case? and if to any extent, is it constitutional and valid? That that act covers and applies to the indebtedness created by the issue of $50,000 of bonds, we think is clear beyond all doubt. But it is not so clear that the act covers and applies to the rest of said indebtedness. That the $50,000 of bonds were legally issued and delivered to said railroad company prior to any change of boundary lines, we think the evidence sufficiently shows. But it can hardly be said that the $150,000 of bonds were issued prior to that time; and if not, then the act of 1873 does not apply to them. (See §8 of said act of 1873.) At the time said boundary lines were changed, said $150,000 of bonds were held in escrow, having no force or effect as bonds. And whether such bonds would ever have any force or effect as bonds depended upon a contingency which might or might not happen, and whether it would happen or not, no one could foretell. At the time when said boundary lines were changed no one could tell whether any indebtedness would ever accrue on said $150,000 against said Sedgwick county, or not. And therefore, as to these bonds, we hardly think the act of 1873 applies. Even if we should assume that a moral obligation rests upon said detached territory to assist in paying said bonds, still we do not think that it would assist the plaintiff in this case, for the courts cannot enforce merely moral obligations where no legal obligation exists. And if there was any such moral obligation the legislature should have known it, and should by unmistakable language have made the act of 1873 broad enough to provide for enforcing it. That is, they should have converted the moral obligation into a legal obligation. But as they did not do so, although they had the subject under consideration, it would seem that they did not intend that such moral obligation should be enforced. We therefore think that the act of 1873 applies only to the $50,000 of bonds, and to that extent we think the act is constitutional and valid. There is no constitutional provision in this state against retrospective legislation. And therefore, the legislature may in many cases pass retrospective laws to enforce previously existing moral obligations. And we think we have already shown that this is one of such cases, unless some special provision of the constitution can be found interdicting this particular kind of legislation. The only special provision of the constitution supposed to interdict this kind of legislation, to which we have been referred, is that portion of § 1 of article 11 which provides that "The legislature shall provide for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation." We are inclined to think this provision of the constitution cannot in the nature of things be made to apply to the same extent to exceptional cases like this, as it does to the ordinary cases of assessment and taxation. Wherever and whenever in the nature of things this provision can be made to apply, we think it ought to be made to apply, and it ought to be made to apply to the fullest extent possible. But where in the nature of things it cannot be made to apply, legislation with regard to taxation should not be declared void merely because it does not apply to the fullest extent. When a debt is created against a county, all the taxable property therein, real and personal, becomes liable to pay the same. The real estate becomes permanently liable, (except for subsequent legislation,) because the owner thereof cannot remove it out of the county; but the personal property does not become so liable, for personal property may be removed out of the county at any time at the pleasure of the owner. If the legislature should change the boundary lines of any county, and in doing so should set off a strip of the territory thereof to some other county, then the legislature might at the same time enact that such strip should continue to be liable for the payment of its share of the debts of the county to which it formerly belonged, or the legislature might entirely relieve such strip from all such liability. And it would seem that the legislature ought to have the power to relieve such strip from a portion of such liability, and to continue its responsibility for the other portion. At least, it would seem that the legislature should have the power to say that the real estate shall continue liable, and the personal property not. It would hardly seem that the detached territory should complain because of such an arrangement, for the taxpayers of the strip would have no more taxes to pay on their real estate in proportion to its value than the taxpayers of the county from which the strip was taken would have to pay on their real estate, and they would have nothing to pay on their personal property. They would have the advantage of the taxpayers of the county in not having any personal-property tax to pay. Not taxing the personal property of the strip, however, makes the tax on all the other property, both of the county from which the strip is taken, and the strip itself, higher than it otherwise would be. But as such a thing would not make the tax void as to the taxpayers of the county, could it make it void as to the taxpayers of the strip? But suppose the personal property of the strip should also be taxed: then must the personal property brought onto the strip after its separation from the county be also taxed? It was not liable for any debt of the county before the separation. Perhaps if the strip had remained attached to the county it never would have been brought onto the strip, and therefore never would have been liable for any tax or debt of the county. Perhaps the detaching of the strip had a controlling influence in bringing such property onto the strip. Then should such property be taxed to pay such debt? The debt may not be due for thirty years after the detaching; and should property brought onto the strip twenty or thirty years after its separation from the county, be taxed to pay an old debt of the county? These are probably questions for the legislature, and not for the courts. But even if any portion of the personal property situated on said strip should not be taxed to pay said debt, then the uniformity of taxation contended for by the defendant would be destroyed. Where a strip of territory is detached from one county, and attached to another, and is made liable for a portion of the debts of the county from which it is detached, such detached territory becomes a taxing district of itself for the purpose of raising revenue to pay its proportionate share of said debts; and the tax levied for such purpose in said taxing district should be made as near equal and uniform as in the nature of things and under the circumstances of the particular case it could well be done. A wanton violation of the rule of uniformity in taxation, would probably even in such a case render the taxes void. Where a county is divided, the rule for the division and apportionment of the debts and property between such county and detached territory belongs exclusively to the legislature, and not to the courts; and when the legislature has determined how the debt and property shall be divided and apportioned, the courts cannot interfere.

Comm'rs of Sedgwick Co. v. Bunker.

A peremptory writ of mandamus will issue in this case to the defendant, commanding him to place upon the tax-roll of his county the amount of taxes which should have been charged against the real estate of said detached territory for the years 1874 and 1875. The questions with regard to the taxes for the years 1872 and 1878 have been determined in other cases; Sedgwick County v. Bailey, 11 Kas. 631, and 13 Kas. 600; and we shall not reconsider such questions in this case.

BREWER, J.: I concur in the judgment, but am not prepared to assent to all the propositions discussed in the opinion.

Appeal from Saline District Court.

THE facts and proceedings in this case fully appear in the opinion. Trial at the November Term 1875. The State brings the case here on appeal.

John Foster, and J. G. Mohler, for The State.

T. F. Garver, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: This action was commenced by information filed by the county-attorney of Saline county, November 8d 1875, charging that the defendant "on the 12th day of August 1875, in Saline county aforesaid, did unlawfully and willfully obstruct a public road, to-wit, a public road established by a statute of the state of Kansas, entitled, 'An act to establish certain state roads,' and subdivision 13 of section 2 of said statute, and which said statute was approved February 27th 1866, and that said public road was located on or about the 17th of November, 1866." The case was tried before the court, without a jury. The court, by request, made special findings of fact and conclusions of law, and found as conclusions of law—“1st, That the law mentioned in the information, and upon which the proceedings of the road in question are founded, is void.

---

The State v. Cummerford.

---

“2d, That there is and was at the time mentioned in the information no public highway as therein alleged.

“8d, That the defendant is not guilty as charged.”

The court then rendered judgment discharging the defendant. The state by its counsel then requested the court to tax the costs of the case to the prosecuting witness, which the court refused to do, and the court taxed the costs made by the state to the county. The state saved proper exceptions to all the rulings of the court below, and now brings the case to this court for review.

We suppose this action was prosecuted under §17 of the road laws of 1874; (Laws of 1874, 171.) This section of the road law provides among other things that any person who “shall willfully obstruct” any public road shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine and imprisonment. Now, passing over all other questions, was the defendant guilty of willfully obstructing any public road? We think not. In the vicinity of said supposed road a large portion of the community have never believed that the road has ever had any legal or valid existence. They have believed that the act under which it was laid out was unconstitutional and void. They have believed that the road was never legally established under the act. And it is certain, that the road has never been opened by any competent authority. There are no public records anywhere sufficiently showing it to be a public road, and there has never been any considerable amount of travel upon it. The defendant owned the land when and where said supposed obstruction was created, and now owns the same. And believing that no legal public road ever existed in that place, he plowed up his land where said supposed road was located, along with his other land, and planted corn thereon. The said supposed obstruction consisted of hard wood posts, set in the ground across said road, four or five feet apart, and each extending about three feet above the ground. The defendant placed these posts there merely for the protection of his crops, and not with any intention, willfully or otherwise, of obstructing a public road. We therefore do not think that the defendant was guilty of willfully obstructing any public road.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The question whether said act of the legislature is valid or not, and whether said road was legally laid out or not, are too important to be decided upon a slight investigation of the same; and it is not necessary to decide them in this case. Before deciding them we would prefer to have them elaborately argued before us. Even the question, whether the said conclusion of law of the court below, "that the defendant is not guilty as charged," is conclusive, or not, is a question of too much importance to be decided now and in this case. In this case the court below made special findings of fact, and this was only a conclusion of law from said facts, and therefore the case of the City of Olathe v. Adams, 15 Kas. 391, does not decide this question. In that case the only finding made by the trial court was a finding for the defendant.

The plaintiff also claims that the court below erred in rendering a judgment against the county for the costs of the case made by the state, and in not rendering judgment against the prosecuting witness for all the costs. Now this is a question in which the defendant is but very little interested; and the parties really interested in the question are not before the court. Before we can order a judgment to be rendered against the prosecuting witness for costs, we must have the prosecuting witness before us. Ex parte Polster, 10 Kas. 204; Ferguson v. Smith, 10 Kas. 394; Hodgson v. Billson, 11 Kas. 357. He should have an opportunity to be heard in this court.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

Error from Neosho District Court.

THIS action was commenced in April 1872, in the district court of Neosho county, by the Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Rld. Co., as plaintiff, against Thomas Leahy, the then treasurer of Neosho county, to enjoin the collection of taxes for the year 1871 which had been assessed and levied on about 125 sections, or 80,000 acres, of the Osage Ceded Lands lying in said Neosho county, which lands said Railway Company claimed to own in fee, but which plaintiff claimed were not subject to taxation for said year 1871. Plaintiff claimed that it had received said lands under the act of congress of March 3d 1863 granting lands to the state of Kansas to aid in the construction of certain roads and telegraphs, and the act of the legislature of the state of Kansas, approved February 9th 1864, (Laws of 1864, p. 149; Gen. Stat., p. 885,) and by virtue of the treaty between the United States and the Great and Little Osage Indians, concluded 29th September 1865, and proclaimed January 21st 1867, and by virtue of constructing its railroad through said lands to the south line of the state of Kansas—but claimed that it did not so construct such road to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the acceptance of the Governor of Kansas, until December 1871, and that the patents from the state of Kansas to plaintiff for said lands were not executed until March 1872. The case came here on appeal from an order of the district court sustaining a de-murrer to plaintiff's petition. (L. L. & G. Rld. Co. v. Leahy, 12 Kas. 124, decided at the July Term 1873.) This court reversed the order of the district court; but in regard to the real merits of the controversy, as disclosed by the facts alleged in the petition, the court (12 Kas. 126) said:

"There is nothing in all this which tends to show that these lands were taxable in 1871, or to limit the previous general allegation [in the petition] that they were not subject to taxation for that year. It does present however a very serious question as to whether it does not show that the company has no title whatever to these lands, and therefore has no right to maintain this action. It does not appear from this petition whether these lands are all within, or all without, or part within and part without, the limits of the tract formerly owned by the Osage Indians, and covered by the provisions of the treaty of 1865. If they are without those limits then it is easy to see how title could pass by the grant of congress, the acceptance by the state, and the construction of the road. If they are within, then it may not be so easy to see how any title could thus pass to the company. Outside of this case, (for counsel are silent in their briefs as to the effect of the treaty provisions on the question of title, and in fact ignore the treaty entirely,) we are aware that a grave controversy is pending as to the title of these lands. We know as a matter of public history, as well as from the petition, that the secretary of the interior has declared that the title to the lands covered by that treaty did pass to plaintiff on the completion of its road; and we do not decide that it did, or that it did not. We shall not decide a question of that importance until it is fairly before us." *

[* REPORTER'S NOTE.—The brief opinion in the case in the text, The L. L. & G. Railroad Co. v. Coffin, Treasurer, &c., renders it unnecessary to insert counsels' briefs wherein the whole merits of the case are discussed at length. But the history of the legal contests with respect to the title and conflicting claims set up to said Osage Ceded Lands, is hardly completed with the mere publication of the final decision in the Coffin case. A portion of this history, and a discussion of many of the questions involved, will be found in the reported cases of Wood v. M. K. & T. Rly. Co., 11 Kas. 323; L. L. & G. Rld. Co. v. Leahy, Treasurer, &c., 12 Kas. 124, and Lownsberry v. Rakestraw, 14 Kas. 151, heretofore decided in this court. In the Wood case in 11 Kas., the title of the Railroad Companies to any of said Osage Ceded Lands, either under the act of congress of March 3d 1863, the Osage treaty of 1865-1867, or the act of the state legislature, and patents issued thereunder, was denied by counsel for Wood, and in the Leahy case, in 12 Kas., it was questioned by the court; and in the case in the text, the counsel for Coffin, Mr. HURON-INGES, submitted an elaborate brief, in which, in reference to said act of March 3d 1863, granting certain lands to the state of Kansas to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and under which act the Railroad Company claims title, he says:

"At that time the land described in the petition was a part of a large tract reserved under the treaty of June 2d 1825, (7 U. S. Stat. at Large, 240,) for the use and occupancy of the Osage

The case being remanded, and the term of office of Leahy, the former treasurer, having expired, Charles Coffin, his successor in office as county treasurer, was substituted as defendant. And thereafter, at the April Term 1874, the action was submitted to the district court upon an agreed statement of facts. The district court held that under the agreed facts, and the pleadings, the plaintiff did not have any title to or interest in the lands, and consequently could not maintain the action; and judgment was rendered against the plaintiff for costs. To reverse this judgment the plaintiff brought the case to this court. The petition in error was filed May 21st 1874, but the Indians so long as they might choose to occupy the same. These Indians were entitled to the perpetual and exclusive use of the reservation. * * * It will scarcely be contended that the government could have granted what it did not at the time possess; and it has been decided by the highest authority that a legislative grant does not amount to a warranty. Rice v. Railroad, 1 Black, 359; Polk's Lessee v. Wendell, 9 Cranch, 99; 5 Wheaton, 33; Patterson v. Finn, 11 Wheaton, 388. The lands embraced in the treaty of June 2d 1825 were reserved to the Osage tribe of Indians forever, if they chose to occupy them. Could this legislative grant then, made in 1863, be construed to anticipate and convey any title that the government might obtain in the contingency that the Osage Indians in some indefinite future might choose to occupy the lands no longer? The plaintiff (the L. L. & G. Railroad Co.) in the numerous contests concerning these lands has attempted to anchor its claim to a grant through this reservation to some opinions of Attorneys-General BLACK and CUSHING, to the effect that such a grant carries the land subject to the Indians' right of occupancy. These opinions would seem to be in conflict with the authorities just cited, and also with the well-established doctrine 'that whenever a tract of land shall have once been legally appropriated for any purpose, from that moment the land thus appropriated becomes severed from the mass of public lands, and no subsequent law, or proclamation, or sale, would be construed to embrace it, or to operate upon it, although no reservation were made of it.' (Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Peters, 498; Spalding v. Martin, 11 Wia. 271.) However this may be, we regard it unnecessary to examine or make any refinements upon the possible difference between military reservations (to which the last cases refer) and Indian reservations like that made by the treaty of June 2d, 1825; (though as impliedly denying any difference, see Wolcott v. Navigation Co., 5 Wall. 681; Williams v. Baker, 17 Wall. 144;) for in the act of March 3d 1863 there is an express reservation of these lands, which puts the question of the legislative intendment beyond a doubt. This reservation is in the form of a proviso to the first section and follows closely the granting-clause of the act."

He then examines the Osage Treaty of 1865-1867, and contends that said treaty does not warrant the claim set up by the railroad companies, that the title of said companies to said lands under the act of March 3d 1863 is "recognized" by said treaty. And he argues, that as the act of March 3d 1863 by its terms excludes the idea of a grant through the Osage Ceded Lands, neither the treaty-making power, nor a subsequent congress, could by negotiation or enactment "recognize" or construe such act into a grant, unless such subsequent enactment or negotiation would itself amount to a grant independent of the act of 1863—and he denies that the treaty of 1865, the joint resolution of April 10th 1869 (16 U. S. Stat. 55,) or the act of April 19th 1871, (authorizing the L. L. G. Railroad Co. to relocate a portion of its road south of Thayer,) or all three together, constitute a grant. And this was the opinion generally entertained by the members of the bar and district judges in southern Kansas, for a long time before any action or proceeding was instituted in the United States courts to contest the claims set up by the railroad companies to said Osage Ceded Lands.

As early as 1871 the settlers on the Osage Ceded Lands in Neosho and Labette counties organized as the "Settlers' Protective Association," for the purpose of contesting the validity of the alleged title of the M. K. & T. Railway Co., and the L. L. & G. Railroad Co., to said lands. Said association was active in prosecuting or defending on behalf of the settlers all actions between settlers and the railroad companies concerning said lands. Public meetings were held. The state legislature, congress, and the executive government of the United States, were petitioned or memorialized to grant relief to the settlers, until finally, on the 19th of January 1874, Hon. GEORGE H. WILLIAMS, Attorney General of the United States, issued an order to the District Attorney of the U. S. for the District of Kansas, "to commence suits in the name of the United States against the L. L. & G. Railroad Co. and the M. K. & T. Railway Co. for the purpose of testing the validity of certain grants which said companies allege have been made to them of lands known as the 'Osage Ceded Lands' in the State of Kansas, and for the purpose of obtaining the cancellation of patents or other evidence of title held by said companies to said lands." Upon receipt of this order, and on the 25th of February 1874, Hon. GEORGE R. PECK, U. S. District Attorney for Kansas, for the government, with Hon. WILSON SHANNON of Lawrence, and Messrs. MCCOMAS & MCKEIGHAN of Fort Scott, as counsel for the settlers, commenced two actions in the United States circuit court, in the name of The United States as complainant, in one of which The Leavenworth, Lawrence & Galveston Railroad Company was defendant, and in the other of which The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company was defendant. [Two days after these suits were commenced the Kansas legislature appropriated $2,500 "to the treasurer of the Settlers' Protective Association," for the purpose of aiding the settlers to test the validity of the title claimed by said railroad companies; Laws of 1874, p. 13.] Hon. SOLON O. THACHER appeared for the L. L. & G. Rld. Co., and Hon. T. C. SEARS for the M. K. & T. Rly. Co. They submitted substantially the same defense, claiming title under said act of 2d March 1863, and treaty of 1865-67, and the provisions of the act of the legislature of the state of Kansas, passed in 1864, (Gen. Stat., p. 585.) The patents to the M. K. & T. Rly. Co. were issued in June 1870; those to the L. L. & G. Rld. Co. were issued in March 1872. Said actions were so instituted and prosecuted to set aside and annul the certificates from the Secretary of the Interior, and said patents issued to said railroad companies by the Governor of Kansas, and to perpetually enjoin said railroad companies respectively from setting up any claim, either legal or equitable, in or to any of the lands situate and being within the boundaries of said Osage Ceded Lands. The cases were argued before Justices MILLER and DILLON, at the June Term 1874 of the U. S. Circuit Court, (two months subsequent to the decision made by Judge GOODIN in the Coffin case.) On the 22d of August 1874, the decision of Justices MILLER and DILLON, in favor of the settlers' claim, and against the title of the railroad companies, was announced. From this decision the railroad companies appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the cases were there heard and submitted at the October Term 1875. The decision of that court however was not announced until April 10th 1876. The decision of the circuit court was affirmed. The opinions of the court were delivered by Mr. Justice DAVIS, five Justices concurring. (Justices FIELD, SWAYNE, and STRONG, dissented.) The majority opinions are published in full in the Central Law Journal of June 23d 1876, pp. 403, 407. The propositions decided are as follows:

1. Cancellation of Patents.—Where patents have been issued by the officers of the government without authority, the United States may file a bill in equity and maintain such suit in its own name to set them aside.

2. Construction of Land Grants.—Grants of lands by congress will be construed strictly, and will not extend beyond the meaning and intent expressed in the act. If a grant admit of different meanings, that will be accepted which is more favorable to the grantor.

3. ——— Words of Grant.—The words, "there be and is hereby granted," vested a present title in the state of Kansas, though a survey and location were necessary to give precision to it, and attach it to any particular tract. After the location of the road, the grant became certain, and by relation had the same effect upon the selected parcels as if they had been specially named at the date of the act.

4. Rights of Indians.—The Indians have the unquestionable right of the lands they occupy until that right is extinguished by voluntary cession to the government.

5. Osage Lands.—On a construction of the treaty of the United States with the Osage Indians of June 2, 1825, and the subsequent treaty with the same Indians of January 21, 1867, and the act of congress of March 3, 1863, granting lands to the state of Kansas to aid in the building of railroads, Held, that lands which, under the said treaty of 1825, had been set apart and reserved for the said Indian tribe, and which was in their actual use and occupancy, did not pass under the said railroad grant. Congress did not intend that this grant should reach the Osage lands, further than to allow the company to construct its line of road through them.

6. Innocent Purchasers.—That money has been advanced on the faith of the title, cannot be considered. The title to land is not strengthened by giving a mortgage upon it; nor can the fact that a mortgage has been given throw any light on the title of the mortgagor.

JOHN C. DOUGLASS V. EDGAR NUZUM.

1. ACTION TO QUIET TITLE; *Possession of Plaintiff. In an action to quiet title under § 594 of the code, the plaintiff must allege and prove an actual possession by himself or tenant. [Eaton v. Giles, 5-24; Sale v. Bugher, 24-434; Pierce v. Thompson, 26-714.]
2. ——— When Land is Vacant. An action to quiet title may be maintained by the holder of the legal title, when he is not in possession, if the premises be vacant and unoccupied. [Keith v. Keith, 26-41; Pierce v. Thompson, 26-714.]
3. ——— Pleading; Title; Necessary Facts. The relief in these cases is of a kind given under the old practice only in courts of equity; and in cases outside the limits of the statute, (such as are mentioned in the last preceding proposition of this syllabus,) the same facts must be stated substantially as in a former bill in equity.
4. ——— Issue; Naked Averment of Adverse Claim. Equity will not, upon the mere allegation of the existence of an adverse claim, examine its nature and extent, and determine as to its sufficiency. [Howe Machine Co. v. Miner, 28-445; Allen v. Douglass, 29-412.]
5. ——— If the adverse claim is based solely upon proceedings of record which are void upon their face, and which by no lapse of time or change of condition can ever become other than thus void, there is no case for equitable interference. But where such claim is apparently valid, and can be shown to be void only by testimony aliunde, especially if it be parol testimony, where it rests upon proceedings which however irregular may result by lapse of time in an instrument, evidence prima facie or conclusive, of the regularity of those proceedings, such as a tax-deed under our statute, and indeed wherever it is of a character to cast doubt or suspicion upon the title of plaintiff, or seriously embarrass him either in maintaining his rights, or disposing of his property, equity will grant relief.
6. ——— A petition, therefore, in such a case, should show the nature of the defendant's claim, if known; and if not known, should aver ignorance thereof, and pray a discovery.
7. ——— Practice; Objection to Sufficiency of Petition. Where the defect in a petition to quiet title is, that it omits such essential matters as are named in the last subdivision of the syllabus, it is not waived by a failure to demur, or cured by an answer alleging title in defendant, but may be taken advantage of by an objection to the introduction of any testimony under the petition.

THE CASE ON RE-HEARING.

8. TAX TITLES; *Rights of Holder of Tax Certificates; Duty of County Clerk. Where all the prior proceedings are regular and legal, and the time for redemption has passed, the holder of a tax certificate is entitled to a deed in the legal and statutory form, one that shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity of such prior proceedings; and if through mistake or inadvertence one substantially departing from that form is executed, the county clerk can thereafter be compelled by mandamus, and may without it, to execute a deed in the correct and statutory form. Neither the power nor the duty of a county clerk, is exhausted by the execution of an irregular and imperfect deed. [Corbin v. Bronson, 28-532.]

9. ——— Where A., B., and A., are for three successive years respectively the purchasers of the same tract at the tax sales, each deed issued thereon may be good as against the original owner of the land. [Morrill v. Douglass, 14-293.]
10. Costs, on Reversal of Judgment. A judgment of reversal in this court, in favor of plaintiff in error who was defendant in the court below, will carry all the costs of this court, although the defendant sought affirmative relief in the lower court, and a large part of the "case made" is composed of the testimony offered by him in support of his claims for affirmative relief, and although the reversal is ordered because of error in granting the plaintiff any relief under his petition, and no adjudication is made upon the defendant's claims.

Error from Jefferson District Court.

ACTION by Nuzum against Douglass and two others, to quiet his title to the S.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of sec. 28, township 7, range 18, in Jefferson county. The answers of the defendants, and the proceedings in the district court, sufficiently appear in the opinion. The district court, at the May Term 1873, gave judgment in favor of Nuzum, as prayed for in his petition, and Douglass brings the case here for review.

John C. Douglass, plaintiff in error, for himself, among other propositions contended, that Nuzum's petition was fatally defective. In support of the proposition, that the petition should set forth the defendant's title if known, and aver that it is void, or if unknown aver that fact before asking discovery, he cited Story Eq. Jur., §§ 700a, 64 to 74a; Nash Pl. & Pr. 52, 661; 4 Johns. Ch. 437; 1 Danl. Ch. Pr. 377, 412; 7 Wheat. 522; 3 Monroe, 188; 20 Mo. 429; 2 Comst. 123; 4 Hen. & Munf. 423; 7 Ves. 16; Story's Eq. Pl., § 227; 9 Paige, 388; 3 J. J. Marsh. 284; 11 Peters, 229; 16 Ohio, 190, 449; 10 Yerg. 218; 13 Simons, 245; 7 Conn. 342; 7 Kas. 233; 7 Vt. 357.

W. W. Guthrie, for defendant in error, submitted that, as Douglass had answered the petition, and set up a title in himself, and thereon an issue of title alone was joined and fully tried and determined, neither party can complain that such issue was not properly joined; (Parrish v. Ferris, 2 Black, 606; Reedy v. Gift, 2 Kas. 392, 400;) and that having by his answer pleaded title in himself, and set up specifically his muniments, viz., three certain tax-deeds, Douglass is concluded by such assignment, and must stand on his title as so pleaded: Hall v. Kellogg, 16 Mich. 135, 138. He cannot now take any advantage of any supposed defect in the petition.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Defendant in error brought his action in the district court of Jefferson county for the purpose of quieting his title to certain premises. He filed a petition making plaintiff in error, Patrick M. Lyon and S. S. Cooper defendants, in which he alleged that he was the owner and held the legal title to the premises, that they were unimproved and unoccupied by any one, and that the defendants were "setting up and claiming some estate and interest in and to said real estate adverse to his estate and interest." The prayer was, that the defendants might be compelled to show and disclose their title or interest, and that it be adjudged void, and his title declared to be full and perfect. The separate answer of defendant Douglass contained, first, a general denial, and then what is called a cause of action and counterclaim against the plaintiff and his co-defendants, in which he alleges that he is the owner in fee simple, and in peaceable possession of the premises, and that the plaintiff and the co-defendants claim some interest adverse to him, the nature of which he is ignorant of, but which he avers to be null and void. He then alleges the execution of three tax-deeds, two of which are set out in full, claims the benefit of the statute of limitations as to them, and closes with this prayer for relief:

---

Douglass v. Nazum.

"Wherefore, by reason of the foregoing and other muniments of title, defendant prays that his title in and to said land, and his possession of the same, and his right to said possession, may be quieted, and that all claim and interest, or pretended claim and interest of said plaintiff may be determined and adjudged to be void," etc.

To this answer, or at least to all except the general denial, a reply was filed, containing a general denial, and then pointing out specific objections to the tax-deeds. When the case was called the defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence, for the reason that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which objection the court overruled, and defendant excepted. Was there error in this? This it must be borne in mind is not an action under the statute. By § 594 of the code, a party in possession may maintain an action against any person who claims an adverse interest. But possession in that section means actual possession. Eaton v. Giles, 5 Kas. 24. It would seem that this language was broad enough to cover any adverse claim, whether based upon color of title or not, though as that question is not before us we pass it for further consideration. Shepardson v. Supervisors, &c., 28 Wis. 593; Holbrook v. Winsor, 28 Mich. 394. Whether also it is necessary in a petition under that section to set out the nature of the defendant's claim, and the grounds of its invalidity, or allege ignorance of its nature and pray a discovery, or sufficient simply to allege that the defendant claims an adverse interest, does not now demand a decision. See upon the question, Wales v. Grosvenor, 31 Wis. 681, and Holbrook v. Winsor, supra. Nor is this action brought under § 118 of the Tax Law of 1868, (Gen. Stat., p. 1057.) That section authorizes an action to recover possession against any one placing a tax-deed on record. It is immaterial in such an action whether the holder of the tax-deed be in possession or not. Probably the statutory petition for the recovery of real estate would be sufficient in such case, and proof of the record of the tax-deed would be conclusive upon the matter of possession. Under that section a man in actual possession may maintain an action to recover possession from one who was never on the land. The plaintiff in this case is proceeding independently of these statutes. He is seeking a character of relief not given under the old practice in courts of law, but only in courts of chancery, and he must show such a state of facts as under the rules of equity-practice would entitle him to relief. Would equity interfere upon the mere allegation that defendant had an adverse claim, investigate its nature, and determine as to its sufficiency? Clearly not. Only when it appeared that there was a cloud upon the title, would the chancellor act. If the adverse claim was based upon proceedings of record, void upon the face, and such as by no lapse of time or change of condition could become otherwise than thus void, there was no cause for equitable interference. There must be something to "cast doubt or suspicion upon the title, or seriously embarrass the owner, either in maintaining his rights, or in disposing of his property." A deed from one who has no shadow of title casts no cloud. Stark v. Chitwood, 5 Kas. 141. "The rule is well settled, that when a defect appears upon the face of the record through which the opposite party can alone claim title, there is not such a cloud upon the title as to call for the equitable powers of the court to remove it. But when such claim appears to be valid upon the face of the record, and the defect can only be made to appear by extrinsic evidence, particularly if that evidence depends upon oral testimony to establish it, it presents a case for invoking the aid of a court of equity to remove it as a cloud upon the title." Ward v. Dewey, 16 N. Y. 519. So also, where the claim rests upon proceedings which, however irregular, may result through lapse of time in an instrument, evidence prima facie or conclusive of the regularity of those proceedings, such as a tax-deed under our statutes. Hibernia S. & L. Society v. Ordway, 38 Cal. 679. See further upon these points, Mayor, &c. v. Meserole, 26 Wend. 132; Van Doren v. The Mayor, &c., 9 Paige, 388; Scott v. Onderdonk, 14 N. Y. 9; Hatch v. City of Buffalo, 38 N. Y. 276; Allen v. City of Buffalo, 39 N. Y. 386; Crooke v. Andrews, 40 N. Y. 547; Levy v. Hart, 54 Barb. 248; Barron v. Robbins, 22 Mich. 35; Shepardson v. Supervisors, &c., 28 Wis. 593; Dunklin County v. Clark, 51 Mo. 60;

Douglass v. Nuzum.

Springer v. Rosette, 47 Ill. 228. If equity will not interfere in all cases of adverse claim, it would seem to follow that the petition should show something more than the mere fact that defendant makes an adverse claim. It ought to disclose such a state of facts as calls for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction. It should allege the nature of defendant's title or claim, and show how it operates as a cloud; or, if it is unknown, this should be alleged, and a discovery prayed. See in addition to authorities heretofore cited, King v. Higgins, 8 Or. 406; Wales v. Grosvenor, 31 Wis. 681; Holbrook v. Winsor, 23 Mich. 394. It is impossible to anticipate and therefore to notice all the circumstances and cases in which an adverse claim calls for the exercise of the powers of a court of chancery. All that can be said is, that it must appear that the plaintiff's rights may be endangered unless the defendant's claim is judicially determined to be null and void. If this claim is known, it should be disclosed, that the court may see the danger. If unknown, it should be alleged to be unknown, and the defendant called upon to disclose it. It is unnecessary to inquire what would be the result if the claim was alleged to be unknown and proved to be known. It seems to us therefore, that this petition, inasmuch as it fails to show the nature of the defendant's claim, or allege ignorance of its character, is insufficient, and does not state a cause of action.

Was the defect waived by a failure to demur, or cured by an answer setting up title in defendant? We think not. The objection to the petition is not, that it is not sufficiently definite and certain, in which case a failure to move that it be made definite and certain waives the defect, but that it wholly omits certain essential elements of a cause of action. This a failure to demur does not waive. Nor does the answer help the plaintiff. True, if the parties had without objection gone to trial upon the pleadings, it might perhaps have been thereafter too late to object. It may be that they would have been held bound by the issues they had once accepted and tried, and been estopped to say that neither in the petition nor answer was there a sufficient statement of a cause of action to call for judicial determination. Plainly, there was a claim of title on both sides, and an allegation of possession on the part of the defendant, with a denial thereof on the part of the plaintiff. This cannot be deemed a case where the defect of the petition is cured by the allegations of the answer, for the allegation of the answer is of full title in defendant, based partially it is true upon certain tax-deeds which may or may not be valid, but only partially upon such deeds, and is therefore an allegation inconsistent with the averment and claims of the the petition, and if true entirely overthows such petition. It seems to us therefore, that the objection was in time, and should have been sustained. For these reasons the judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings. As we cannot anticipate in what shape the case may be again (if at all) presented for trial, we shall not stop to examine the numerous tax-deeds offered in evidence, and the many questions arising thereon discussed by counsel in their briefs.

THE CASE ON RE-HEARING.

THE foregoing opinion was filed June 28d 1875, but as defendant in error, Nuzum, immediately filed a motion for a rehearing the opinion was withheld, (and mandate reversing the judgment below recalled,) to abide the argument and decision on said motion for rehearing. Said motion was argued in October 1875, and is now decided.

W. W. Guthrie, for defendant in error, in support of his motion for a rehearing, submitted: This motion is made upon the belief that the question of practice, upon which alone this court ordered a reversal, was not the full consideration to which this case was entitled, even should the court feel compelled to change what has been considered its former holdings upon such question of practice. It should be the policy of a supreme court to decide all questions necessarily involved in determining the case, which are contained in the record, at least when ordering a reversal; and rather to aid the final determination of controversies than to pass upon questions outside the merits of the controversy, and leave litigants in doubt as to when their "day in court" shall end. In this case, while but one state of facts existed, each party, by his pleading, made an independent action for affirmative relief, and only the determination of both cases thus made could be an examination of the decision of that case presented in the record. Nuzum sued quia timet, standing on a full legal title, and the land vacant. Douglass answered, denying Nuzum's case, and then by counterclaim sued quia timet, standing on a full legal title, and actual possession, and, as his title set up, (with proper exhibits) three several recorded tax-deeds. Nuzum by reply joined issue on the case made by Douglass. On trial, Nuzum tendered his patent in evidence, and proof of land being vacant, Douglass objected that the petition did not state a case, and over his objection the evidence was received. Douglass then offered evidence in support of his case, and which covers 100 pages of record, and Nuzum in rebuttal offered evidence. The district court found for Nuzum, and decreed that his title be quieted.

Douglass v. Nuzum.

The entire record makes a "case made," costing $69 to copy, and was a trial of every question of title between the parties on issue tendered by Douglass on his counterclaim. This court holds the petition bad—that the admission of evidence in favor of Nuzum was error—and here stops with an order for a new trial. What was done by this court with the issue joined on the action set up in Douglass' counterclaim, and the decision of the district court thereon? Such issue was tried, decided, and that case is fully contained in the record, and necessarily a part of the case submitted to this court. Had the district court sustained objection to evidence under petition, such decision would not have terminated the case. Douglass had a case in that action which he was entitled to have tried, and which was tried, as he had demanded, (Civil Code, § 898,) and was decided adversely to him. Had plaintiff at trial dismissed under § 897, and the trial proceeded under

Defendant's Argument for Rehearing.

§ 898, would not the record present just the case now contained, within the law as now held by this court? Douglass, because sued, was not bound to sue in turn. His counterclaim was his voluntary suit, and he cannot complain of the decision made thereon, that he was not legally in court. On his case asking affirmative relief the decision complained of was rendered. How can this court, or why should it, avoid deciding that case? Did not Douglass ask to have the trial had? and can a more full trial ever be had? If sent back and re-tried, the district court must again decide the issue of trial as before decided, and again the same record will be returned here. As a question of practice, the district court may have erred in admitting evidence under plaintiff's petition; but such evidence was proper in opposition to the case made on Douglass' counterclaim. In such case, Douglass would have taken the affirmative; but would such step have prejudiced any right, substantial or otherwise? In this view of the case, does not that case of estoppel intimated in opinion filed, exist to fullest extent? (See Wiley vs. Keokuk, 6 Kas. 104.)

The three tax-deeds plead by Douglass as against him on his counterclaim, show a possession within § 118 of the tax law, and also an adverse claim to the premises set up by him. This obtains, not because such instruments either have or ever may have any virtue as conveyances, but because they give color under which a possession may be claimed. And this, however invalid. (9 Wis. 402, 410; 5 Kas. 145.)

The abolition made by our code embraces not alone "forms," but all "distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity." The office of § 594 is peculiarly "to try title to land," while under § 595 the rightful possession may alone be in issue. As the object of litigation should be to determine the rights of the litigants, the rule given in O'Brien v. Creitz, 10 Kas. 202, is in full harmony with the code in holding that legal title to vacant land will sustain action to quiet title.

But should the present decision be adhered to, only the costs in that case reversed, should be taxed against defendant in error. The long record presented here grew out of no defense made to the plaintiff's case, but out of a case which the defendant could have made just the same had plaintiff never sued.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: An opinion having been filed in this case, in which this court held that the petition of defendant in error, plaintiff below, was insufficient, and (proper objection having been made thereto in the district court) that that court erred in proceeding to receive evidence and try the case, and therefore that the judgment ought to be reversed, the defendant in error has filed his motion for rehearing, contending, first, that we erred in our conclusions as to the essentials of a petition, and that the petition herein ought to be held sufficient; second, that, as the case was really tried upon the different titles set up by plaintiff in error, and all adjudged bad, this court should also examine those various titles, and adjudicate upon their validity; and third, that at least all the costs should not be taxed up against defendant in error, as the bulk of the case made is composed of the evidence offered by defendant below in support of his answer.

Further examination and reflection have only strengthened our conviction of the correctness of the views heretofore expressed, and therefore the motion for a rehearing must be overruled; or rather, (as a rehearing was ordered, the judgment of this court set aside, and the mandate recalled, in order to give us full time for reëxamination,) the same judgment will now be entered, reversing the judgment of the court below, and remanding the case for further proceedings.

As to the second matter, we find that the defendant rested his claim to the land upon mere tax-deeds. One of these the court admitted in evidence, and the other eight it rejected. As to the one admitted, it found that it was invalidated by matters aliunde the deed, and thus adjudicated defendant's entire claims void. If upon an examination of these various tax-deeds we should be of opinion that they were all void on their face, we might probably end the controversy between these parties by this opinion; but if on the other hand we should find some or all of them prima facie valid, that would not necessarily be conclusive of the controversy, for non constat that the deeds might not all be overthrown by other evidence. We shall not therefore attempt an examination of all, but content ourselves with noticing the last three offered, (those appearing on pages 108, 107, and 111, of the transcript.) These deeds appear to follow the statutory form so closely, that they must be held to be, in the language of the statute, "substantially" in that form, and therefore prima facie valid. At least, no departure from that form is suggested by counsel which seems to us substantial. In reference to them we remark further, that if all the proceedings up to the execution of a tax-deed are regular and legal, the holder of the certificate is entitled to a deed in legal form, and carrying that prima facie evidence of the regularity of all prior proceedings which belongs to a statutory deed; and if through mistake or inadvertence a different deed, and one substantially departing from the statutory form has been executed, the county clerk can be compelled by mandamus, and may without it, execute and deliver a deed in correct and statutory form. In other words, neither the power nor the duty of the county clerk is exhausted by the execution of an irregular and improper deed. The holder of the tax claims is entitled to have the various steps and processes by which these claims are matured into perfect titles, properly and legally taken and done by the various officers to whom under the law they are respectively assigned. We remark again, that, as decided in Morrill v. Douglass, 14 Kas. 293, 302, the payment of one year's taxes is sufficient consideration to sustain a tax-deed. Hence, when A. purchases a tract of land at the tax sale for one year, B. the succeeding year, and A. again the third year, the tax-deeds issued upon those respective sales may each and all be good as against the original owner of the land.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Other questions appear in the record, but most of them have received notice in one or another of the various tax cases recently considered in this court. We forbear therefore further notice of them at this time.

As to the remaining question, that of costs, we think the judgment of reversal should carry all the costs. We know of no reason why a party when sued may not resort to all the defenses he has to the action, or why he should be compelled to pay the costs incurred in presenting those defenses. He did not invite the litigation, and is not to be blamed for the number of his defenses, or charged with the cost of presenting them.

The judgment of reversal heretofore set aside, will be re-entered, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

EUGENE CUENDET V. JOHN LAHMER.

1. ATTACHMENT; Grounds for Order; Sales by Debtor in Good Faith. Where an attachment was issued on the charge of the disposal of property, with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, and the facts appeared to be that, the defendant, a jeweler, sold certain property, in a common business manner, for $150, which was a fair valuation, and the same subsequently placed upon it by the appraisers in the attachment proceedings; that he mortgaged certain other property for $500, and that the entire proceeds of sale and mortgage, except about fifteen dollars, were used in the payment of debts, and there is no evidence that the mortgage covered an unreasonable amount of property, or was unreasonably oppressive and exacting in its terms, or in any manner different from ordinary mortgages, held, that the ruling of the district court, vacating and setting aside the attachment, must be sustained. [Kayser v. Heavenrich, 5-338; Case v. Ingersoll, 7-367.]
2. ——— Preferring Creditors, in Good Faith. As a general rule, in the absence of special statutory restrictions, a debtor in failing circumstances, acting in good faith, may lawfully prefer one creditor, even to the total exclusion of all the others. [Avery v. Eastes, 18-505; Campbell v. Warner, 22-604; Frankhouser v. Ellett, 22-147.] He may also, in like good faith, in a reasonable business manner, use his property by mortgage, pledge, or otherwise, in raising money to pay such creditor. [Arn v. Hoersemann, 26-413; Bishop v. Jones, 28-680; Randall v. Shaw, 28-419; Kelsey v. Harrison, 29-143; Foots v. Coldwell, 30-125.]

Error from Shawnee District Court.

CUENDET brought suit against Lahmer on five promissory notes given by L. to plaintiff, on the 18th November 1878. Aggregate amount of notes, $749. At the commencement of the action Cuendet sued out an order of attachment, which was levied on a stock of jeweler's merchandise, shelving, showcases, safe, etc. The grounds for the attachment were, "that said defendant has property subject to execution which he conceals, and that he has assigned, removed, and disposed of his property with intent to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors." Lahmer moved to discharge the attachment, for the reason that the grounds therefor stated in plaintiff's affidavit were not true, but false in fact. The substance of the affidavits filed to sustain this motion, and counter affidavits to support the attachment, is sufficiently shown in the opinion. The district court, at the October Term 1874, discharged the attachment, and from this order the plaintiff appeals, and brings the case here on error.

John Guthrie, and Geo. S. Brown, for plaintiff, contended, that the statute distinguishes between an intent to defraud, and an intent to hinder and delay creditors: Laws of 1870, p. 172, § 4. Any act, or any disposition by a debtor of his property, designed and intended to hinder and delay any creditor or creditors, although there be no intent, nor even desire, to get rid of paying the debt or debts, is within the statute. The showing made by defendant was itself sufficient to support the attachment. Honest intentions never relieve a party from the legal consequences of his wrongful acts. The law will presume him to have intended to hinder and delay his creditors, if the disposal actually made by him of his property has that effect—citing Babcock v. Eckler, 21 N. Y. 632; Potter v. McDowell, 31 Mo. 62; Pilling v. Post, 13 Wis. 555. Legal fraud is sufficient: McKibben v. Martin, 64 Penn. St. 352; Wheeldon v. Wilson, 44 Me. 1; Enders v. Swayne, 8 Dana, 103; Custes v. Settle, 7 Mo. 452; Nicholson v. Leavitt, 6 N. Y. 517; Reed v. Noxon, 48 Ill. 323.

D. C. Metsker, and J. D. McFarland, submitted, that the sales and mortgage made by Lahmer were open and public, and in the usual course of business, before suit brought, and that the proceeds thereof had been honestly applied to the payment of just debts, and that such sale and conveyance were therefore legal, and would not authorize or support an attachment. O'Riley v. Freel, 37 How. Prac. R. 272; Barney v. Scherling, 40 Miss. 321; 6 N. Y. 517; Dickinson v. Benham, 12 Alb. N. Y. Pr. R. 158.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This is a proceeding to review the action of the district court of Shawnee county in vacating an attachment. The principal ground in the affidavit for the attachment was the disposal of property with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. The truth of this was denied. Upon the affidavits presented there can be no reasonable doubts as to the correctness of the court's ruling in so far as the question of an actual intent to hinder and delay creditors is concerned. While property was disposed of, the proceeds thereof were, with the exception of an inconsiderable sum, all used in the payment of debts. Of the $650 realized from the sale and mortgage, all that plaintiffs' counsel claim is, "that at least fifteen dollars of the money thus realized does not appear to have reached defendant's creditors." The payment of the residue to creditors is clearly traced. There was therefore a preference, rather than a delay or a defrauding of creditors. Indeed, we scarcely think from the argument of the learned counsel for plaintiffs that they expect this court to find from the testimony that there was an actual intent on the part of the defendant to delay or defraud creditors. It is fraud in law, rather than fraud in fact, to which they point, and upon which they rest their case. "The effect of the chattel mortgage was to hinder and delay creditors. The law will conclusively presume that he intended the natural consequences of his act. Therefore he intended to hinder and delay his creditors, and this supports the attachment." The proposition is too broad. The natural effect of an assignment for the benefit of creditors is hindrance and delay. Yet it is not therefore void, and the property subject to attachment. Case v. Ingersoll, 7 Kas. 367; Kayser v. Heavenrich, 5 Kas. 338. So that the mere fact that the tendency of the act is to work a hindrance or delay, is not absolutely decisive. The right of a debtor to prefer a creditor, and to appropriate a portion or all his property in good faith to the payment of a single debt, cannot be denied, unless there be, as in the U. S. Bankrupt Act, some special statutory restrictions. So also, the right of a debtor for the same purpose, and in like good faith, to burden his property by mortgage, or to use it by pledge or otherwise in raising money, cannot be questioned. And these propositions are all that are necessary to dispose of this case. The property sold was sold at a fair valuation—the same valuation afterward placed upon it by the appraisers when taken on the attachment. It does not appear that the mortgage was upon an unreasonably large amount of property, or was in any of its provisions out of the ordinary course of business, unreasonably exacting or oppressive. And the proceeds of both sale and mortgage were appropriated as heretofore indicated.

Rahm v. Bridge Manufactory.

---

We see nothing to justify a reversal of the ruling of the district court, and it will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

FRANCIS RAHM V. KING WROUGHT-IRON BRIDGE MANUFACTORY OF TOPEKA.

1. NEGOTIABLE PAPER; Indorsement; Presumption. The third paragraph of the syllabus to the opinion originally filed in this case (ante, p. 277,) is erroneous, and the law is the reverse of the proposition there stated. Where there is no evidence of the date of an indorsement of negotiable paper, the presumption of law is, that it was made before the maturity of the paper, and that the holder is a bona fide holder for value. [Eaton v. Harlan, 20-452; Reynolds v. Thomas, 28-813; Lyon v. Martin, 31-411.]
2. ——— Consideration. Proof that there was no consideration for the paper, as between the maker and payee, is not of itself alone sufficient to overthrow the presumption. [Lyon v. Martin, 31-411.]

Motion for Rehearing.

THIS case was decided at the January Term 1876 of this court, ante, p. 277, where a full statement of the facts will be found. A judgment of affirmance having been entered, Rahm, plaintiff below and plaintiff in error, filed a motion for a rehearing. Said motion was heard, and is now decided.

Thacher & Stephens, for plaintiff.

Alfred Ennis, for defendant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Since the filing of the opinion in this case the plaintiff has filed a motion for a rehearing, challenging the propositions laid down by this court in the third paragraph of the syllabus, (ante, p. 277,) and contending that in consequence of the errors therein the decision of the case was also erroneous. That paragraph is as follows:

“Where the indorsement of the note is in blank, and without date, and the allegation of the petition that it was endorsed before due is denied in the answer, and there is no evidence as to the date of the indorsement, any defense against the payer must also be held good against the indorser and holder.”

Upon a reëxamination of the question, and a review of the authorities, we are satisfied that we were in error, and that the proposition as stated is not the law. The rule is the reverse. Where there is no evidence as to the date of an indorsement, the presumption of law is, that it was made before maturity, and that the holder is a bona fide holder for value. We overlooked this proposition, and noticed simply the issues. That this presumption exists, is abundantly supported by the authorities. In 1 Daniels on Negotiable Instruments, p. 608, it is said, that, “The mere possession of a negotiable instrument, produced in evidence by the indorsee, or by the assignee where no indorsement is necessary, imports prima facie that he acquired it bona fide for full value in the usual course of business, before maturity, and without notice of any circumstances impeaching its validity, and that he is the owner thereof, entitled to recover the full amount against all prior parties. In other words, the production of the instrument, and proof that it is genuine, (where indeed such proof is necessary,) prima facie establishes his case; and he may there rest it." And again, on page 610: "Countervailing proof, that the instrument was executed without consideration as between the original parties—as, for instance, where it was executed for accommodation as between them, or that the consideration, originally valid, has subsequently failed—does not impair the holder's superiority of position, and he may still rest his case upon the instrument itself, from which it will still be presumed that he acquired it in a manner entitling him to stand upon the vantage-ground of a bona fide holder for value." Parsons, (2 Pars. Notes and Bills, 9,) is equally emphatic: "It is undoubtedly a general presumption of law, that indorsed paper was indorsed before maturity. And a party who denies this, and alleges it was indorsed when over-due, must prove it; nor without this proof can he avail himself of the equities of defense." The authorities cited in note 1, by the author, fully sustain him. Take for example, Pinkerton v. Bailey, 8 Wend. 600, which holds: "When the time of indorsement becomes material to let in the defense of payment, etc., it is incumbent upon the defendant to show it, and rebut the legal presumption arising from the face of the transaction." Edwards on Bills and Notes, marg. page 278, points out the same result in the following words: "Nothing appearing to the contrary, the presumption of law is, that the indorsement is contemporaneous with the making of the note, or, at all events, antecedent to its becoming due." See also, Story on Prom. Notes, 4th ed., §381; James v. Chalmers, 6 N. Y. 209; Sperry v. Spalding, 45 Cal. 544; Walker v. Davis, 33 Me. 516; Hall v. Allen, 37 Ind. 541; Sloan v. Union Banking Co., 67 Penn. St. 470; Pettis v. Westlake, 3 Scam. 525; Mobley v. Ryan, 14 Ill. 51. In this last case it is said, "Where an indorsement is without date the presumption of law is, that it was made before the note became due. If the time of the indorsement becomes material for the purposes of defense, it is incumbent on the maker to show that it was made after the maturity of the instrument, and thereby destroy the legal presumption." In

Rahm v. Bridge Manufactory.

---

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Byles on Bills, p. 181, the law is thus stated: "The law in the absence of any evidence on the subject presumes a transfer to have been made before the bill was due."

But it is scarcely necessary to multiply citations. The authorities are uniform. It follows therefore in this case, the notes and indorsements having been received in evidence without any proof of the date of the indorsements, that prima facie the plaintiff held them discharged of all equities between the original parties. To obviate this conclusion, counsel for the defendant say, that when it appears that paper was fraudulently issued, this presumption is overthrown, and the burden cast on the holder to show that he is a bona fide holder. Smith v. Sac County, 11 Wall. 139, is cited in support thereof. While the law may be as claimed, we do not think this a case where the rule applies. It does not appear to us that it can fairly be said that these notes were fraudulently issued. Coleman, Rahm & Co. had a just claim against the Iola company. That company sold the major part of its assets to the defendant. This was known. The managing men of the two companies were the same. Coleman, Rahm & Co. gave up their claim against the Iola company, and received the paper of the defendant. Part of this paper was assumed by the defendant as a payment for the assets purchased. The balance, including the notes in suit, was not. It does not appear that Coleman, Rahm & Co. knew of any distinction, or that they acted otherwise than in the best of faith. The case then as it now seems to us, stands in this condition: The plaintiff holds notes of the defendant discharged of all equities against the original parties. They were issued by the managing officers of defendant, though in excess of their actual authority, and for a debt for which the defendant was not responsible. They were therefore without consideration. This defense, though good against the original parties, is not good against a bona fide holder for value receiving the paper before maturity. It seems to us therefore that the district court erred in finding against the plaintiff, and that the judgment, instead of being affirmed, as was first ordered, should be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

We are under obligations to the learned counsel for plaintiff for calling our attention to the error into which we had fallen, and enabling us to correct it before it had passed into the reports,* and thus through its general circulation possibly resulted in serious wrong. We are of course liable to make mistakes, especially under the pressure of so much business, and so many cases; and it is a source of pleasure, a satisfaction, to know that our proceedings are closely watched by able counsel, for it leads us to indulge the hope that we shall make no serious blunders without having our attention called to them.

The judgment will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

MARTIN L. READ V. NATHAN K. JEFFRIES.

1. SET-OFF; Judgment. A judgment can be pleaded as a set-off in an action founded upon contract, and although such action be for unliquidated damages. [Levenson v. Lafontain, 3-523; Turner v. Crawford, 14-499; Stevens v. Able, 15-584; Herman v. Miller, 17-828; Carner v. Shelby, 17-474.]
2. ——— A personal judgment against two parties is a joint and several obligation, and an action can be maintained upon it against either of the judgment-debtors separately, and it can in like manner be used as a set-off against either. [Turner v. Crawford, 14-499.]

Error from Cowley District Court.

ACTION by Jeffries to recover a balance of $59.87 and interest, alleged to be due for work and labor. On appeal to the district court the case was referred to T. H. S. for trial. The referee found the plaintiff's claim was just, and that Read had a legal set-off amounting to $22.60. The record shows that on the trial Read offered in evidence the docket of a justice of the peace showing a legal and unsatisfied judgment in Read's favor against Jeffries and another, which judgment was so offered by Read as a further set-off against plaintiff's claim, and that the referee refused to admit the docket, or to allow said judgment in stating the account between the parties. Exceptions to the referee's report were duly filed. Other facts are stated in the opinion. The district court at the October Term 1874 overruled all the exceptions, and confirmed the referee's report, giving judgment in favor of Jeffries for $29.48, and costs; and Read brings the case here on error.

Pryor & Kager, for plaintiff in error.

L. J. Webb, and D. A. Millington, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: During the year 1878 Read was the owner of a lot in Winfield, upon which he was putting up a bank building. The carpenter work was let by contract to one Tansey. Jeffries was employed by Tansey, and did work under him upon the building. When the building was completed there was a balance still due Jeffries for his work. For this balance he was proposing to file a lien, but desisted upon the statement of Read that another party had filed a lien, and his promise that he would make that a test suit, and if compelled to pay that claim would pay Jeffries his. Read adjusted that claim without suit, and paid a reduced amount in settlement of it. Thereupon, the time to file a lien having expired, Jeffries brought this action to recover the amount due for his work.

We see no error prejudicial to the plaintiff in error in the various rulings complained of except in the one matter of a set-off. Read proposed to set off against the plaintiff's claim a judgment in his favor and against plaintiff and Tansey. This was disallowed, and in this we think was error. The judgment was a proper matter of set-off. An action can be maintained on a judgment, and e converso, it can be set up in an answer and used as a defense. Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kas. 658. Though the judgment was against two parties an action could be maintained upon it against either of the judgment-debtors, and in like manner it could be used as a set-off against either. Gen. Stat., p. 183, §§ 1 and 4. Counsel contends that the action was one for unliquidated damages for breach of a contract, and that therefore no judgment could be made a set-off. But the contrary has already been decided by this court. Stevens v. Able, 15 Kas. 584; Pomeroy on Remedies, §§ 798, 799. For this error the judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

SCHOOL DISTRICT No. 57 v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF EMPORIA, et al.

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; Powers of Boards of Education; School Districts. Section 99 of chapter 100 of the laws of 1872, which empowers the board of education of cities of the second class to attach to such cities for school purposes adjacent territory upon the application of a majority of the electors of such territory, is constitutional and valid. [Division Howard Co., 15-194; Comm'rs v. Bunker, ante, 498; Voss v. School District, 18-467; School District v. State, 29-57; A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Wilson, 33-223.]
2. ———— Notice to School Districts. Notices in such cases to the school district to which such territory belonged, is not a condition of valid action.

Error from Lyon District Court.

SOME time prior to 1872, School District No. 57, of Lyon county, was duly organized, comprising 21 eighty-acre tracts of contiguous territory, adjoining the city of Emporia, on the east. In 1872 said district voted and issued bonds to the amount of $1,500, and erected a substantial school-house. In July 1878, on the petition of J. J. Wright and eight others, a majority of the electors residing upon the five eighty-acre tracts immediately adjacent to said city, the Board of Education of said city of Emporia attached said last-mentioned tracts to said city for school purposes. An appeal (or what was intended as an appeal—but quære, is such an appeal allowed by law?) was taken by E. B., one of the resident electors on the detached territory, to the board of county commissioners, the proceedings whereon sufficiently appear in the opinion. In June 1874, this action was commenced in the district court by said School District No 57, as plaintiff, against said Board of Education, the board of county commissioners, and said petitioners, Wright and others, as defendants. Said district, in its petition, alleged its due organization as a school district—the issuing of district bonds—the location and erection of a school-house—claimed that said bonds were outstanding and unpaid, and were a “valid lien upon all real property contained in said school district, and all the inhabitants residing therein were and still are bound by law to assist in the discharge of said indebtedness.” And said petition contained also the following averments:

“And your petitioner further represents, that a certain number of evil-disposed persons, hereinafter named, for the purpose of breaking up and destroying said school district, and to avoid the payment of their share of the bonds so issued by said school district, presented to the board of education of the city of Emporia the following petition, to-wit, [setting forth the petition in full—and then proceeding as follows:] “And afterward, on the 7th of July 1873, the following action was had by said Board of Education as shown by the records of said board:

““On receipt of the petition from the majority of electors living on the following described territory, such territory was attached to the city of Emporia for school purposes, to-wit: the S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 9, the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 16, (except 20 acres in northwest corner of said quarter-section belonging to Marsh and Croswell;) also, the N.E. $\frac{1}{4}$  and S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$  of said section 16, all in township 19, range 11 east. And the clerk of the school board was instructed to notify the county clerk of such action.’

“Which action of said Board of Education of the city of Emporia your petitioner states was in violation of law, and contrary to equity and good conscience, and therefore absolutely void.” [Then follows a statement of the appeal taken by E. B. to the county board, and the action thereon of said board,

School District v. Board of Education.

after which is the following:] “The plaintiff avers that the portion of territory that the county commissioners attempted to detach from said school district was the most densely populated portion of said district, and contained more wealth than any other portion; that the total taxable personal property in the whole district for the year 1873 was $50,726.40, of which the sum of $47,401, by such division of said district, is taken from said district, and released from its proportion of the necessary taxes to pay off and discharge said bonded indebtedness; that by reason of said attempted detaching of said territory and property, school-district taxation for school purposes, has become burdensome, and the balance of the inhabitants residing in said school district have been compelled to dispense with school for a great portion of the year, and are compelled to raise a sinking fund toward the extinguishment of said school bonds, and it has had a tendency toward the breaking-up and destroying the entire school district. Wherefore, and in consideration of the premises, and the reasons hereinafter named, the plaintiff asks that the order of the board of county commissioners, and the order of the board of education made as hereinafter set forth, and all the acts and doings of said board of education and board of county commissioners in the premises be set aside, canceled, and rescinded, and declared to be absolutely null and void, and henceforth held for naught, for the following reasons, to-wit:

“1st, That School District No. 57, being a corporation, acting under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, the board of education or no other corporate body has the right to detach any portion of its territory.

“2d, The bonds voted and the indebtedness incurred by said school district became a lien on all the real property of said district.

“3d, No person or corporation can absolve themselves from their indebtedness by their own acts except by payment thereof.

“4th, No portion of the corporation can withdraw from the main body except by a majority of said body, or the judgment of a judicial tribunal.

“5th, No portion of a corporation can shift its obligations to another portion thereof without the consent of the whole body.

“6th, School District No. 57 was not made a party during any of the proceedings before either the board of education of the city of Emporia, or before the board of county commissioners.

“7th, Said board of education had not, nor had the county board of commissioners any jurisdiction of the persons residing on said territory attempted to be detached from said district who were not petitioners asking to be detached, nor jurisdiction over the property of said non-petitioners.”

Briefs of Parties.

The defendants demurred to the petition, for that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The district court, at the September Term 1874, sustained the demurrer, dismissed the petition, and gave judgment in favor of the defendants for costs. The School District appeals, and brings the case here on error.

F. E. Smith, for plaintiff, contended, that the school district not being made a party to the proceedings, the action of the board of education and county board, were void, and cited 5 Kas. 225; 7 Kas. 432; 11 Kas. 128; 8 Mich. 100; 12 Mich. 390. As no notice was given to the persons whose rights were to be affected, the proceedings of both said boards were void. 8 Kas. 133, 143; 1 Douglas, 390. The board of education of the city of Emporia has not any legal or constitutional power to reach beyond the corporate limits of the city and take territory of a duly-organized school district and attach such territory to the city for school purposes. Sec. 99 of ch. 100, laws of 1872, under which defendants claim the power to act, is clearly unconstitutional. But if a city board of education can exercise such powers in any case, it cannot be done without notice to the district. If such should be held to be the law, notice, and the writ of subpoena, and summons may as well be abolished; and the people left to such marauders as the board of education of the city of Emporia have shown themselves to be in this case.

E. W. Cunningham, for defendants, contended that the school board of the city of Emporia had a right to detach the territory mentioned in its order and attach it the city for school purposes, and to levy and collect taxes on property therein for the support of the schools of that city. (Sec. 99, ch. 100, Laws 1872.) That the legislature has undoubted power to pass such acts, see Cooley's Const. Lim. 192, 193. The only jurisdictional fact required by this section is, that application be made to the board by a majority of the electors of territory sought to be attached; and such an application the petition shows the board had.

School District v. Board of Education.

---

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Is § 99 of chap. 100 of the laws of 1872 constitutional? If so, and adjacent territory is sought to be attached to a city for school purposes, by the board of education, is notice to the school district to which the territory belonged, a condition of valid action? These are the only questions in this case.

The section empowers the board of education of a city of the second class to attach to it for school purposes adjacent territory upon the application of a majority of the electors of such territory. What provision of the constitution does this violate? Counsel refer us to none, and we fail to perceive any. He seems to rest his claim upon the proposition that the legislature cannot take A.'s property and give it to B. But we do not see how that proposition, correct as it may be, applies to this case. No man's, no corporation's property, is disturbed. The school district from which this territory was detached, does not own it. Neither does such territory become the property of the city when attached to it. The property remains the property of the same individuals after as before the change. All that is done is, to change the territory from one school district to another. Power to change school-district boundaries seems to be as full in the legislature, as the power to change county boundaries; and as to that, see the recently decided cases of Division of Howard Co., 15 Kas. 194, and Comm'rs of Sedgwick County v. Bunker, ante, p. 498. The county superintendent is given power to create new school districts, or change the boundaries of old. No provision is made for notice. (Gen. Stat., p. 915, § 10.) Yet can there be any question of the validity of his acts in these matters? It may be that at times grievous wrong is done by the legislature in changing the boundaries of counties, or school districts, but that is a matter beyond the power of the courts to control. Application must be made to the tribunal that decreed or authorized the change. Neither can the courts annul the change because the burden of taxation is largely increased upon the undetached territory. Given, power in the legislature to do an act, and the wisdom of the act, as well as the hardships which may result therefrom, are solely for the consideration of that body.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Nor is it necessary that notice be given to the school district. It has no such vested rights as to prevent the change of its boundaries without notice and a hearing before some tribunal. In this case it appears that one of the electors upon this territory appealed to the county commissioners from the order of the board of education, and they in consultation with the county superintendent modified somewhat the order of the board of education. But still it does not appear that the school district participated in or had any notice of any of the orders or proceedings, nor was notice as we think necessary.

It is unnecessary to consider the ruling of the court upon the motion to strike out parts of the petition, for upon the whole petition we do not see any reason to hold the proceedings of the board of education void, or the section cited unconstitutional.

The judgment will be affirmed.

B. SNYDER, et al., v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF PAOLA.

TREASURER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION; *Authority to Pay Moneys. The treasurer of the board of education of a city is authorized to pay out money only upon a warrant duly signed, etc. When therefore, he and his bondsmen are sued by the board for failing to pay over money in his hands to his successor in office, it is no defense to the action, that the board was indebted to a third party on a contract for building a school house, that the treasurer had without the knowledge or authority of the board loaned money to such contractor, and tendered an unaccepted order from such contractor on the board for the amount of the loan. [McCubbin v. City of Atchison, 12-166.]

Error from Miami District Court.

ACTION by the Board of Education of the City of Paola against Snyder as principal, and nine others as sureties, to recover moneys alleged to belong to said Board of Education, and which came to Snyder's hands as treasurer of said board, and which he neglected and refused to pay over to his successor in office. The defense interposed, and the proceedings at the trial, are sufficiently stated in the opinion. Trial at the September Term 1878 of the district court, J. B. S., judge pro tem., presiding. Verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $3,519.82. Snyder and others bring the case here on error.

W. R. Wagstaff, and W. B. Brayman, for plaintiffs in error.
B. F. Simpson, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER., J.: Two questions are presented by plaintiffs in error. First, an alleged error in the modification of an instruction; and second, that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. Of these in their order.

The action was against an ex-treasurer of the school district of Paola, and the sureties on his bond, for not paying over to his successor in office the funds claimed to be in his hands. Among other defenses the treasurer tendered an order drawn by one L. E. Post on the board of education and in his favor for $2,040, and claimed that the board owed said Post at least that amount on a contract for building the school-house. Post had been the contractor for a large school-building just built for the plaintiff. Snyder, as treasurer, had loaned money of the school fund to some sub-contractors under Post, and had received this order from Post in payment of the loan. There was a conflict in the testimony as to whether this loan had been made by the treasurer on his own responsibility, or with the knowledge and approval of the board of education. The order was not accepted. Upon this, counsel asked the instruction, "If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff on the 7th of May 1873 owed L. E. Post the amount of said order, then it was the duty of the board to accept said order and credit his account for the amount." This was modified by the court by adding, "provided they should find said order was in payment of a loan made by authority of the board, or subsequently ratified by said board." Ought the court to have given the instruction as offered? and was there error in the modification? We think not. At least, we see nothing of which the plaintiffs in error can complain. That no action can be maintained upon an unaccepted order, is clear. McCubbin v. City of Atchison, 12 Kas. 166. True, it is sometimes treated as an equitable assignment of a claim for money due, and sustained upon that ground. But it is not the duty of the board of education, or the common council of a city, or the board of commissioners of a county, to permit their respective treasurers to pay out money on their own responsibility, and to whomsoever they see fit, and then accept in lieu of said money orders drawn on them by their respective creditors. The treasurer was at liberty to "pay moneys only upon a warrant signed by the president," etc. Laws 1872, p. 223, § 111. Whatever moneys he received it was his duty to hold until such a warrant was presented; and upon settlement he must return either the money or the warrant. Any other rule would be fraught with great danger. It would open the door to speculation on the part of treasurers, to unjust preferences of creditors, and consequent litigation. It would tend to prevent that orderly arrangement of the financial affairs which results in regular and not excessive taxation. The treasurer is not the financial agent of the board. He is simply the custodian of the funds. The board determines its own financial matters—settles what debts shall be contracted, and when paid—what taxes shall be levied, and which of matured obligations shall be first paid. It makes its own contracts, and settles with its contractors. To permit the mere custodian of its funds to interfere in these matters, would be to introduce inexplicable confusion. If he may advance to one creditor of the board, and compel the latter to accept an order for the debt in lieu of the money in his hands, he may do so to another, and so become himself the financial agent and manager of the board. How easy the way, and how strong the temptation to personal profit, if such a rule could be sustained! How many of the municipalities of this state find their obligations depreciated in value, and passing in the market for less than their face! Give the treasurers the power implied by this instruction, and how speedily would all the funds pass out of the treasurers' hands, not as the official boards might deem best, but as the friendships or the interest of the treasurers should dictate. But it is needless to pursue this line of thought further. The evils attendant upon such practices have been too often and too clearly explained to need argument or illustration here. The statute forbids the treasurer to pay out money except upon a duly-authenticated warrant, and neither law nor equity will help him to disobey the statute with impunity. The instruction as asked was not the law, and as modified contained no error of which the plaintiffs in error can complain.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Snyder v. Board of Education.

The second matter of error claimed is, that the verdict is against the evidence. The point here is this: The treasurer served two terms. The bond sued on was given for his second term, commencing in May 1872. It is claimed that the misappropriation of funds was in December 1871, and therefore not covered by this bond. Of course, if the misappropriation was in 1871, the sureties on this bond were not responsible. An examination of the testimony fails to leave in our minds a conviction as to when the misappropriation took place. The order is dated May 7th 1873. It refers to a note given by the sub-contractors, and purports to be on account of that note. The note, which is both a receipt and note, bears date December 1st 1871. But the note is for $2,000, and calls for six per cent. interest. The order is for $2,040. Snyder, the treasurer, testifies that the order was given for the note. Why did it not include all the interest? He says that the accrued interest was included in a settlement made in May 1872; but still there was a year's interest subsequent to that settlement. Again, in reference to the loan itself the testimony is not clear. It would seem that a loan of $10,000 to H. M. Holden of Kansas City First National Bank, was made in December 1871, and tacitly authorized and approved by the board. Snyder testifies that a part of this $10,000 supposed to have been loaned to Holden was really the loan to the sub-contractors, and that the note was given at the time the loan was made. But he never presented the note until the final settlement in May 1873, though he says some of the board knew of its existence prior thereto. Again, he testifies that he informed the school board of loaning Holden the $10,000 about the time of making the loan, and that he made the loan December 10th 1871. This would make the note dated ten days before the loan. Again, it appears from his testimony that he had some private transactions with the sub-contractors, and that they owed him some money. Still again, the attention of the learned counsel does not seem to have been called to the time of this misappropriation until the filing of the motion for a new trial. At least, no reference is made to the matter in either the instructions given or those refused. The district court which heard the testimony overruled the motion for a new trial based upon this ground. Under these circumstances we are unwilling to hold that it is clear that the misappropriation which unquestionably was not disclosed to or known by the board until during the life of the bond sued on was actually made prior to its execution. The custody of the funds during both the year covered by this bond, and that immediately prior, was in one of the defendants, the treasurer. The board prove a defalcation made manifest toward the close of the last year. The settlement made at the close of the first year was satisfactory, and showed nothing wrong. While now the assertion of the treasurer, unsupported by other testimony, (for neither the contractors nor the sub-contractors are witnesses, and no other witness testified to any knowledge of the transaction,) is, that the misappropriation was during the first year, yet there are many circumstances tending to discredit this assertion, and we cannot say that those circumstances are not sufficient to warrant the verdict.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Gregg v. George.

---

We are compelled therefore to order an affirmance of the judgment.

N. P. GREGG v. J. M. GEORGE & Co.

1. PRESENTATION OF BANK CHECK; *Demand and Refusal of Payment. In presenting a check for payment to the bank upon which it is drawn, no particular form of expression is necessary to make a legal demand and refusal. It is sufficient if it clearly appears that the bank, after demand, declines to honor the check; and refusing to pass the check to the credit of the holder, is a dishonor of it.
2. INSTRUCTIONS — *When Inapplicable, not Error to Refuse. It is not error to refuse instructions which, however correct as propositions of law, do not seem applicable to the facts in evidence, or likely to assist the jury in coming to a correct conclusion. [Burton v. Shoemaker, 7-17; Tallman v. Jones, 13-438; Raper v. Blair, 24-374; R. R. Co. v. Hay, 31-177.]

Error from Miami District Court.

ACTION brought by George & Co. against Gregg, on a bank check which reads as follows:

PAOLA, KANSAS, Nov. 1st, 1869.

PAOLA BANK, A. THOMAS & Co., Bankers:

Pay J. M. George & Co. one hundred and twenty dollars, ($120.00.) N. P. GREGG & Co.

On said check was the following indorsement: "This is correct, and should be deducted from my account to date of suspension.—N. P. GREGG & Co." The answer admits the execution of check and indorsement; denies that the check was presented to the bank for payment; denies that payment thereof was refused by the bank; avers that on said Nov. 1st 1869, and for a long time thereafter, Gregg had on deposit with Paola Bank (A. Thomas & Co.,) and to his credit in said bank $700, and had George in a reasonable time after the receipt of said check presented the same to said bank and demanded payment, the money would have been paid; denies that on Nov. 10th 1869, or at any time thereafter, that George notified Gregg of the suspension of said bank, or that the bank had refused payment of said check on presentation; and denies that George at any time thereafter ever demanded payment of said check from the said Gregg; and avers that said Paola Bank was open and doing a banking-business on the 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th days of November 1869, and that George accepted said check in payment of said $120. The answer further avers, that a long time afterward, on December 1st 1869, George came to Gregg and told him that A. Thomas & Co., Bankers, Paola Bank, had failed, and he still held the $120 check unpaid, and had never presented it to said bank for payment, and that George did not then claim the same from Gregg, but said that he desired to present his claim for said check against the assignee in bankruptcy of A. Thomas & Co. for allowance, and then and there requested Gregg to relinquish his claim in writing to said check, and in compliance with said request Gregg then wrote and signed the memorandum on said check. Trial at the September Term 1872 of the district court. Verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiffs for $144.35, and Gregg brings the case here on error.

W. R. Wagstaff, and O. A. Tousley, for plaintiff in error.

B. F. Simpson, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action on a check. It was a check drawn by Gregg on November 1st, on A. Thomas & Co., bankers of Paola, and on the same day given to George & Co. On the 2d it was presented to the bank. It is not disputed by counsel that this was in due time. But it is claimed that no demand was made for money on the check, that the party simply sought to use it in buying exchange. We quote the plaintiff's testimony on cross-examination on this point, and there is no contradictory testimony:

"November 1st 1869, Gregg gave me that check at our store-room, near the door. Don't know time. At an early hour next day, I presented the check to Mr. Edwards in Paola bank, who then said to me they were not selling exchange, that day, on St. Louis. I did not demand exchange on any particular bank. I wanted exchange on St. Louis. I demanded no other exchange. Edwards slipped my order back, and said they were not selling exchange. I kept the check. I went into the bank with money and this check, and asked for exchange on St. Louis. I asked the bank to give me credit on account; it refused. I took my money and check and left the bank; I did not ask the bank to give me money on that check; I did not want the money. Never after presented the check."

On his direct examination plaintiff had testified in general terms, that he "presented the check for payment—the bank did not pay it—the bank refused to pay it." This seems to us clearly sufficient. Waiving all question as to the matter of exchange on St. Louis, it appears that he asked the bank to credit the check to his account, and it refused. This was a dishonor of the check. It was unnecessary after that to go through the form of specifically demanding its payment in cash over the counter. Demand and refusal may be necessary; but no particular form or expression is essential to either. It is sufficient if it clearly appears that the bank, after a demand, refuses to accept the check as of the value its face indicates.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

The learned counsel for plaintiff in error criticise the instructions asked by the defendant and refused, as also the single instruction given at the instance of the plaintiff. The last sentence in the latter is in these words: "And the holder of a check is not required to present it to the bank to which it is directed for payment more than once, when on the first presentation the bank has refused to pay the same." Counsel contend that "this carries upon its face to the jury the assumption by the court that George had once presented this check to the bank and demanded payment which was refused, and it was unnecessary to present it a second time." We fail to see any such assumption. The whole instruction is a statement of an abstract proposition of law. There is in terms no reference to the parties or facts in the case. And any assumption which it carries, grows out of the fact that, though an abstract proposition, it is applicable to the facts as they appeared in evidence.

Counsel insists that the court erred in refusing the first and second instructions asked by defendant. Those instructions refer to the relations of banker and customer, and the effect of drawing a check upon the money in the hands of the banker. It may be that they state the rules of law correctly, but we fail to see how they would have assisted the jury in this case, which is a controversy between the drawer and holder of the check. At any rate they are not so pertinent to the issue as to make the refusal to give them an error calling for a reversal.

An instruction was asked and refused, which stated the law in respect to the failure to give notice of the non-payment, and stated the law correctly as applied to ordinary bills of exchange. The law is not so rigid in respect to checks. The failure to make demand within a reasonable time, and to give notice of non-payment by the succeeding day, does not absolutely discharge the drawer. It is sometimes said that the drawer is the principal party, the one primarily liable on the check; perhaps this is not strictly correct; and yet, unless the drawer has suffered some loss by a failure to make demand and give notice, he is not ordinarily discharged from liability. In 3 Kent, p. 104, note "a," it is said, "The drawer of a check is not a surety, but a principal debtor, as much as the maker of a promissory note. It is an absolute appropriation of so much money in the hands of the banker to the holder of the check, and there it ought to remain until called for; and the drawer has no reason to complain of delay unless upon the immediate failure of his banker. By unreasonable delay in such a case, the holder takes the risk of the failure of person or bank on which the check is drawn. This is quite distinct from the strict rule of diligence applicable to a surety, in which light stands the endorser." Story on Prom. Notes, §§ 490-498, and notes; Little v. Phoenix Bank, 2 Hill, 425; Lester v. Jones, 8 Bush. (Ky.) 357; Pack v. Thomas, 13 Smedes & Mar. 11; Kemblen v. Mills, 1 Manning & Granger, 757; Byles on Bills, p. 14. We think the court did not err in refusing the instruction.

Gregg v. George.

These are all the questions it seems necessary to notice, and in them appearing no error the judgment will be affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

TORBETT ENTREKEN v. MORRIS HOWARD, Adm'r, &amp;c.

1. TAX-DEED — When Void on its Face. A tax-deed showing upon its face that it is based upon a sale made to the county in 1862, for the taxes of 1861, and an assignment of the sale-certificate by the county clerk in December 1865, is void. [Shoat v. Walker, 6-65; Sapp v. Morrill, 8-677; Hubbard v. Johnson, 18-632.]
2. ACTION TO QUIET TITLE; Under Sec. 594 of the Code; Petition. A petition to quiet title, filed under § 569 of the code of 1862, the same as § 594 of the code of 1868, which alleges in general terms that the plaintiff is the owner and in peaceable possession of the land, describing it, and that defendant sets up and claims an estate and interest therein adverse to to the estate and interest of the plaintiff, but without disclosing the nature or source of that adverse estate, and praying that defendant be compelled to show his title, and that it be adjudged null and void as against the plaintiff, is sufficient to sustain a decree quieting title, as against any objections at least made in a collateral attack. [Eaton v. Giles, 5-24; Douglass v. Nuzum, 16-515; Cartwright v. McFadden, 24-662.]
3. ——— Seal, Authenticating Affidavit. As against a like attack, a decree is not invalidated by the mere omission of the clerk of the court in which the action was pending to attach the seal of the court to the affidavit for publication taken before him, and authenticated by his signature, when it appeared that such affidavit was, prior to the decree, presented to the court for its consideration, and by it approved.

Error from Miami District Court.

IN July 1868, one Joel Abbott commenced an action against Horace B. Smith, to quiet his title to the S.E.¼ of section 9, township 17, range 24 east, 160 acres of land in Miami county. The action was brought under § 569 of the code of 1859, (same as § 594, code of 1868.) Smith resided in Indiana. An affidavit for publication was made by S. S. C. before the clerk of the district court. Publication was made, and proof of such publication was duly made and filed. On the 9th of December 1868, said cause of "Abbott against Smith," was tried—the journal entry thereof being as follows:

(Title.) "And now comes the said Joel Abbott by his attorney W. R. Wagstaff, and the said Horace B. Smith still failing to plead, answer or demur to the said petition, and thereupon this cause came on for hearing on the petition and testimony offered in this cause; and the court having heard the evidence and arguments of counsel, and being fully advised in the premises does find that the defendant Horace B. Smith has been duly notified of the pendency and prayer of said petition by six weeks' publication in the Miami County Advertiser, a newspaper published at Paola, and of general circulation in said county of Miami in the state of Kansas, as required by law; and the court further finds that the said Joel Abbott has the legal title to, and is in the peaceable possession of, the premises described in said petition to-wit, the S.E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  section 9, township 17, range 24 E. of sixth principal meridian in Kansas. It is therefore considered by the court that Joel Abbott, plaintiff, has the legal title to and possession of the premises in said plaintiff's petition described; and it is further considered and adjudged by the court, that the claim of the said Horace B. Smith to title in and to said described premises is null and void as against the title of the plaintiff."

Entreken v. Howard, Adm'r.

In April 1869 said Abbott sold and conveyed said land to Torbett Entreken. In November 1870 said Horace B. Smith commenced an action of ejectment against said Entreken, to recover possession of said land, claiming that he (Smith) was seized in fee simple of said land, and was entitled to the immediate possession thereof. Entreken denied Smith's title, and set up title in himself. A second trial of such action was had at the December term 1871. Smith, to maintain the issue on his part, produced and gave in evidence a patent from the government to himself of said land dated October 1st 1858. Entreken offered, first, a tax-deed of said land, executed by the county clerk of Miami county, to Joel Abbott, dated December 5th 1868; second, the record of the proceedings and judgment in the action of "Abbott v. Smith," above mentioned; third, a warranty deed from said Abbott to Entreken, for said land, dated April 14th 1869. This evidence was all objected to by Smith, and all excluded by the court—the tax-deed, as being void on its face; the judgment in "Abbott v. Smith," as being coram non judice, and void, for want of legal and proper service upon Smith; and the warranty deed, because no title was shown in the grantor. Entreken duly excepted, and made a case for this court, subsequently to which said *Horace B. istrator; and said action is now brought here by Entreken, and prosecuted against Howard, as administrator, and the heirs of said Smith, as defendants in error.

W. R. Wagstaff, and R. W. Massey, for plaintiff in error.

B. F. Simpson, and W. B. Brayman, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action of ejectment. Defendant rested his title upon a tax-deed, and a decree quieting title. Both were held void. The ruling upon the tax-deed was unquestionably correct. It upon its face disclosed a sale made in 1862 for the taxes of 1861, to the county, and an assignment of the sale-certificate on the 19th of December 1865 by the county clerk, and was based upon that sale; and the assignment, and the deed based thereon, were both void. Sapp v. Morrill, 8 Kas. 677.

Two objections are made to the decree—one that the petition was not sufficient to sustain the decree, and the other that the records show no affidavit for publication, the only service pretended having been made by publication. The action was brought under §569 of the code of 1862, (Comp. Laws, p. 224,) and the petition alleged in general terms that plaintiff was the owner and in peaceable possession of the land, describing it, and that defendant set up and claimed an estate and interest therein adverse to the estate and interest of the plaintiff, and prayed that he be compelled to show his title, and that it be adjudged null and void as against the plaintiff. We think as against any objection that can be raised in this collateral way the plaintiff's petition must be held sufficient. This was not an action outside of the statute, and based upon the old equity rules, in reference to which actions, and the allegations necessary to sustain them, see the case of Douglass v. Nazum, recently decided by this court, (ante, pp. 515, 521,) but is an action under the statute, and alleges all the matters named therein. It may be that the allegations are general, and partake something of the nature of mere statements of conclusions of law. But objections on such grounds must be raised in the action, and not out of it. They are not good when a judgment is sought to be collaterally attacked. Nor do we in this case mean to intimate that the objections to this petition would be sufficient for a reversal, even in a direct proceeding therefor. All that we decide is, that they are clearly unavailable for this collateral attack.

Entreken v. Howard, Adm'r.

The other objection grows out of these facts: The affidavit for publication seems to have been sworn to before the clerk of the court in which the action was brought, and the same court in which the present action was pending. It is signed by the party making the affidavit. The jurat is in proper form, and attested by the signature of the clerk, but without the seal of the court. The defendant offered to prove the genuineness of the clerk's signature, and the fact that the party did take the affidavit as stated in the jurat, and also asked leave to have the clerk attach the seal to the jurat, but the court refused to admit the testimony, or grant the leave. Was the omission of the seal a fatal defect? We are disposed to think not. It must be remembered that this judgment was attacked collaterally. The question presented is not, whether there was such an error as to justify a reversal, but whether there was such an omission as to wholly invalidate the record. Of course, if it would not compel a reversal, a fortiori it would not destroy the judgment. And it seems to us matter of grave doubt whether on proceedings in error, when it was shown that the affidavit was made as attested by the clerk, whether this court would be justified under §140 of the code, which provides that, "The court in every stage of action must disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect," in reversing the judgment. Would we not be compelled to consider that a mere clerical omission, which did not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party? It must be borne in mind that the omission is not the act of the party, but of the officer of the court in which the proceedings were had. And in the performance of his duties, the clerk is under the direction of the court. (Gen. Stat., p. 770, code, §716.) So that the party having done all that the law required him to do, and having submitted to the court, a court of general jurisdiction, the evidence of what he had done, and that court having passed upon the evidence and found that the service by publication was in all respects legally made, and rendering judgment in his favor for the rights he claimed, is now told that everything is void because the officer of the court, acting under the direction of the court, failed to complete the authentication of an affidavit. Again, the purpose of the signature and seal is, authentication, evidence. Where the evidence comes from a stranger to the tribunal, and the authentication is by an officer in no way connected with the court, it may well be that the authentication should be complete, the evidence perfect. But where the affidavit is taken before the clerk, it is before an officer whose signature is judicially known to the judge, one who is in fact a part of the court. The authentication is not made stronger by the attachment of the seal, for that of which the courts take judicial knowledge is not made more certain by mere testimony. An affidavit before the clerk, to be used before the court, is very like swearing a witness by the clerk to be examined on a trial before the court. The clerk is simply the instrument by which the court has acted. As a matter of fact, we think the general practice throughout the state has been for clerks authenticating affidavits for use in their own courts to omit the seal, and simply attest with their signatures. Now if all these affidavits, and the judgments and rights founded on them, are absolutely void, or if depending for their validity upon the discretion of the judge before whom for the time the question may be pending, we fear the uncertainty of judicial titles would be greatly enhanced. Counsel do not seem to question the power of the court to allow amendments, but contend that under the rules laid down in Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kas. 674, an amendment was properly refused. In that case indeed, one of the defects sought to be amended was the same as that existing here. The other defect was one caused by the party himself, and involved really the principal question. We however drew no distinction between them in the opinion, and spoke of the rights of amendment generally, with reference to such defects. It may be that this case comes within the principles there suggested as forbidding amendments — though that we do not so decide — and if an amendment was necessary to give validity to the record it may be that the ruling of the court below was correct. But after a careful consideration of the case, without however finding much of authority directly in point, we are constrained to hold that, as against any collateral attack, a judgment is not invalidated by the mere omission of the clerk of the court in which the action was pending to attach the seal to an affidavit taken before him, and authenticated by his signature, when it appears that such affidavit has been presented to the court for its consideration, and by it approved. The case apparently nearest in point, cited by counsel, is that of Tunis v. Withrow, 10 Iowa, 305, in which an affidavit taken before a notary public, and unattested by his official seal, was held insufficient to sustain a service based upon it. But there is this vital difference: the party there taking the affidavit was not an officer of the court, but a stranger to the tribunal.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

Entreken v. Howard, Adm'r.

---

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to grant a new trial.

R. R. McCANDLISS V. CHARLES E. KELSEY.

1. FINDINGS—*Limited to Issues. While when a case is tried by court without a jury, and special findings are demanded, it is generally the duty of the court to find upon all the issuable facts, yet this rule does not require it to make a finding upon any matter, though alleged in the petition and denied in the answer, which is foreign to the controversy between the parties, anything which upon motion would have been stricken out as irrelevant and redundant.
2. ERROR, *Without Prejudice. An omission to find upon all the issuable facts, will not always be an error compelling a reversal. If the facts found, and by the evidence rightfully found, compel the judgment that is rendered, whatever may be the truth concerning the matters not passed upon by the court in its findings, and whichever way they might be found, then the omission, if error, is without prejudice.

McCandless v. Kelsey.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Counsel for plaintiff in error present two questions for the consideration of this court. They insist that the district court erred in that it did not find specifically upon all the issues presented by the pleadings, and that therefore they are entitled to a reversal; and second, that one finding which was made, and which was of vital importance, was not direct, definite and positive. Of these in their order.

The case was tried by the court without a jury, and special findings were demanded. In such a case, is it the duty of the court to find specifically upon all the matters put in issue by the allegations in the petition and denials in the answer? and will a failure to discharge this duty compel in all cases a reversal? It may be stated as a general proposition, that it is the duty of the court to find upon all the issues in the case. But because a matter is stated in the petition, and denied in the answer, it does not necessarily follow that this allegation and denial present one of the issues in the case. It may be a matter wholly foreign to the case, something which the court would be compelled upon motion to strike out as impertinent or irrelevant. And because the defendant has not seen fit by motion to shape his adversary's pleading into technical accuracy, it does not follow that a larger burden is cast upon the court in the weighing of testimony and the finding of facts. It is enough, if the court has found upon all the facts put in issue by the pleadings, material to the controversy. Again, there may be some pivotal fact upon which the case turns. If the court finds upon that, ignoring all else, while it may be, strictly, an omission, an error, on the part of the court, yet it may also be an error without prejudice. If for instance, to a petition setting forth in different counts various causes of action, as, on a note, for goods sold and delivered, money had and received, work and labor done, etc., an answer is filed containing a general denial, and a plea of payment, and on the trial the court should find generally that all the claims of plaintiff upon the defendant had been fully paid and discharged before the commencement of the action, and this finding should appear to be supported by the evidence, how would the plaintiff be prejudiced by the court's failing to find specifically as to the several causes of action alleged in the petition and denied in the answer? What matter whether each count stated a cause of action which in fact did once exist, if before suit all had been paid? Or again, suppose a plaintiff sues as administrator, alleging the death of the decedent and his own appointment as administrator, and then alleges several causes of action in favor of the estate, and this petition is met by a verified denial; and upon the trial the court should find that plaintiff was not the administrator of the decedent, and that no letters of administration or other authority had ever been issued to him by any court: how would he be prejudiced by a failure to find as to the existence of the various causes of action in favor of the estate? These are illustrations, but they serve to show that, not every omission of the court to find specifically upon all the matters stated in one pleading and denied in the other, or even upon all the strictly issuable facts, is sufficient for reversal. Indeed, it would seem that before a reversal should be ordered, it should appear not merely that the court had failed to find upon all the issuable facts, but that a finding one way or the other as to some of those not found would have compelled a judgment different from that entered upon those found. If the facts found, and by the evidence rightfully found, compel the judgment that is rendered, no matter what may be the truth concerning the issues not passed upon by the court in its findings, and whichever way they might be found, then it would be but an idle and useless ceremony to remand the case for findings which when found would only result in the same judgment. Nor does this infringe upon the rights of either party. It is doubtless true, as counsel claim, that a party has his theory as to the legal effect of the facts in the case, and so shapes his pleadings accordingly; and the district court may have a very different judgment as to such legal effect, and may make its findings accordingly. But still the party is not without redress. He can bring the pleadings and the findings here, and if it should appear that any of the facts alleged and not found, and in support of which there was any testimony, would, if true, have changed the result, and compelled a different judgment, it would be the duty of this court to remand the case for a new trial. While we are compelled to hold that not every omission of the district court to find specifically upon all the issuable facts will compel a reversal, we think the better practice is, for the district court to so find. And such our observation shows us to be the general custom. And for this reason, if all the facts are found, and this court holds that the judgment is erroneous, it may often dispose of the case by a final judgment, while if the facts are only partially found, it will be compelled to remand the case for a new trial. In this case, (and this leads us to the second question,) we think the finding complained of is sufficiently direct, definite and positive, and is also pivotal and decisive. That finding is as follows:

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

---

McCandliss v. Kelsey.

“That said defendant never at any time agreed to give said plaintiff a continued, free, and unrestricted use of said entrance, stairway, and landing in his said building, or any other right or interest that he could not ignore at any time.”

The petition states substantially as follows:

“In March 1871, McCandliss, plaintiff, purchased of one Eskridge, who was the owner thereof, a part of lot 175 on Commercial street, in the city of Emporia. After the purchase, contemplating the erection of a permanent brick building on that portion of the lot he had purchased, he made an arrangement with Eskridge (who was the owner of the balance of the lot adjoining plaintiff's on the north) to the effect that he might build the north wall of his contemplated building upon the line between them so that 6½ inches of the wall would rest upon the plaintiff's land, and 6½ inches upon the land owned by E. The plaintiff immediately commenced the erection of a permanent brick building, 70 feet in length, 22 feet in width, and two stories high, with the north wall resting partially upon his land and partially upon the land belonging to E., in accordance with the arrangement made with E. About the 22d of July 1871, plaintiff had completed the walls of said building, but no part of the second story of the building was completed except the walls. The north wall had cost plaintiff the sum of $530, and was reasonably worth that amount. At that time Kelsey, defendant, with full knowledge of the arrangement between plaintiff and E., purchased of E. the remainder of lot 175 adjoining the plaintiff on the north, including that portion of it on which the north-half of plaintiff's north wall rested. Defendant immediately commenced the erection of a permanent brick building upon that portion of said lot which he had purchased of E., which building adjoined on the north the building of plaintiff. Plaintiff and defendant then entered into a parol agreement, whereby defendant was to make an entrance, doorway, and stairway in the front of his building next to and adjoining the north wall of plaintiff's building, and was to make a landing-place at the head of the stairway, opposite to a doorway to be cut by plaintiff through his north wall; and when the buildings were completed, the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, should forever have, use and enjoy the free use of a right of way in, to, over and about the landing-place, stairway, doorway and entrance so to be made by defendant in his building; and in consideration of this agreement on the part of defendant, plaintiff was to make the defendant a good and sufficient deed for the north-half of plaintiff's north wall, and the defendant was to use said partition-wall as the south wall of his (defendant's) building. And it was further agreed that plaintiff should cut a door-way in his north wall opposite to the landing-place at the head of the stairway to be made in defendant's building, and that plaintiff should arrange the second story of his said building with reference to obtaining ingress and egress thereto and therefrom by means of the landing-place, stairway and doorway in defendant's building. Plaintiff further alleges, that he, relying on this parol agreement, with a full knowledge on the part of defendant that he was relying on it, at great expense cut a doorway through his north wall opposite to the landing-place at the head of the stairway in defendant's building, and also at great expense arranged the second story of his building with direct reference to obtaining ingress and egress thereto and therefrom by means of the doorway, stairway and landing-place in defendant's building; that about the 11th of August, the plaintiff, for the purpose of carrying out his part of the parol agreement with defendant, made defendant a good and sufficient deed for the north-half of his said north wall; that while the consideration mentioned in this deed was the sum of one dollar, yet that in truth and in fact there was no money consideration for it, but that the only consideration therefor was the agreement made by the defendant to the plaintiff as to his (the plaintiff's) free use of the stairway, etc., in defendant's building; that both buildings have been completed, and are permanent structures, built of brick, stone, iron, and wood, and that the north wall of plaintiff's building is the south wall of defendant's building; that the defendant has failed to perform his part of the contract, except, only, that he built in his building the doorway, stairway and landing-place that he agreed to; that the plaintiff, relying upon the promises of the defendant, upon the completion of his building moved with his family into the second story of his building, and has used and occupied the same ever since as his residence; that for the purpose of ingress and egress to and from his second story, it is necessary to use the stairway, etc., in defendant's building; that plaintiff has faithfully carried out his part of the parol agreement entered into between him and defendant, but defendant, for a long time prior to the commencement of this action, has, in direct violation of his said agreement, forbidden and refused to allow plaintiff or his family to use said landing-place, stairway, and doorway in his building; that the reasonable worth and value of half the plaintiff's north wall, that was deeded to defendant by plaintiff, was the sum of $530; that the expense of cutting a doorway through his north wall was the sum of $25; that plaintiff will be damaged if not permitted to use the stairway, etc., in defendant's building according to agreement, in at least the sum of $500; that unless the defendant be restrained from interfering with the plaintiff's free use of the stairway, etc., plaintiff will be without remedy. Wherefore," etc., closing the petition with a prayer for appropriate relief.

McCandliss v. Kelsey.

Now can there be any question but that this finding negatives the existence of any such parol agreement as is alleged in the petition, and in so negating it completely disposes of plaintiff's claim for relief? If defendant not only never agreed to give plaintiff the continued, free, and unrestricted use of said stairway, but also never agreed to give him any other right or interest that he could not ignore at any time, he has certainly done no legal wrong to the plaintiff in preventing the further use of the stairway; and the courts cannot interfere to adjust and enforce the obligations of mere neighborly courtesy and kindness. If we turn to the testimony, we find that there was enough to sustain the finding, and such also as to justify the form in which it was made. The defendant testified, that while the work was progressing a written agreement was presented to him for his signature, which would give the plaintiff the rights he now claims; that he refused to sign it, and told the plaintiff that he would not sign anything that would interfere with his rights to sell, and would not give him any rights whatever in his building. At another time he said he had no objections to plaintiff's using the stairs so long as their respective families occupied the second stories, and could agree, but he would not give him any rights that he could not ignore, and that he did not believe any house or any stairway was ever built big enough for two families, but he had no objections to the plaintiff's trying to see how it would work. Evidently the court found in accord with this testimony. That finding is conclusive upon us, and we think decisive of the case adversely to the plaintiff.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

There being no other matter presented for our consideration, the judgment will be affirmed.

Rizer v. Gillpatrick.

ROBERT O. RIZER, Adm'r, &c., v. J. H. GILLPATRICK, Adm'r, &c.

1. PARTIES; Administrators; Refusal to Join as Plaintiff. When an estate has a right of action, and one of the administrators refuses to join as plaintiff in bringing the suit, the other may, under §37 of the code, bring the action, making his co-administrator a defendant, and giving in the petition the reason therefor.
2. ABATEMENT; Subsequent Action. A personal action will not be abated on motion of the defendant, because of a subsequent suit, although between the same parties, and upon the same cause of action. A fortiori, it will not when the parties and cause of action are both different.

ALL the necessary facts in the case are stated in the opinion. Gillpatrick, plaintiff, had judgment at the May Term 1875, and Rizer brings the case here on error.

McClure & Humphrey, for plaintiff in error.

J. H. Gillpatrick, and J. W. Taylor, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The facts of this case are briefly as follows: Gillpatrick and Rizer were the administrators of the estate of Samuel S. Caswell deceased, appointed in 1871. Rizer, into whose hands the funds of the estate seem to have passed, deposited them with the banking firm of James Streeter & Co., of which firm he was a member. When the three years for closing estates had passed, Gillpatrick desired to make a final settlement, draw out the funds from the bank, and pay them over to the heir. Rizer was unwilling. After some delay, Gillpatrick, as one of the administrators, brings this action against Streeter & Co. to recover from them the amount deposited, and makes his co-administrator a party defendant, alleging that he refused to join in any settlement of the estate, and to join in bringing this or any action to recover the funds.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Demurrers by Streeter & Co., and by the co-administrator, to the petition were overruled, and this is the first question presented. Subsequently the sole heir of the deceased brought an action against the two administrators and the surety on their official bond, alleging a final settlement had, since the commencement of the suit by Gillpatrick, a balance due on said settlement, and praying judgment for such balance. Upon this defendants herein filed a motion setting up said proceedings, and asking a dismissal of this action. This motion was also overruled, and this is the only other question presented. The case then proceeded to judgment in favor of Gillpatrick. The judgment however directed that the amount found due from Streeter & Co. be paid to the clerk of the court, to be applied under its order to the satisfaction of the demand of the heir for the balance due from the estate.

Was there any error in these rulings? We think not. The learned counsel for plaintiff in error contend, that one administrator cannot sue his co-administrator, nor sue alone for a debt due the estate; that under the executors-and-administrators act, if one administrator neglects his duty, he can be removed by the probate court, and the remaining administrator can then proceed to close up the estate alone, and that this remedy is to the exclusion of any other. It is undoubtedly true, as a general proposition, that one administrator, there being more than one, cannot sue alone for a debt due the estate. There is a unity of interest which requires that all should join as plaintiffs. The debt is due to the estate, and neither partially nor wholly to either administrator. The estate, is the party in interest, and the legal representatives of that party must be the nominal plaintiffs. This is true in all cases where there is a unity of interest in several parties. The code so provides, (Gen. Stat. 686, § 87:) "Of the parties to the action, those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs, or defendants." But it also provides for a contingency like the present, in which one of those united in interest refuses to join as plaintiff. The latter part of the same section reads, "But if the consent of one who should have been joined as plaintiff cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, the reason being stated in the petition." Language could not be more apt for a case like the present. The time for closing an estate having arrived, one of the administrators desires to collect from the bank the money of the estate there deposited, make a final settlement, and pay over to the heir the balance found due. The bank refuses to pay, and the other administrator refuses to join in a suit to compel payment. It is exactly the condition named in the statute. This was allowable under the old practice in equitable actions. Now there is but one form of actions, and the language of the statute is general, applying to all actions. In Pomeroy on Remedies and Remedial Rights, a late work, and one which is the most philosophical treatise on the code yet published, and one of the few text-books among the many flooding the press and the profession to-day having permanent value, and destined to rank among the legal classics, on page 309, § 261, the author says: "It is not indispensable, however, that all the executors or administrators should be plaintiffs; for it is enough, in equity, if all the parties are before the court, so that one executor or administrator may sue as plaintiff, if he make his co-executor or co-administrator a defendant"—citing Wilkins v. Fry, 1 Meriv. 244, 262; Blount v. Burrow, 3 Bro. C. C. 90; Dare v. Allen, 1 Green Ch. 288. And again, on page 283, § 195, he adds, after quoting § 37, code of Kansas, and the like provision from other states: "Referring to these provisions, it is plain that their language is general, inclusive, without exception, and applying alike to all kinds and classes of actions." And further, "No exception being made, nor even suggested, the courts cannot, unless by an act of positive legislation, by an act of direct usurpation, create an exception, and say that these general terms were intended to apply to equitable suits alone, while legal actions were intended to be left outside of their scope and effect." See also Decker v. Miller, 2 Paige, 150; Smith v. Lawrence, 11 Paige, 206; M'Gregor v. M'Gregor, 85 N. Y. 218. It is true, that Rizer had an equal right with Gillpatrick, pending the administration, to the possession and control of the funds, and under ordinary circumstances neither could maintain an action to recover these funds from the other. But here, the duty of closing the estate, and paying over the balance to the heir, existed. Rizer refused to discharge this duty. One step of the duty was the collection from the bank of the funds there deposited. The bank owed the estate so much. Both administrators should have united in collecting this debt. Rizer's refusal justified Gillpatrick in proceeding alone. That any remedy the one administrator might have by proceedings in the probate court does not exclude the jurisdiction of the district court in this case, seems clear. Shoemaker v. Brown, 10 Kas. 383.

Rizer v. Gillpatrick.

---

Nor do we see upon what principle it can be held that this action is abated by the subsequent suit of the heir upon the bond. Payment to the heir might prevent a judgment for anything but the costs accrued prior to the payment. It happens in this case, that one of the bankers is surety on the administrator's bond, and therefore defendant in both suits. But that accidental fact cannot change the rule of law applicable to all cases of this kind. And to guard against any possible danger of the surety's being compelled to pay twice, through any misappropriation by the administrator, the court has provided in the judgment in this action that the money be paid to the clerk, to be applied under its own order in satisfaction of the claim of the heir. M'Gregor v. M'Gregor, 35 N. Y. 218. There is between the two cases no identity of parties, or in the cause of action; and if there were, the second would abate rather than the first. "The pendency of an action will make a second action, for the same cause, and in which the same judgment can be rendered, abatable; but not vice versa." Buffin v. Tilton, 17 Pick. 510; Webster v. Randall, 19 Pick. 18. A subsequent suit may be abated by an allegation of the pendency of a prior suit, but the converse of the proposition is, in personal actions, never true. Renner v. Marshall, 1 Wheat. 215; Bacon's Abr., Tit. Abatement M.

death, and that she thereupon qualified and entered upon the duties of said administration." The Railway Company demurred, assigning the following grounds: "1st, The plaintiff has no capacity to sue, not having been appointed administratrix of the estate of Joseph Stewart within the state of Kansas; 2d, There is a defect of parties plaintiff, inasmuch as Benjamin P. Cutter, husband of the plaintiff in the petition mentioned, is not joined as plaintiff in the action; 3d, The petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The district court, at the September Term 1874, overruled the demurrer, and the Railway Company brings the case here on error.

J. P. Usher, for plaintiff in error.

Green & Hessin, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The first question in this case is, whether a foreign administrator can maintain an action under §422 of the code of civil procedure. We think he can. The section provides that, "When the death of one is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representatives of the former may maintain an action therefor against the latter, if the former might have maintained an action had he lived, against the latter for an injury, for the same act or omission." Now the language is general, purports to give the cause of action in every such case happening within this state, whether the deceased be a resident or nonresident, whether death ensues here, or elsewhere. All that it nominates as the condition of a right of recovery is, the wrongful act, and the resulting death. Nor do the proceeds of the recovery become assets in the hand of the administrator for the payment of the debts of the intestate. They are appropriated by the same section which gives the right of action, to the "exclusive benefit of the widow and children, if any, or next of kin," and the recovery of a foreign administrator does not at all conflict with those provisions of our law which attempt to secure the appropriation of the property of the decedent within this state to the payment of his debts due here, in preference to those due elsewhere. It, so to speak, creates a fund for the exclusive use of certain relatives of the deceased, and names the personal representatives as the trustees of that fund, and authorizes suit in their names. Any one else might have been named as the proper party plaintiff. Authority might have been given to the widow, and for the benefit of herself and children. This question has been before the supreme court of Indiana in the case of J. M. & I. Rld. Co. v. Hendricks, 41 Ind. 49, and the right of action sustained. This is the only authority counsel have cited that is apparently exactly in point, and to that we refer for a fuller discussion of the question. There is a slight difference between the section of the Indiana statute and ours concerning the right of foreign administrators to sue, but we do not think it affects the question materially. See also, Hartford Rld. Co. v. Andrews, 36 Conn. 213.

The second objection to the petition is, that it appears that since the granting of letters of administration to the plaintiff she has intermarried with one B. P. Cutter. Letters of administration were issued in Colorado. It is not alleged what, by the law of Colorado, is the effect of such marriage upon the letters of administration. Counsel contends that, in the absence of any allegation, the common law must be presumed to be in force there, and that by that the husband upon marriage became a joint administrator and should have been united with her as party plaintiff. We do not understand that we are bound to presume, as counsel contends. The petition shows an appointment which gives an authority to sue. It does not allege any revocation of that authority by the power that granted it. It alleges a fact which by our present law would have no effect upon the authority, (though as to the law prior to 1868, see Comp. Laws, page 516, § 29.) And if we are to rest upon presumptions, we should presume that the laws of Colorado in this respect are like our own, and hence, that the authority granted still continued, and remained solely in the plaintiff, notwithstanding her marriage. Furrow v. Chapin, 13 Kas. 113; French v. Pease, 10 Kas. 54.

M. O. GILL v. S. KAUFMAN & Co.

1. PURCHASES BY SAMPLE; Right of Purchaser. A purchaser by sample has the right, independent of any express agreement, to refuse to receive the goods offered if they fail to correspond with the sample. [Ante, 37.]
2. ——— Hence, when liquors are sold by a wholesale liquor-dealer in Ohio, through his agent, to a party in Kansas, the fact that such right is by express agreement reserved to the purchaser, does not change what otherwise was an Ohio into a Kansas contract. [Dolson v. Hope, 7-161; see cases cited 17-446; Feineman v. Sachs, 33-621.]

Error from Cherokee District Court.

ACTION on a note given by Gill to Kaufman & Co. Answer, "that said note was given for intoxicating liquors sold within the state of Kansas, in violation of the dramshop act, (ch. 35 of Gen. Stat. of 1868,) and hence said note is void." Trial at the January Term 1875, and judgment in favor of plaintiffs for $133.50, and Gill brings the case here on error."

Hallowell & Anderson, for plaintiff in error, contended that the contract of sale was a Kansas contract. So long as the vendee continues to have the right, either to object to the quantum or quality of the goods, there is no executed sale or contract. 1 Chitty on Contr. 392; Story on Contr. 376; 10 Bing. 376; 3 B. & A. 321; 20 Geo. 574; 23 Iowa, 194. And being a Kansas contract, it was illegal and void, as Kaufman & Co. had no license to sell in this state.

W. H. Whiteman, for defendants in error, contended that there was nothing in this case to take it out of the rule laid down by this court in Haug v. Gillett, 14 Kas. 140, and that the defense interposed was not good.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: This was an action on a note. The defense was, that the note was given for liquors sold in this state without license. Kaufman & Co. were wholesale liquor-merchants in Cincinnati, Ohio. The evidence shows that the goods were sold by sample, through the agent of defendants in error, and a portion of the samples left with Gill to compare when the liquors arrived. Also, that Gill was to pay freight, and if liquors did not come up to standard that defendants in error were to refund freight money and take liquors away. Did these facts change the place of the contract, which otherwise was clearly an Ohio contract? We think not. The express agreement was no more than the one the law would imply, if nothing had been said. A purchaser by sample always has the right to refuse to receive the goods if they fail to correspond with the sample. This question has already been before us, and so decided. McCarty v. Gordon, ante, p. 35. See also, Boothby v. Plaisted, 51 New Hamp. 436.

The judgment will be affirmed.

3. ——— The police power of a state, properly exercised, aims to regulate the intercourse of citizen with citizen, to prescribe the manner of using one's property, and pursuing one's occupation, so as not to trespass on the property or rights of others. Police is, in general, a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crimes, or of calamities.
4. RAILROAD CHARTERS; Claim of Vested Rights. A charter granted to a railroad corporation by the territorial legislature does not confer nor secure rights beyond the reach of the police power of the state. December Term 1874. The facts were agreed to by the parties, as follows: "In May 1874, a locomotive drawing a train of defendant's cars, and run by the employes of said company, struck and killed a steer and heifer mentioned in plaintiff's petition, near Silver Lake station, said animals then being the property of Mower. The railroad was not fenced at the place where said animals were killed. The defendant is not chargeable with negligence other than such as the law implies from the facts herein stated. More than thirty days before the commencement of this suit, plaintiff demanded of the ticket agent of defendant at said Silver Lake station, that the defendant pay him the full value of said animals, to-wit, $45. The value of said animals at the time of the killing was $39, and a reasonable attorney-fee for the prosecution of said action for plaintiff is $25." From these facts, the court, as conclusions of law, found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of $39 damages and $25 attorney-fee, in all $64, and costs, and rendered judgment accordingly. The Railway Co. brings the case here on error.

N. C. McFarland, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: In this case the constitutionality of the following act is challenged, and this is the only question presented for our consideration:

CH. 94, LAWS OF 1874.—An act relating to killing or wounding stock by railroads.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas:

SECTION 1. Every railway company or corporation in this state, and every assignee or lessee of such company or corporation, shall be liable to pay the owner the full value of each and every animal killed, and all damages to each and every animal wounded, by the engine or cars on such railway, or in any other manner whatever in operating such railway, irrespective of the fact as to whether such killing or wounding was caused by the negligence of such railway company or corporation, or the assignee or lessee thereof, or not.

Opinion of the Court.

SEC. 2. In case such railway company or corporation, or the assignee or lessee thereof, shall fail for thirty days after demand made therefor by the owner of such animal, or his agent or attorney, to pay such owner, or his agent or attorney, the full value of such animal if killed, or damages thereto if wounded, such owner may sue and recover from such railway company or corporation, or the assignee or lessee thereof, the full value of such animal, or damages thereto, together with a reasonable attorney-fee for the prosecution of the suit, and all costs in any court of competent jurisdiction in the county in which such animal was killed or wounded.

SEC. 3. The demand mentioned in section two of this act may be made of any ticket-agent or station-agent of such railway company or corporation, or the assignee or lessee thereof.

SEC. 4. In all actions prosecuted under this act, it shall be the duty of the court, if tried by the court, or jury if tried by a jury, if the judgment or verdict be for the plaintiff, to find in addition to their general finding for plaintiff the amount if anything allowed for an attorney-fee in the case.

SEC. 5. This act shall not apply to any railway company or corporation, or the assignee or lessee thereof, whose road is inclosed with a good and lawful fence to prevent such animals from being on such road.—Approved, February 27, 1874.

We have been favored with several briefs upon this question, both from counsel for plaintiff in error, and counsel representing other railroads. There are quite a number of cases in this court in which various roads are interested, turning upon this question, and we are informed that there are many more in the several district courts waiting for the decision in this. While the amount in controversy in each of these cases is small, yet the number of cases already in suit, and the still greater number which in the ordinary experience of the management of railroad trains may be expected to arise in the future, render the question one of considerable moment. It is generally conceded by the counsel, and we think is both settled by the authorities and resting in sound reason, that the legislature has the power to require railroad corporations to fence their tracks, and to make them liable for the value of all stock killed by their trains in consequence of a failure to so fence. This power is sustained as a part of the police power of the state, a power whose limits are perhaps as illy defined as any power claimed or exercised by the state. "It is much easier," says Ch. J. Shaw, in Com'lt h v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84, "to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power, than to mark its boundaries, or prescribe limits to its exercise." It aims to regulate the intercourse of citizen with citizen, to prescribe the manner of using one's property, and pursuing one's occupation, so as not to trespass on the property or rights of others; and as such, is a power whose necessities and uses grow with the increasing complexities of our civilization, and the increasing diversities in the industries and modes of life. The sphere therefore of its operations is ever widening. Every new use to which the forces of nature are put, calls for a new interference of this power, that such use may not operate to the injury of others. Probably no single agency has made so large a demand for the exercise of this power as the agency of steam in locomotion. It is by virtue of this power that the state has assumed to regulate the speed of trains, to require flagmen at crossings of streets in populous cities, the blowing of a whistle or the ringing of a bell at places of supposed extra danger, and the erection of conspicuous sign-boards at all crossings of highways, and indeed all the other various measures to secure safety in the necessarily dangerous matter of running railroad trains. In the exercise of the same power the legislature can require railroad corporations to fence their tracks. As police is, according to Jeremy Bentham, "in general a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crimes, or of calamities," so, to prevent the injuries which might result to a train full of passengers thrown from the track by a stray animal upon it, a calamity of not infrequent occurrence, the general judgment of the public has declared that the track should be fenced, and the state has cast the duty of fencing solely on the corporation, the running of whose trains gives rise to the danger. It is said by Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, p. 579, that this power "has been sustained on two grounds: first, as regarding the division fence between adjoining proprietors, and in that view being but a reasonable provision for the protection of domestic animals; and second, and chiefly, as essential to the protection of persons being transported in the railway carriages." So, in Trice v. Hannibal & St. Jo. Rld. Co., 49 Mo. 488, it is said, "While the protection of property of adjacent proprietors is an incidental object of the statute, its main and leading one is the protection of the traveling public. To insure such protection, railroads are imperatively required to fence their tracks, and the penal liability deemed necessary to enforce this requirement, is a matter of legislative discretion." In Ohio & Miss. Rld. Co. v. McClelland, 25 Ill. 140: "When the safety of persons and property both demand the fencing of these roads, it is no more than the exercise of a reasonable police regulation to require it, and to impose adequate penalties to secure a compliance." In Blair v. Milwaukee, &c., Rld. Co., 20 Wis. 254: Experience had shown that it was entirely insufficient for the protection of the public to leave the building and maintaining of these fences, so as to prevent such intrusion upon the track, to the sense of duty or interest of the multitudes of proprietors of lands adjoining our long lines of railroads. To remedy this evil, and insure the safety of the traveling public so far as possible in this respect, the act in question was passed making it the sole and absolute duty of all railroads companies to fence and provide their roads with suitable cattle-guards."

But say counsel, this law does not come within the scope of those decisions—is not the exercise of that power. That power may impose the duty of fencing the road upon the company, and punish a failure to perform this duty by liability for all injuries resulting therefrom. But here no duty of any kind is imposed. Fencing is not declared a duty; it is only held up as a means of escaping liability, and only the single liability for animals killed. "As long," say counsel, "as the railroad companies pay for the cattle they are guilty of no breach of their obligations. They can fence or not, just as they please, and the traveling public is in no way benefited." And again, "A law that lays down no rule of conduct, that neither commands nor forbids, cannot be a police regulation." While doubtless there is weight to the suggestion of counsel in this respect, we are disposed to think they overestimate its importance. We think they place too much stress on the form of the enactment, and regard it as unconstitutional legislation to do that by indirection which it is clearly constitutional to do directly. The difference between the concession of counsel, and the law, is about this: The concession is, that it is lawful to say to the railroads, you must fence, or pay for stock killed. The law is, you must pay for stock killed, unless you fence. In each case, payment for stock killed is the result; non-fencing, the condition. In each case the liability is the same, and the manner of avoiding liability the same. For, though where the command to fence is in terms expressed, a failure to fence may carry the liability of the company to a further reach, and a wider extent, yet it is almost the unvarying rule in such legislation to follow the command with but one expressed penalty, that of payment for stock killed. And conceding the larger results, if the legislature has power indirectly to subject the company to more extended liabilities, has it not the power directly to impose the lesser and included liabilities? While it seems to us that that form of legislation, which counsel contends is essential to the validity of such an enactment, is the better, and approaches the subject in the more correct way, because stating first and in mandatory words what the company must or at least ought to do in respect to the manner of its carrying on its dangerous business, and afterward the penalty for non-compliance, yet we are not prepared to hold a disregard of that form fatal. While generally the protection of the train and its passengers is considered the main ground upon which to sustain this railroad-fence legislation, and rightly that should be the paramount consideration, yet the protection of domestic animals, the property of adjoining proprietors, is also laid down as one of the grounds for upholding it. (See the citations heretofore made.) It seems as though our legislature had specially in thought the minor consideration. If so, it may have been because the past experience of railroad matters in this state had called more special attention thereto. Either was a proper subject for its consideration, and within its powers. Looking to the legislation of other states, we find much that is kindred in form, and yet has received the approval of the courts. In New Hampshire, at one time, there was a law in force in terms requiring railroads to fence. A commission to revise the statutes included this in their report, but the legislature struck it out, and in lieu thereof enacted that if any railroad should neglect to keep a sufficient fence, the adjoining landowner might give notice, and then, if not built, build it himself, and recover of the company double the cost thereof. Here it will be seen that there is in terms no duty of fencing cast upon the company, and the argument is strong, from the change in the law, that the duty has been removed. Still, the court held it the duty of the company to fence, and that it was liable for the stock killed if it did not. Dean v. Sullivan Railroad, 2 Foster, 816.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

K. P. Rly. Co. v. Mower.

In Vermont, Gen. Stat., ch. 28, § 78, railroad companies are declared liable for all property adjacent to their roads destroyed by fire from their engines, "unless they shall show that they have used all due caution and diligence, and employed suitable expedients to prevent such injury;" and this is approved in G. T. Rly. Co. v. Richardson, U. S. Sup. Ct., 8 Cent. Law J. 858. In Massachusetts is a much stronger statute: "Every (railroad) corporation shall be responsible in damages to any person or corporation whose buildings or other property may be injured by fire communicated by its locomotive engines, and shall have an insurable interest in the property upon its route for which it may be so held responsible, and may procure insurance thereon in its own behalf." Gen. Stat., ch. 63, § 101. This has been sustained in Hart v. Western Rld., 13 Metc. 99; Lyman v. B. & W. Rld., 4 Cush. 288; Ross v. B. & W. Rld., 6 Allen, 87; Ingersoll v. S. & P. Rld., 8 Allen, 438; Perley v. Eastern Railroad, 98 Mass. 414; Safford v. B. & M. Rld., 103 Mass. 388; Pierce v. W. & N. Rld., 105 Mass. 199. In the case in 98 Mass. the court say, that "The liability of this railroad is not at common law, nor dependent upon the defendant's want of care." In that in 8 Allen, "The legislature has chosen to make it a condition of the right to run carriages impelled by the agency of fire, that the corporation employing them shall be responsible for all injuries which the fire may cause." And again, in the case in 4 Cushing, "The right to use the parcel of land appropriated to a railroad does not deprive the legislature of the power to enact such regulations, and impose such liability for injuries suffered from the mode of using the road, as the occasion and circumstances may reasonably justify." A similar statute was recognized as valid in Adden v. White Mts. Rld., 55 New Hamp. 413. And another was sustained in Chapman v. A. & St. L. Rld., 37 Maine, 92; Pratt v. A. & St. L. Rld., 42 Maine, 579. These cases are in principle very strongly in point. An additional liability is in terms directly and absolutely imposed upon the company, a liability which they cannot, as in the case before us, by any means avoid, but to compensate for which they are given an additional privilege. If in lieu of the privileges given by the 5th section of our statute, the companies were given an insurable interest in the cattle along the line of their road, the parallelism would be very close. And this insurable interest is granted to the companies as the only equivalent for the added burden, and it is something which they may or may not avail themselves of. The burden they may not avoid; the insurance they may use or not, as they choose. So here, the burden is absolute; the stock must be paid for; the fencing is discretionary, though unlike the law in Massachusetts, the privilege if used will avoid the burden. But in Indiana we find authority still more closely in point. Their stock-law is, so far as any question here is involved, precisely like ours. It imposes the liability directly, and then declares that the liability shall not rest upon any company that securely fences its road. The supreme court of that state have frequently passed upon that statute, and uniformly sustained it. See the cases heretofore cited from Indiana. We conclude, therefore, upon both reason and authority, that the act before us is, as to its essential elements at least, within the scope of the legislative power. And that is, in this direction, the limit of judicial inquiry. All further questions must be considered and passed upon elsewhere.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

Some minor matters are also presented which require brief notice. It is insisted first that this act cannot apply to the plaintiff in error, because it holds under a charter granted by the territorial legislature, and therefore now incapable of change without its consent. But the chartered rights of a corporation are not more sacred than the individual's rights of person and property, and all must give way to any legislative exercise of the police power of the state. In Nelson v. Vt. & C. Rld., 26 Vt. 717, it is said, "It is certain, we think, that the legislature cannot impose new burdens upon corporations under such circumstances, which are merely and exclusively of private interest and concern, and which have nothing to do with the general security, quiet and good order." But there can be no doubt they have the same right by general legislation over these corporations, which they have over natural persons. By general laws they may require them to conform to such regulations of a police character as they may deem for the security of the rights of citizens generally, and most conducive to quiet and good order, and the security of property, and even the life of animals." See also, Thorpe v. R. & B. Rld. Co., 27 Vt. 140; Lyman v. B. & W. Rld. Co., 4 Cush. 288; Pratt v. A. & St. L. Rld., 42 Maine, 579; Norris v. Androscoggin Rld., 89 Maine, 273; Bulkby v. N. Y. & N. H. Rld., 27 Conn. 479.

K. P. Rly. Co. v. Mower.

Again, it is said that that portion of § 2 giving to the stock-owner the right to recover attorney-fees is unconstitutional. The proposition is thus stated by the learned counsel for plaintiff in error:

"Our state constitution, (Bill of Rights, §§ 1, 18,) guarantees to all equity of rights, and remedies for injuries by course of law. We contend that a law which gives a successful plaintiff in a civil action his attorney's fees, and denies them to defendant, is a most gross violation of these constitutional provisions."

We do not think the contention of counsel can be sustained. While the law may be harsh and rigorous, (and yet its rigor may have seemed to the legislature as essential to its value, for, if a claimant for stock killed was compelled to pay his own attorney's fees, it might well happen that in all cases the amount of his claim—such amounts being uniformly small—would be consumed by attorney's fees, and so leave the claimant in no better condition than before,) we see no reason to hold it beyond the power of the legislature. It is no uncommon thing for legislatures to provide, in cases where failure to pay seems to imply more than ordinary wrong, that such failure should carry with it something in the nature of a penalty. Sometimes double or treble damages are given. The Iowa stock-law gave double damages. Our trespass act provides for both double and treble damages; (Gen. Stat., p. 1095. §§ 1 and 2.) Ten per cent. may sometimes be added in the discretion of the court. Other illustrations might be suggested.

Some other matters are suggested, but it is unnecessary to prolong this opinion. We are of opinion that the act is constitutional, and applicable to the plaintiff in error.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

It is understood that the cases of the same plaintiff in error against Israel M. Tolls, and same against E. J. Hopper, and the case of the L. L. & G. Rld. Co. v. H. M. Waters, involve only the same question, and the judgment in those cases will be affirmed.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY CO. v. JOHN YANZ.

RAILROADS; KILLING CATTLE; ATTORNEY-FEES; *Bill of Particulars; Sufficiency; Findings—Waiver. In an action against a railway company in a justice's court under ch. 94 of the laws of 1874, for killing plaintiff's cow, where plaintiff does not allege in his bill of particulars that the company's road was not fenced, and says nothing about attorney-fees except in the prayer for judgment, and the only prayer for judgment is "for said sum of $30, together with costs of suit, and a reasonable attorney-fee for the prosecution of this suit," and the case is tried both in the justice's court and in the district court upon this bill of particulars without any objection being made as to its sufficiency, and the district court finds specially, among other things, that the road was not fenced, that the cow was worth $30, that a reasonable attorney-fee for prosecuting the suit in the justice's court was $10, and in the district court $25, for which sums judgment is rendered against the defendant, with costs, and the defendant then brings the case to the supreme court, and assigns for error merely that "the decision of said judge was contrary to law," and the question of the sufficiency of the plaintiff's bill of particulars is raised for the first time in the supreme court, and then by brief only; held, that the judgment of the district court will not be disturbed merely because of any supposed insufficiency in the plaintiff's bill of particulars, nor will it be disturbed because of any supposed insufficiency in the findings of the court below with respect to attorney-fee. [See ante, 573.]

Error from Pottawatomie District Court.

THE pleadings and proceedings in the court below are fully stated in the opinion. Yanz recovered judgment, at the February Term 1875, for $30 for a cow killed by defendant's cars, and $35 attorney-fees, and costs of suit; and the Railway Company brings the case here on error.

J. P. Usher, and C. E. Bretherton, for plaintiff in error.

Merritt & Merritt, for defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

VALENTINE, J.: This was an action brought by John Yanz against the Kansas Pacific Railway Company for killing one of the plaintiff's cows. The act of 1874, (Laws of 1874, pp. 143, 144,) authorizing the recovery of damages and the recovery of attorney-fees in such cases, has already been held by this court to be constitutional and valid. (K. P. Rly. Co. v. Mower, ante, p. 573.) The only question then for us now to consider is, whether under said act, and under the facts of this case, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The action was commenced in a justice's court, and the plaintiff filed a bill of particulars therein, which reads as follows:

(Title.) "The said John Yanz, plaintiff, complains of the said Kansas Pacific Railway Company, a corporation operating a railway through the county of Pottawatomie in the state of Kansas, defendant, for that the said plaintiff was, on the 5th of August 1874, the owner of a milch cow of the value of $30, and that the said defendant in operating its railway, and by the engine and cars on the said railway, did kill the said cow of the said plaintiff, to the damage of the said plaintiff $30. And said plaintiff further says, that on the 29th of August 1874 he demanded of said Kansas Pacific Railway Company payment of the damages aforesaid, for said cow killed as aforesaid, which said defendant refused and still refuses to pay.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment for said sum of $30, together with costs of suit, and a reasonable attorney-fee for the prosecution of this suit."

Opinion of the Court.

---

The defendant, for its bill of particulars, filed a general denial. The case was then tried on these pleadings, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $30 for the cow, $10 for attorney-fees, and for costs. The defendant appealed to the district court, where the case was again tried by the court, without a jury. None of the evidence introduced on the trial was preserved, but the court, at the request of the defendant, made special findings of fact and of law. Among the findings of fact were the following, to-wit:

“The railroad of the defendant, at the time and place where said cow was killed, was not fenced.

“On the 28th of September 1874, the plaintiff commenced his suit before Justice Baker, in Wamego township, for the recovery of said damages. A reasonable attorney-fee for the prosecution of said suit by Messrs. Merritt, his attorneys, was $10; and a reasonable attorney-fee for prosecuting the suit on this appeal by said attorneys, is $25.”

“The defendant objected to any evidence being given of the value of attorney-fees for prosecuting said suit, or to any finding concerning the same, which objection the court overruled, and the defendant excepted.” The court, after making said special findings of fact and law, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $30 for the cow, $10 for attorney-fees in the justice’s court, $25 for attorney-fees in the district court, and for costs. The defendant now brings the case to this court, and assigns for error that, “The decision of said judge was contrary to law.” This is the only assignment of error. The defendant however, now, as plaintiff in error, claims in its brief that the bill of particulars of the plaintiff below was not sufficient: First, because it did not allege that the company’s road was not fenced; second, because it did not claim as damages as much as the judgment was rendered for. And plaintiff in error also now claims in its brief, that the findings of the court do not support the judgment for attorney-fees. If these questions can or ought to be considered under said assignment of error, which is at least doubtful, we would have to decide upon all of them against the plaintiff in error. No objection was made in the court below to the plaintiff’s bill of particulars.

the treasurer of the tax, protesting its illegality, declaring that payment is made solely to avoid the issue of process, and asserting an intention to sue for the sum illegally paid, should be considered an involuntary payment—one made to prevent an immediate seizure of the taxpayer's property, although such payment was made seventeen days before the time fixed for the treasurer to issue his warrant.

Error from Wyandotte District Court.

INJUNCTION, brought by the K. P. Railway Company, against the Board of County Commissioners, and E. W. S. Drought, as sheriff, of Wyandotte county, to restrain the collection of alleged illegal taxes. The plaintiff's petition stated, that on the first day of May 1874, plaintiff duly listed for taxation, all its rolling-stock and other personal property, as required by ch. 96, Laws of 1874, p. 147, and returned the same, with a sworn schedule thereof, to the county clerk of said county; that the total length of the main track of plaintiff's railroad in said county was 21 55-100ths miles, and the proportion of value of said rolling-stock, listed as aforesaid, amounted to $1,076.68 per mile; that the aggregate value of plaintiff's personal property so returned for taxation to said county clerk for said year 1874 was $72,653.04; that neither the county clerk nor the board of county commissioners of said county proceeded to correct such statement as false or erroneous, nor did said county clerk notify the plaintiff that he or said county board considered such sworn statement as false, incomplete or erroneous, so that plaintiff might have an opportunity of showing that its statement was correct; nor is there in the office of said county clerk any statement of facts or evidence on which he or said county board have made any correction of plaintiff's sworn statement; that said county clerk illegally entered said property on the tax-roll at the value of $1,555.64 per mile, and so apportioned the same for the purpose of taxation among the different cities, township, school and road districts of his county, thus making an arbitrary and oppressive increase of $479.01 per mile on the value thereof, thus increasing the aggregate value of said property to $82,897.90—being $10,244.86 more than the valuation returned by plaintiff; that the amount of taxes legally imposed on the property so valued and returned by plaintiff was $3,608.02; that the amount actually and arbitrarily assessed was $4,562.16, of which the sum of $954.14 was and is illegal, being levied on said illegally-increased valuation made as aforesaid; that, as provided in and by ch. 131, laws of 1874, one-half of said legal taxes was due and payable 20th December 1874, and the other half 20th June 1875; that on the 14th of said December plaintiff tendered to the treasurer of said Wyandotte county $1,804.01, being one-half the legal taxes assessed on plaintiff's personal property, which said treasurer refused; that then, under protest, and to prevent the issuance of a tax-warrant, plaintiff paid said treasurer the sum of $2,281.08, (accompanying such payment with a written protest and notice, which are quoted in full in the opinion;) that on the 20th of said June, plaintiff tendered to said treasurer the further sum of $1,326.94, being the balance of personal tax legally and properly due after credit being given for said sum of $2,281.08 paid on 14th December 1874, but said treasurer refused to so receive the same, and demanded instead the further sum of $2,281.08, in addition to the like sum previously paid, which latter sum the plaintiff declined to pay; and that on August 18th 1875, said treasurer issued his precept to said sheriff, one of the defendants, to collect said sum of $2,281.08, and the penalty alleged to have accrued thereon, and said sheriff is about to execute said precept by seizure and sale of the property of said plaintiff, etc. Upon this petition, which was duly verified, plaintiff applied to the district judge, at chambers, for a temporary injunction. Notice of such application was given to defendants. Said application was heard on the 21st of August 1875. The district judge refused the injunction, and plaintiff appeals, and brings the case here on error.

J. P. Usher, and C. E. Bretherton, for plaintiff.

H. L. Alden, county-attorney, for defendants.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: The first question in this case is, upon the construction to be given to the railroad tax-law of 1874. By the plaintiff in error it is claimed, that the valuation returned by the company is to be accepted as the proper valuation, subject to correction after notice, as provided in §65 of the general tax-law, (Gen. Stat., p. 1041.) On the other hand it is claimed that the valuation is to be made by the city and township assessors. The question hinges in the first instance on the construction to be given to §7, which reads as follows:

“SEC. 7. The county clerk shall return to the assessor of the county or city a copy of the schedule or list of the railroad-track, and other real estate, and of the rolling-stock and other personal property pertaining to the railroad; and such railroad-track and other real estate, rolling-stock and other personal property, shall be assessed by the city and township assessors. Such property shall be treated in all respects in regard to assessment and equalization the same as other property belonging to individuals, except that it shall be treated as property belonging to railroads, under terms “lands,” “railroad-track,” “lots,” and “personal property.”—(Laws of 1874, p. 149.*)

Now if the sentence which declares that the rolling-stock, etc., shall be assessed by the city and township assessors, controls, and refers specifically to the valuation of the property, then the contention of the defendant in error must be sustained. If on the other hand the clause in italics controls, we must turn to the general tax-law, and if under it the valuations placed upon their personal property by individual owners are conclusive unless corrected by proper proceedings, then in like manner the valuation made by the company must be taken as conclusive. The question is one of difficulty. Indeed, it seems impossible to adopt any construction which will give full force to every clause in the section. Perhaps it will throw some light on the matter if we examine the general tax-law, and see what rule obtains in it, and what are the provisions for securing to the state a correct tax-list, and at the same time protecting the property owners against excessive valuation. As to real estate, the law is plain. Sec. 81 declares that it shall be the duty of the county assessor to list and value all the real property in his county. By §43, the county board is ordered to meet on the first Monday in July to equalize the valuation of the real estate. By §44, notice of this meeting is to be given, so that "all persons feeling themselves aggrieved can appear and have all errors in the return corrected, as justice and equity may demand." Here then, is what seems a fair and reasonable provision for protecting both the state and the taxpayer. In the first place, the state, through its officer, and without consultation with the taxpayer, determines the value of the property, and then provides a tribunal, public notices of whose meetings must be given, before which any property-holder may appear and make such showing as he desires, to have any error in the valuation of his property corrected. As to personal property, the law is not so plain—at least it is not stated so directly and positively as in the case of real estate. Still, an examination of the various sections will, we think, make clear the rule as to personal property. In the first place, there is no board of equalization of personal property, no tribunal before which the injured property-holder may come and have his assessment reduced. But on the other hand, we find provision made for the state to correct any errors made by the individual. Section 65 reads as follows:

"Sec. 65. The county clerk or board of county commissioners, if he or they shall have reason to believe, or be informed, that any person has given to the assessor a false statement of his personal property, moneys, or credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies or otherwise, or that the assessor has not returned the full amount required to be listed in his ward or township, or has omitted or made an erroneous return of any personal property, moneys or credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies or otherwise, which are by law subject to taxation, shall proceed, at any time before the final settlement with the county treasurer to correct the return of the assessor, and to charge such person on the duplicate with the proper amount of taxes; to enable him to do which, he is hereby authorized and empowered to issue compulsory process, and require the attendance of any person or persons whom he may suppose to have a knowledge of the value of such articles of personal property, moneys or credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or joint-stock companies, or otherwise, and examine such persons on oath or affirmation in relation such statement or return; and it shall be the duty of the clerk in all such cases, to notify such person, before making entry on the duplicate, that he may have an opportunity of showing that his statement or return to the assessor was correct; and the county clerk shall in all cases, file in his office a statement of the facts or evidence on which he made such correction; but he shall in no case reduce the amount returned by the assessor, without the written consent of the state auditor, given on a statement of facts submitted by the county clerk."

Here it is the false statement of the individual, or the omission of the assessor, that it is to be corrected, matters almost necessarily prejudicial to the state, and beneficial to the individual. And that this is not for the benefit of the individual, is made more clear by the provision that there shall be no reduction without the written consent of the state auditor, given on a statement of facts submitted by the county clerk—a proceeding too cumbersome to be of any practical value to the individual. Referring to the earlier portions of the tax-law, we find that the individual is required to return under oath a statement of his personal property and its value. Sec. 10 is as follows:

"SEC. 10. Every person required by this act to list property, shall make out and verify by his oath, and, at any time after ten days from the time of receiving notice to that effect from the assessor, shall deliver to said assessor, on demand, a statement of all personal property, and the value thereof, which by this act he is required to list." * * *

Section 15 gives the rules for the valuation of property. In speaking of real estate, it refers to the "assessor" as the party fixing the value. But as to personal property, it says in one place, "the person required to fix the value thereon;" and in another, "at such prices as the person listing believes them to be worth." Sections 17, 18 and 21, define merchants and manufacturers, and how the value of their property shall be ascertained for taxation; and in them it is provided, that "he

---

Opinion of the Court.

(the merchant or manufacturer) shall estimate" the value, etc. Sec. 29, which in terms applies to most corporations, provides that certain officers thereof shall under oath return to the county clerk the various items of their property, and the value thereof; and this value stands unless the county clerk believes that false or incorrect returns have been made, when he can correct the return as in § 65. The assessor has apparently nothing to do with these returns. By § 53, a blank for his statement of taxable property is required to be left with every taxpayer. By § 57, wherever the taxpayer fails to make return, or refuses to swear to his return, the assessor may proceed to ascertain the property, and its value, and may call witnesses and examine them, and from such examination determine the amount and value of his property. By § 60, if the taxpayer was absent when the assessor was collecting his returns he may thereafter go before the county clerk and make his statement under oath, and the county clerk is to correct the returns by that statement, thus making the valuation of the individual to correct the valuation of the officer. The assessor is required to make oath that he has returned the value given by the taxpayer, as appears from § 63 as follows:

"Sec. 63. The assessor, when making his returns of personal property, shall take and subscribe an oath, which shall be certified by the officer administering the same; and attached to the return which he is required to make, which shall be in the following form: 'I, _____, assessor for _____ township, in the county of _____, do solemnly swear that the value of all personal property, * * * for which a statement has been made to me, by the person required by this act, for the assessment and taxation of all property in this state, according to the true value, to list the same, is hereby returned as set forth in such statement.'"

And by § 64 it is made the duty of the county clerk to add to the valuation returned, when the owner refused to swear to the value, fifty per centum on the value returned. Other sections might be cited, all pointing in the same direction. But these are sufficient. They make it clear, that the rule as to personal property differs from that as to real. In the former, the individual fixes the value, and that value controls, unless the state, dissatisfied therewith, takes measures to correct it; and these measures, as already decided by this court, require notice to the individual. Leavenworth Co. v. Lang, 8 Kas. 284. In this way are the rights of the individual and the state both secured. The individual giving the value, of course does himself no injustice; and the state is given the right to inquire into that value, summon the individual before a tribunal, present testimony, and have any errors corrected. It may be well, before passing from this subject, to notice the change made by the law of 1876, (Laws of 1876, p. 59, §14; p. 71, §59; p. 77, §74,) by which it would seem that the owner's valuation is no longer conclusive, and that the board of equalization has jurisdiction as to personal as well as real property.

With this consideration of the general tax-law, let us now return to the railroad tax-law. And first, we remark that if there be no way of reconciling the conflicting clauses, force ought to be given to those which would place this law in harmony with the general tax-law, and would secure the rights of both the state and the railroads, rather than to those which would make this incongruous and out of harmony with other legislation, and would expose the railroads to arbitrary and excessive assessments, without adequate means of investigation and redress. Now, §7 heretofore quoted, reads, that a schedule of all the property real and personal, naming the classes as they are described in the act, shall be returned by the clerk to the assessor, and that he shall assess all, and then, that all proceedings respecting assessment and equalization shall be in harmony with the general tax-law. Counsel for the county would harmonize these two seemingly conflicting provisions by adding to the last some expression like this—"except as heretofore provided." Counsel for the company would harmonize them by construing the two together to mean, that the assessor shall assess railroad property as he assesses individual property—that is, placing his own judgment upon the value of the real, and accepting the owner's as to the value of the personal. And this, we are constrained to hold, is the true construction. The assessor is spoken of as such, even in reference to personal property, though as to that, as we have seen, he is to accept the owner's statement as to the value; and there is no greater impropriety in the use of language to say, that he shall assess the real and personal property, when it is intended that he shall as to the latter property accept as conclusive the statement of the owner as to value. A somewhat similar use of language is found in the amendment of 1869, vesting the duties of the county assessor in the township assessors. (Laws 1869, p. 241.) It reads:

"SEC. 31. It shall be the duty of the township assessor in each year to list and value all the real and personal property in his township not expressly exempted from taxation.

"SEC. 33. The assessor shall from actual view, and from the best sources of information within his reach, determine as nearly as practicable the true value of all taxable property within his township, according to the rules prescribed by this act for valuing property."

Unless this be the true construction, the legislature must be held to have excepted railroads from the ordinary rules of taxation, and while making, as to all other property, reasonable provision for protecting the rights of both the state and the individual, and providing a tribunal before which the party likely to suffer injustice may produce his evidence, and establish his rights, it has placed it in the power of one man, arbitrarily, and without consultation, to place a value for taxation upon the personal property of railroads from which there is no appeal, and against which there is, except in cases of fraud, no remedy. It secures a tribunal of revision as to real, but not to personal property; for while the state board may equalize the railroad assessments, it cannot reduce the total assessment. (Laws of 1874, p. 150, § 10.) It carves out an exception not merely as to railroads, but as to certain kinds of railroad property. Again, as further evidence of the intention to harmonize railroad assessments with those of other property, it is provided in § 9 of this act—

"If any person, company or corporation * * * shall neglect to return to the county clerk the statements or schedules,

K. P. Rly. Co. v. Comm'rs of Wyandotte Co.

* * * the property so to be returned shall be listed and assessed as other property by the city and township assessors."

Without pursuing the argument further, we hold that under the law of 1874, the same rule obtains in reference to railroad as in reference to other property, and no proceedings having been had in this case under § 65 of the general tax-law to correct the valuation made by the company, that valuation will control.

We pass now to the second question, the effect of a payment of taxes under protest. The facts in respect thereto appear in this extract from the petition and the exhibit thereto attached:

"One-half of said taxes became due on the 20th of December 1874; and on the 14th of December 1874, John P. Devereux, as agent for the plaintiff, tendered the treasurer of the said county the sum of $1,804.01, being one-half of said personal tax legally and properly payable by plaintiff, which sum said treasurer refused to receive. Thereupon, to avoid the issue of legal process for collection of such excessive tax, and under protest, said John P. Devereux paid the full amount of said tax as it appears on the tax-roll as then due, namely, $2,281.08, and filed the protest of the plaintiff against the illegality thereof with said treasurer, a copy whereof is hereto annexed, marked 'A.'

"PROTEST 'A.'—To the Treasurer of the County of Wyandotte, State of Kansas: The Kansas Pacific Railway Company hereby notify you that the amount legally due by said company as one-half tax on the personal property in your county, due December 20th 1874, does not exceed the sum of $1,804.01, which sum you have refused to receive; and that said company pay the sum of $2,281.08, demanded by you, protesting against the illegality thereof, and solely to avoid the issue of legal process for its collection; and said company further notify you that they will hold you and your county liable for the excess above the amount legally due. That you are not to disburse or part with such excess, and that said company will sue you and said county for its recovery.

Dated 14th December, 1874.

THE KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
John P. Devereux, Agent, Duly Authorized."

Opinion of the Court.

---

Under § 4 of chapter 131, laws of 1874, the county treasurer was directed to issue a warrant for all taxes on personal property due and unpaid on the first day of January. So that if the company had not paid before that time, it would have been the duty of the county treasurer to have issued his warrant against it, which warrant would have had all the force and effect of an execution. Was the payment voluntary? In the case of Wabaunsee County v. Walker, 8 Kas. 436, which was a case involving the question of voluntary or involuntary payment, this court says: "A correct statement of the rule governing such cases as this would be as follows: Where a party pays an illegal demand with a full knowledge of all the facts which render such demand illegal, without an immediate and urgent necessity therefor, or unless to release his person or property from detention, or to prevent an immediate seizure of his person or property, such payment must be deemed to be voluntary, and cannot be recovered back. And the fact that the party at the time of making the payment filed a written protest, does not make the payment involuntary." We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the rule as thus stated. Was this a payment to prevent an immediate seizure of the property of plaintiff in error? If the warrant had actually been issued by the treasurer, and in the hands of the sheriff, who was demanding payment and threatening seizure, there would be no question, for in the language of the supreme court of Massachusetts, Boston Glass Co. v. Boston, 4 Metc. 181, the warrant "is in the nature of an execution running against the property of the party, upon which he has no day in court, no opportunity to plead and offer proof, and have a judicial decision of the question of his liability." But here no warrant had issued. None could legally issue for seventeen days, nor could the company's property be in any manner disturbed before that time—so that there was no danger of instantaneous seizure. On the other hand, there was no further inquiry to be made by any officer or tribunal. The amount of the tax was fixed beyond any opportunity for review. There was no discretion with any one, as to whether a warrant should or should not issue, a levy should or should not be made. The machinery for adjusting the amount of the tax had completed its work, and was at rest; only the machinery for collecting was in motion, and it moved with the certainty of fate, and the rapidity of time to the finality of seizure and sale. Where the law is imperative, and, giving no discretion, commands the issue of the warrant at a definite time, and the levy under that warrant within a fixed time thereafter, must an individual wait until the last moment, and pay only just as the officer is seizing his property, or may he assume that the officers of the law will obey its precepts, and when all opportunity for consideration, correction, and change has passed, all discretion ended, and the tax-roll is in the treasurer's hands, waiting only the lapse of a few days to ripen into a warrant and seizure, may he not then pay to the treasurer, protesting against the legality, and asserting his intention to contest? Does he not then pay to prevent an immediate seizure, one that is certainly and presently impending? Wherein does the state suffer wrong, or what advantage does it lose by holding that to be an involuntary payment? It is not a case "where a party can only be reached by a proceeding at law," as suggested in Mays v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio St. 268, in which "he is bound to make his defense in the first instance, and he cannot postpone the litigation by paying the demand in silence and afterward suing to recover back." In New York, the case of Bailey v. Buell, 59 Barb. 158, is in point. In that case the assessor obtained an order from the county judge that plaintiff should pay the amount of tax in dispute, or execution would issue against him. On being served with a copy of the order, but without any execution being issued, plaintiff paid the amount. It was held an involuntary payment, and the tax being illegal the party could recover. In Union Bank v. New York, 51 Barb. 159, the trial court held that payment of an illegal tax, under a notice from the receiver of taxes that unless paid a penalty would be imposed by way of interest, and a warrant would be issued, was a voluntary payment. The commission of appeals, 51 N. Y. 638, held that such payment was not voluntary, and reversed the decision, following Bank of Commonwealth v. The Mayor, 43 N. Y. 188. In that case Grover, J., said, "While that [the assessment] remained in force, the tax founded thereon had the force of a judgment, requiring the plaintiff to pay the tax as required by statute. The plaintiff was legally bound so to pay, and had no lawful mode of resisting such payment. In such a case, the only resistance to the requirement of the officer charged with the collection for payment, if that could have been made, would only subject the plaintiff to further expense, and would have been entirely abortive. Under such circumstances the plaintiff had the right to pay, without affecting its right to recover back the money, should the tax thereafter be determined illegal by a revisal of the assessment on which it was founded. The payment was not voluntarily made, but coerced by the law, which obliged the plaintiff to make it." In Massachusetts, in Boston Glass Co. v. Boston, 4 Metc. 181, (cited in Wabaunsee Co. v. Walker, supra), it is held that "payment of taxes to a collector who has a tax-bill and warrant in the form prescribed by law, is to be regarded as compulsory payment, and if such taxes were assessed without authority, they may be recovered back in an action for money had and received, although the party made no protest before payment." An examination of the facts in that case will show that no execution or final process for collection had been issued, but that payment was made on the tax-bills, a species of formal demand for payment. This case follows Preston v. Boston, 12 Pick. 7, where it is held, "if a person pay an illegal tax in order to prevent the issuing of a warrant of distress with which he is threatened, and which must issue of course unless the tax is paid, the payment is to be deemed compulsory, and not voluntary." In Grim v. School District, 57 Penn. St. 434, it is said to be settled law, that "A party who, when threatened with a distress, pays an illegal tax under protest and notice of suit, may maintain an action to recover it back." See also, Henry v. Horstick, 9 Watts, 414. In Allen v. Burlington, 45 Vermont, 202, the court says: "If the plaintiff was constrained to pay the tax to save his property from distress and to avoid a penalty and costs, it was not a voluntary payment. (Babcock v. Granville, 44 Vt. 326; Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 469.) It is not necessary that the warrant should have been issued, and the levy instant. If he expected and had a right to expect that in due course the warrant would issue, and the collection be enforced with costs, and that unless he complied with the one alternative he must submit to the other, and he paid, because otherwise the other alternative would be upon him, with protest that he paid because thus constrained, it is not such voluntary payment that he would be precluded from recovering back the taxes so paid, if they were illegally imposed."

---

K. P. Rly. Co. v. Comm'rs of Wyandotte Co.

---

It seems to us, then, that according to a fair and reasonable interpretation of the rule, the railway company paid this first half of the tax under such circumstances that it should be considered an involuntary payment. It was to prevent a seizure as certainly impending as the law could make it, and one also presently impending. It may be remarked that the entire personal tax was levied and assessed as one tax. The law simply divided the time of payment, requiring one-half to be paid in December, and permitting the other to remain until the June following, so that if more than the one-half was paid in December, there would be some show of reason in holding that it might be corrected when the last half of the same tax was to be paid.

We see no other question in the case necessary for consideration. The ruling of the district judge will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to grant a temporary restraining order, upon the giving of a proper and sufficient bond.

MARY P. WRIGHT v. JULIUS H. NOELL.

1. COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION; *Women are Eligible to Office. In this state a woman is eligible to the office of county superintendent of public instruction. There is not only no express constitutional disqualification of females, and no affirmative statement of qualifications which would exclude them, but there is nothing in the language of the section creating the office, nor in the duties imposed by law upon the officer, which would imply the necessary or intended exclusion of either sex. [Winans v. Williams, 5-227; Wheeler v. Brady, 15-26.]
2. ——— As the people, with respect to certain offices, have seen fit by express constitutional provisions to restrict their freedom of choice, it is a fair inference that, where the constitution is silent, they intended no restriction.
3. ——— The question, whether a woman can legally hold a public office, is not like the question whether an unnaturalized alien may vote or hold office. The inclinations, interests, and duties of aliens are presumptively with the nation of which they are citizens, and antagonistic everywhere else. But the men and women of our own nation are alike citizens. There is no antagonism. And whether females shall vote or hold office, is merely a question of internal public policy, and not a matter affecting the life and integrity of the nation.

number of legal votes cast for any person for the office of county superintendent of public instruction, and Julius H. Noell received the next highest number of legal votes cast for any person for the same office. The board of county canvassers declared Miss Wright elected to the said office, and granted her the certificate of election, whereupon she took the oath of office and filed her official bond. Afterward, Noell filed with the probate judge of the county, the statement contemplated by § 89 of ch. 36 of Gen. Stat. 1868, alleging that "Mary P. Wright, at the time of said election, was not eligible to the said office of county superintendent of public instruction for said county, being a woman,"—and asking that her certificate of election be annulled, and that he be declared elected to the said office. The contest court was organized pursuant to the statute, and the case came on to be heard December 4th 1874. Miss Wright, the contestee, demurred to the statement of the contestor, upon the ground that said statement did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The contest court overruled the demurrer, and found that no person was elected to said office at the said election, and adjudged that the election as to said office be set aside, and that the contestee pay the costs. Miss Wright removed the case by petition in error to the district court, where a hearing was had at the December Term 1874, and the finding and judgment of the contest court were affirmed, and from such judgment of the district court Miss Wright now brings the case to this court by petition in error for review.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BREWER, J.: Is a woman eligible to the office of county superintendent? In favor of it is the fact that the constitution contains no express disqualification of her, and no affirmative statement of the qualifications therefor, leaving, as is claimed, the people free to choose whomsoever they will. Against it, is the fact that the right to vote is limited to males, implying, as is said, that a fortiori the right to hold office is likewise so restricted, and also the fact that at the time of the adoption of the constitution there was no serious thought of woman's holding the office, so that the framers thereof could not have intended by that instrument to authorize it. As between these two lines of argument, we yield our assent to the former. "All political power is inherent in the people," and all powers not delegated by the constitution remain with them. These truths, which lie at the foundation of all republican governments, are distinctly asserted in our own bill of rights, §§ 2 and 20. By the constitution the people have granted certain powers, and to that extent have restricted and limited their own action. But beyond those restrictions, and except as to matters guarded by absolute justice, and the inherent rights of the individual, the power of the people is unlimited. There is clearly no question of absolute justice, or individual rights, involved, so that we must look alone to the constitution to ascertain what restrictions the people have placed upon their power of choice of this officer. These restrictions may be as to the persons to make the choice, or as to the persons who may be chosen. Both of these restrictions were presented to the attention of the framers of the constitution in reference to the various offices created by that instrument, and both imposed as to some offices. Thus, generally, the power to choose officers was committed to the male adults—at first to the white male adults. And as to some officers the power to choose was still further restricted. Thus, as to some, such as district judges, locality was an added restriction; (art. 3, § 5.) The reporter and clerk of this court, are chosen by the justices; (art. 3, § 4.) The state printer is chosen by the legislature; (art. 15, § 4, as amended in 1868.) And in all these cases where the people have restricted their power by prescribing the qualifications of those to make the choice of officers, they cannot, except by an amendment of the same instrument, add to or take from those restrictions. They have also prescribed certain qualifications for and imposed certain restrictions as to those who may be chosen. Thus, one who gives or accepts a challenge to fight a duel, or who knowingly carries a challenge, is ineligible to any office; (art. 5, § 5.) Any one who bribes an elector to procure his election, may not hold the office to which he was elected; (art. 5, § 6.) An essential to the holding of a judicial office is, residence in the county, township, or district for which the officer was elected; (art. 3, § 11.) To be a member of the legislature, one must be at the time of his election a qualified voter of and resident in the county or district for which he is chosen; (art. 2, § 4.) Hence, by this, only male adults can be elected to the legislature. None of these qualifications prescribed by the constitution may be disregarded. They are restrictions self-imposed by the people upon their otherwise unlimited freedom of choice. If they have as to certain offices seen fit to restrict their freedom of choice by express words, is it not a fair inference that, where the constitution is silent, they intended no restriction? In reference to county superintendent the constitution says this, and no more:

---

Wright v. Noell.

“A superintendent of public instruction shall be elected in each county, whose term of office shall be two years, and whose duty and compensation shall be prescribed by law.” (Art. 6, § 1.)

There is here not only no express disqualification of females, and no affirmative statement of qualifications which would exclude them, but also nothing in the shape of pronoun, or in the terminology, or in the duties imposed, which would imply the necessary or intended exclusion of either sex. But it is said, that there is such a connection between voting and office-holding, that excluding females from the former, is by implication an exclusion of them from the latter; and that in the language of Ch. J. Dixon of Wisconsin, it is “an enormous absurdity that a person who by the organic law of the state has not one voice among thousands in designating by whom an office shall be filled, may himself be elected to such office, and enjoy its franchises and perform its duties.” In reference to

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

the authority quoted, it may be remarked, that the case, that of The State, ex rel., v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497, presented the question of the right of an alien to hold an office to which he had been elected, there being no express statutory or constitutional disqualification therefor; and the argument from which an adverse conclusion was reached was not the mere relationship of voting to office-holding, but that, underlying statutes and constitution, and as the basis of all governmental organization, was the natural idea, or as the learned Justice expressed it, "As to all such governments (independent popular governments,) it is an acknowledged principle, which lies at the very foundation, and the enforcement of which needs neither the aid of statutory nor constitutional enactments or restrictions, that the government is instituted by the citizens for their liberty and protection, and that it is to be administered, and its powers and functions exercised, only by them, and through their agency." And he quotes approvingly from the reply of the Justices of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts to the question of the house of representatives, whether an alien could be a legal voter for senators and representatives—"Now we assume as an unquestionable principle of sound national policy in this state, that as the supreme power rests wholly in the citizens, so the exercise of it, or of any branch of it, ought not to be delegated by any but citizens, and only to citizens. It is therefore to be presumed, that the people in making the constitution intended that the supreme power of legislation should not be delegated but by citizens." But the cases and questions are not alike. It may well be, that the idea of an independent popular government implies that all its functions are to be exercised by citizens, and that it needs no express words to exclude aliens, because the inclinations, interests, and duties of the latter are presumptively with the nation of which they are citizens, and antagonistic everywhere else. But in the case at bar, the inclinations, interests, and duties of both the sexes are in the same direction. Both are alike citizens. There is no antagonism. Whether females shall vote or hold office, is merely a question of internal public policy, and not a matter affecting the life and integrity of the nation, or its relations with other states. It is a very common thing for offices to be filled outside of the electoral body, and in many cases it is imperatively so required by statute or custom. Officers of a legislature are a ready illustration. Our own constitution clearly recognizes the absence of any necessary connection between office-holding, and voting. In § 2 of art. 5, as amended, it is provided that "No person under guardianship * * * shall be qualified to vote or hold office in this state." If as is claimed, one of these is the larger, and includes or implies the other, a part of the section quoted is manifestly surplusage.

---

Wright v. Noell.

In reference to the argument that at the time of the adoption of the constitution there was no serious thought of woman's holding the office, and therefore that the framers thereof could not have intended by that instrument to authorize it, we cannot do better than to quote from the dissenting opinion of Justices Walton and Barrows of the supreme court of Maine, in reply to the question whether in that state a woman could under the constitution hold the office of justice of the peace:

"It may be true, that the framers of the constitution did not contemplate, did not affirmatively intend, that women should hold office. But it by no means follows that they intended the contrary. The truth probably is, that they had no intention one way or the other; that the matter was not even thought of. And it will be noticed that the unconstitutionality of such a law is made to rest, not on any expressed intention of the framers of the constitution that women should not hold office, but upon a presumed absence of intention that they should. This seems to us a dangerous doctrine. It is nothing less than holding that the legislature cannot enact a law unless it appears affirmatively that the framers of the constitution intended that such a law should be enacted. We cannot concur in such a doctrine. It would put a stop to all progress. We understand the correct rule to be the reverse of that, namely, that the legislature may enact any law that they may think proper, unless it appears affirmatively that the framers of the constitution intended that such a law should not be passed.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

And the best and only safe rule for ascertaining the intention of the makers of any written law, is to abide by the language they have used; and this is especially true of written constitutions, for in preparing such instruments it is but reasonable to presume that every word has been carefully weighed, and that none are inserted, and none omitted without a design for so doing."

There is but little of authority to be cited upon this question. In the state of Maine five of the eight Justices were of the opinion that under the constitution a woman could not hold the office of justice of the peace, but could be authorized to administer oaths, take acknowledgement of deeds, and solemnize marriages. (Chicago Legal News, vol. 7, p. 10; 62 Maine, 596.) To a question of the legislature, whether under the constitution women could act as members of a school committee, the supreme court of Massachusetts replied as follows:

"The question is limited to the effect of the constitution upon the capacity of a woman to hold this office, and involves no interpretation of statutes. If the constitution prevents a woman from being a member of a school committee, it must be by force of some express provision thereof, or else by necessary implication, arising either from the nature of the office itself, or from the law of Massachusetts as existing when the constitution was adopted, and in the light of which it must be read. But the constitution contains nothing relating to school committees; the office is created and regulated by statute; and the constitution confers upon the general court full power and authority to name and settle annually, or provide by fixed laws for naming and settling all civil officers within the commonwealth, the election and qualification of whom are not in the constitution otherwise provided for. The common law of England, which was our law upon the subject, permitted a woman to fill any local office of an administrative character, the duties attached to which were such that a woman was competent to perform them. The duties of a school committee relate exclusively to the education of children and youth in the town or city for which it is elected. They consist of the general charge and superintendence of the schools, including the employment of teachers, the selection of school-books, the regulation of the attendance of scholars, and the preparation of school registers and returns; and they are in no respect of such a nature that they cannot be well and efficiently performed by women. The necessary conclusion is, that there is nothing in the constitution of the commonwealth to prevent a woman from being a member of a school committee, and the proposed question must be respectfully answered in the affirmative." (115 Mass. 602.)

Without pursuing this matter further, our conclusion is, that women are in this state eligible to the office of county superintendent. The judgment therefore will be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

THE STATE OF KANSAS v. WM. W. JONES.

1. PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION, *No Bar to Further Prosecution. One preliminary examination for a criminal offense is no bar to another preliminary examination for the same offense; nor is it any bar to a full prosecution for such offense, although the defendant may have been discharged on the first preliminary examination. A mere preliminary examination does not put the accused in jeopardy, within the meaning of § 10 of the Bill of Rights.
2. INFORMATION; *Carnal Knowledge of Female. An information charging the defendant with "willfully, unlawfully and feloniously defiling a female under eighteen years of age, by carnally knowing her while she was confided to his care and protection by her parents," is sufficient, although it may not allege in terms that the girl's parents are her natural guardians, or that the defendant knew that the girl was under eighteen years of age.
3. ——— Character, and Consent of Female. The offense prohibited by § 233 of the crimes-and-punishment act, of defiling a female under eighteen years of age, by carnally knowing her while she was confided to defendant's care and protection, may be committed, although the female may be a person of unchaste character, and may consent to the unlawful embraces of the defendant.

family, such girl is so confided to his care and protection, that, if he defile her in the meantime by carnally knowing her, he is guilty of the offense defined by said § 233 of the crimes-and-punishment act.

Appeal from McPherson District Court.

INFORMATION, charging Jones with “willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously” defiling a female under eighteen years of age, she “being then and there confided to the care and protection” of said Jones by her parents. A plea in abatement was filed, in support of which defendant gave in evidence the record of an examination had and held on the 27th of January 1876, by and before J. W. H. and W. L. F., two justices of the peace, on a complaint made by R. B. Holbrook charging Jones with said offense, on which examination said justices found “that no offense was committed,” and Jones was thereupon discharged by them. The record also shows that on the 29th of January said Holbrook made and filed a new complaint before G. M. S., another justice of the peace of said county, making the same charge against Jones, on which said justice held an examination, and for which offense he required Jones to enter into a recognizance to appear and answer before the district court. The information was filed April 27th 1876. The plea in abatement was overruled. Trial at the May Term 1876. Verdict, guilty—and Jones was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for the term of nine months, and to pay a fine of five hundred dollars, and cost of suit. From this judgment and sentence, Jones appeals.

J. G. Mohler, for appellant.

M. P. Simpson, county-attorney, for The State.

The opinion of the court was delivered by VALENTINE, J.: This was a criminal prosecution under § 288 of the crimes-and-punishment act, (Gen. Stat. 369,) charging the defendant with defiling a female under eighteen years of age by carnally knowing her while she was confided to his care and protection. As we understand, the defendant waives all objections to the proceedings of the court below, which if sustained would merely require a new trial, and asks that we shall decide the case upon such questions only as go to the very foundation of the present prosecution. This we shall do.

---

The State v. Jones.

I. The defendant objects to the jurisdiction of the court below, and this he does upon the ground that on the first and original preliminary examination in the case he was discharged. It seems that the defendant had two preliminary examinations. On the first, he was discharged — on the second, he was held to answer in the district court. The question now is, whether the first preliminary examination was a bar to all further and subsequent proceedings for the same offense. We think it was not. One preliminary examination for a criminal offense is no bar to another preliminary examination for the same offense; nor is it any bar to a full prosecution for such offense, although, as in this case, the defendant may have been discharged on the first preliminary examination. A mere preliminary examination does not put the accused in jeopardy within the meaning of the constitution. (Const., Bill of Rights, § 10.)

II. The defendant claims that the information upon which he was tried does not state facts sufficient to constitute any offense. The information among other things states as follows: "That one William W. Jones, late of said county of McPherson, at the county of McPherson, in the state of Kansas, and within the jurisdiction of this [the district] court, on the 28th day of December 1875, did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously defile one Louisa Antoinette Holbrook, by carnally knowing her, she, the said Louisa Antoinette Holbrook then and there being a female under the age of eighteen years confided to the care and protection of the said William W. Jones by Rufus B. Holbrook and Adaline Holbrook, the father and mother of the said Louisa Antoinette Holbrook." The objections urged against said information are as follows: 1st, The information does not allege that the said father and mother of the said Louisa Antoinette were her natural guardians, or had authority to confide her to the care and custody of said defendant Jones.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

2d, Nor does the information allege that Jones knew that said Louisa Antoinette was under eighteen years of age.

We think the information is sufficient in these respects. A female person under eighteen years of age is a minor, (Gen. Stat. 580, § 1,) and the father and mother are by law the natural guardians of the persons of their minor children, and each parent equally so with the other. (Gen. Stat. 512, § 1; Const., art. 15, § 6.) And except in rare cases, the parents have the actual care and control of their minor children. And such would seem to have been the case in this very case, for the information itself states that said Louisa Antoinette was confided to defendant Jones by her parents.

It is probably not necessary that the information should allege in any form that the defendant knew that the person whom he defiled was under eighteen years of age; and it is probably not necessary in any case that the state should prove that the defendant had any such knowledge. And it is very doubtful even whether the defendant would be allowed in any such case to prove as a defense that he had no such knowledge. When a man commits what he knows to be an immoral act, he ought to be required to take the entire consequences of such act, although he may not have been fully advised as to all the circumstances connected with the act. In fact, when a man sets out willfully to do an immoral act, he ought to be bound to know all the circumstances connected with such act. Such a person is in no proper condition to plead ignorance. (In connection with this subject, see Bishop's Statutory Crimes, §§ 632, 644; Train & Heard, Precedents of Indictments, 444, Ch. 41, Form 3.) We think that all that is necessary in a case like this is, for the state to allege and prove the fact that the girl defiled was under eighteen years of age, without alleging or proving that the defendant had knowledge of such fact. But the state did allege in this case that the defendant "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously defile" said girl, etc., which comes very near alleging knowledge on the part of the defendant. And the state also proved that the defendant had full knowledge that the girl was under eighteen years of age.

The State v. Jones.

---

III. The defendant claims that the court below erred in excluding certain evidence tending to show that the girl was not a person of chaste character. He claims that if she was unchaste she could not be defiled—that none but the chaste and virtuous can be defiled. There is perhaps some reason for this claim, and yet we can hardly think that the law was intended for the protection of those only who are absolutely pure. It can scarcely be possible that a girl who has lost her virtue by a single act of unchastity, by a single illicit amour, must forever afterward be wholly abandoned to the insidious wiles of every designing libertine in whose care and custody she may unfortunately be confided. Of course, such a girl is weak; but the protecting care of the law is generally designed for the weak, and not merely for the strong. Of course, such a girl has already been defiled; but may she not be further defiled? Is it possible that a girl of less than eighteen years of age can reach such a depth of sin and pollution that there can be no lower deep into which she may be plunged by an unfaithful protector to whom she may have been confided? If not, then the protecting care of the law should be generously thrown around her. And the feelings of her friends and guardians, who undoubtedly desire her reformation, should be regarded, and not violated by the very man in whom they have reposed confidence. But the statute itself would seem to define how she may be defiled. She may be defiled “by” the offender “carnally knowing her.” We therefore think it makes no difference whether said Louisa Antoinette was chaste or unchaste. Nor do we think that it makes any difference whether she consented, or was forced to yield to the unlawful embraces of the defendant. The question is merely, whether he had carnal connection with her while she was under his care and protection. Even if she encouraged his unlawful desires, even if she was the moving spirit in their lascivious embraces, still, if he had carnal connection with her while she was under his care and protection, (she being under eighteen years of age,) we think he was guilty of the offense charged against him.

---

Opinion of the Court.

---

IV. The court below instructed the jury among other things, as follows: "If you shall find the said Louisa Antoinette was by her parents sent with, or allowed by her parents to go with, the defendant, upon his request to his house for the purpose of seeing defendant's wife to make a contract for work in his family, and for no other purpose, such facts would constitute the care and protection contemplated by the statute." The defendant excepted to this instruction. The defendant also raised this same question by asking the court below to give certain instructions, which the court refused to give; and also raised the same question by moving for a new trial because of misdirection of the jury, and because the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, which motion was overruled. We do not think that the court erred in any of these respects. The evidence applicable to this question showed substantially as follows: On December 28th 1875, the defendant Jones went in a two-horse wagon to the house of Mr. Holbrook. Mr. Holbrook, Mrs. Holbrook, and their daughter Louisa Antoinette, who was then between the ages of fifteen and sixteen years, were all at home. The defendant then stated that his wife wanted to hire a girl to work for her; that he wanted "Nett," the daughter, to go home with him for his wife to make a bargain with; that he never made a bargain with a girl to work for his wife; that he always let his wife make such bargains. The Holbrooks all consented to such an arrangement, but upon condition that defendant would bring the girl back the next day, to which condition the defendant consented. The defendant resided about five miles from Holbrook's. He took the girl with him in his wagon to his home, but when they arrived there they found no one at home. The defendant then said that his wife had probably gone to Mr. Finan's, a neighbor who lived near by. He however soon produced a note in writing, purporting to be from his wife, but which was in fact written by himself, which stated that his wife had gone to Mr. Hanna's, (a neighbor who lived about seven miles from the defendant's house,) and asking that the defendant would come after her the next day. The defendant himself however had on that very same day, and before he went to Holbrook's, taken his wife and his two children to Mr. Hanna's. It would seem to have been about night when the defendant and the girl arrived at the defendant's house. And on that night the defendant and the girl staid alone at the defendant's house, and slept together, and had sexual intercourse with each other. The next day the defendant took the girl back to her own home. We think that the trust reposed in the defendant by the father and mother of the girl, in confiding her to his care for the purpose that he might take her to his own home so that his wife could employ her as a hired girl in his own family, was such a trust as is fairly contemplated by the statute. It was very much like placing the girl in defendant's family as one of the family, and reposing the confidence for her care and protection in the defendant himself as the head of the family.

The State v. Jones.

---

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

Ed. 309, holding in a mortgage foreclosure suit equity may permit a purchaser on a sale for taxes assessed after the date of the mortgage, to be made a party to determine the validity of his title; Delahay v. Goldie, 17 Kan. 263, holding that a petition in mechanic's lien proceedings, alleging that certain persons "claim an interest in this controversy adverse to plaintiff, that the extent of such interest, if any, to this plaintiff is unknown, and that they be compelled to set up such interest," will not support a decree against them; Neitzel v. Hunter, 19 Kan. 221, holding that an allegation in an action to foreclose a mortgage that a third person "claims an interest in said premises" to a certain amount, "and that said claim consists of a mortgage lien on said premises to secure the payment of said money," without demanding judgment against such person, will not support a judgment barring him from setting up his claim in the premises; Blandin's Adm'r v. Wade, 20 Kan. 251; Bradley v. Parkhurst, 20 Kan. 462—holding that allegations in a mortgage foreclosure suit that certain persons "have or claim some interest in the premises adverse to plaintiff," the kind of which plaintiff is ignorant of and desires that it be disclosed, is insufficient as against such defendants; Skinner v. Moore, 64 Kan. 360, 67 Pac. 827, 91 Am. St. Rep. 244, holding a petition in mortgage foreclosure, alleging that certain defendants "claim to own or hold certain right, title, or interest in" the realty, was insufficient as to such defendants; Beecher v. Ireland, 46 Kan. 97, 26 Pac. 448, holding that, in a mortgage foreclosure suit in which B. was served with summons, the petition not referring to B., it will not support a judgment against him, though the cross-petition alleges that B. has purchased the mortgaged property and assumed the debt; Horton v. Haines, 23 Okl. 878, 102 Pac. 121, holding that a petition in a mortgage foreclosure suit alleging that defendant "claims some right, title, or interest in or to said premises, but if any interest, right, or title he has in or to said mortgaged premises, or any part thereof, the same is inferior, subsequent, and subject to the mortgage lien of plaintiff," was sufficient to state a cause of action against a defendant who acquired an interest in the real estate after the mortgage was executed.

Railroads—Fires—Proximate cause.—Cited in Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. McBride, 54 Kan. 172, 37 Pac. 978, holding that the negligent firing of prairie grass along the right of way, from which the fire spread to plaintiff's property on account of a high wind, was the proximate cause of the destruction of the property; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Perry, 65 Kan. 792, 70 Pac. 878, holding that, in absence of positive proof as to the cause of a fire on a railroad right of way, its cause may be shown by circumstantial evidence; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. B. F. Blaker & Co., 68 Kan. 244, 75 Pac. 71, 64 L. R. A. 81, 1 Ann. Cas. 883, holding that a fire need not be directly communicated to property to impose liability, and it is immaterial that the fire traversed intervening property before reaching the property consumed; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. League, 71 Kan. 79, 80 Pac. 46, holding the evidence sufficient to make it a jury question whether the fire started by the railroad company was the proximate cause of the loss sued for; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. McCollum, 2 Kan. App. 319, 43 Pac. 97, holding that, where a fire set out by a locomotive was extinguished on the day it was started and the premises left in an apparently safe condition, but sparks escaped from the smouldering embers the next day because of high wind, and burned the property, the negligence of the company in setting out the original fire was the proximate cause of the damage.

Cited in note in 38 Am. Dec. 77, on liability of railroad company for fires; in 36 Am. St. Rep. 824, on proximate and remote cause; in 21 L. R. A. 261, on liability for setting fires which spread to property of others.

Negligence as jury question.—Cited in Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Kincaid, 29 Kan. 654, holding that the question of negligence in starting a railroad fire was for the jury; Harter v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 55 Kan. 250, 38 Pac. 778, holding that plaintiff's evidence of negligence in an action for personal injuries to a switchman was such as to render it erroneous to sustain a demurrer.

Pleading—Amendment.—Cited in Hargrove v. Woolf, 34 Kan. 101, 8 Pac. 192, holding that the court properly allowed an interplea to be verified instant, where an interplea was filed and an answer filed to it, and evidence to support the interplea was objected to for want of a verification; Frazier v. Ebenezer Baptist Church, 60 Kan. 404, 56 Pac. 752, holding that a party is bound by his pleadings; Laird v. Farwell, 60 Kan. 512, 57 Pac. 98; Consolidated Steel & Wire Co. v. Burnham, Hanna, Munger & Co., 8 Okl. 514, 58 Pac. 654—holding that refusal to allow amendments may be substantial error; German Ins. Co. v. Wright, 6 Kan. App. 611, 49 Pac. 704, holding that under the statute a court or a judge in vacation may allow pleadings to be filed after the statutory time.

Same—Inconsistent defenses.—Cited in Cole v. Woodson, 82 Kan. 272, 4 Pac. 321; Bierer v. Fretz, 32 Kan. 329, 4 Pac. 284; Losch v. Pickett, 86 Kan. 216, 12 Pac. 822—holding a pleading both affirming and denying an allegation is inconsistent.

Same—Election of defenses.—Cited in Ferguson v. Prince, 2 Kan. App. 7, 41 Pac. 988, holding that defendant should be required to elect upon which of two inconsistent defenses he shall stand, and confine his evidence thereto; Seattle Nat. Bank v. Carter, 13 Wash. 281, 43 Pac. 331, 48 L. R. A. 177, holding that a general denial of the answer is inconsistent with an affirmative defense alleging the truth of the matter denied.

Cited in note in 48 L. R. A. 201, on right to plead inconsistent defenses.

Same—Must be full and complete.—Cited in Allen v. Douglass, 29 Kan. 412, holding an answer or counterclaim asserting affirmative relief must be as full and complete as a petition.

16 KAN. 270, CHAMBERS v. KING WROUGHT IRON BRIDGE MANUFACTORY

Invalid judgment—Vacation or restraining enforcement.—Cited in Hanson v. Wolcott, 19 Kan. 207, holding that a void judgment may be vacated at any time on defendant's motion, without advising the court that defendant had a defense in the action; Busenbark v. Busenbark, 33 Kan. 572, 7 Pac. 245; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Reid & Holladay, 34 Kan. 410, 8 Pac. 846—holding that a judgment obtained to defraud a third person may be perpetually enjoined; Cook v. Senior, 3 Kan. App. 278, 45 Pac. 126; Jones v. Marshall, 3 Kan. App. 529, 43 Pac. 840—holding that the enforcement of a void judgment, apparently valid and regular on its face, may be perpetually enjoined.

Distinguished in San Juan & St. Louis Mining & Smelting Co. v. Finch, 6 Colo. 214; Meixell v. Kirkpatrick, 28 Kan. 315—that a judgment which the court had jurisdiction to render and which is merely irregular cannot be perpetually enjoined.

Cited in note in 54 Am. St. Rep. 244, on relief in equity against judgments and other judicial determinations; in 31 L. R. A. 206, on injunctions against judgments for want of jurisdiction or invalidity.

Process—Necessity to confer jurisdiction.—Cited in Brinkman v. Shaffer, 23 Kan. 528, holding that a judgment against defendant was void, where the person making appearance for defendant had no authority to do so; Bradley, Wheeler & Co. v. Harwi, 2 Kan. App. 272, 42 Pac. 411, holding that jurisdiction of the person may only be acquired by actual or constructive service of process or by a voluntary appearance.

Cited in note in 61 Am. St. Rep. 491, on effect of defects in service of process on jurisdiction.

Same—Service on corporation.—Cited in Great West Mining Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Mining Co., 12 Colo. 46, 20 Pac. 771, 13 Am. St. Rep. 204, holding, to bind a corporation, service of process must be made upon the identical agent provided by statute; Lonkey v. Keyes Silver Mining Co., 21 Nev. 312, 31 Pac. 57, 17 L. R. A. 351, holding that service upon a corporation must be made on the principal clerk or secretary.

Same—Service on assistant bank cashier.—Cited in Karns v. State Bank & Trust Co., 31 Nev. 170, 101 Pac. 564, holding that under the statute service on an assistant bank cashier in charge of a branch bank, who is under control of the cashier and has no part in the management of the corporation, is insufficient.

Same—Conclusiveness of return.—Cited in Great West Mining Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Mining Co., 12 Colo. 46, 20 Pac. 771, 13 Am. St. Rep. 204, holding that the recital of a return of summons that the person served was the agent of defendant corporation may be impeached; Mastin v. Gray, 19 Kan. 458, 27 Am. Rep. 149; McNeill v. Edie, 24 Kan. 108; Goddard v. Harbour, 56 Kan. 744, 44 Pac. 1055, 54 Am. St. Rep. 608; Schnack v. Boyd, 59 Kan. 275, 52 Pac. 874—holding that where the sheriff did not know that the person upon whom service was made was secretary of the corporation served, his return of due service may be attacked collaterally by showing that such person was not secretary.

Cited in note in 124 Am. St. Rep. 766, on conclusiveness of sheriff's return of service, and remedies of persons injured thereby.

Corporations—Contracts to pay debt of another.—Cited in Ehrgott & Krebs v. Bridge Manufactory of Topeka, 16 Kan. 486, holding that a corporation is not liable on a note executed for it by its officers, without authority and without consideration to it, to a third person for a claim which such third person has against another; El Capitan Land & Cattle Co. v. Boston-Kansas City Cattle Loan Co., 65 Kan. 359, 69 Pac. 332, holding that corporate officers cannot pledge the corporation's note to secure personal debts of the president; Long Bros. v.

Hubbard, 6 Kan. App. 878, 50 Pac. 968, holding that a bank cannot become a surety.

16 KAN. 285, BRIGGS v. TYE

Harmless error in rulings on pleadings.—Cited in Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Estes, 37 Kan. 229, 15 Pac. 157, holding that where, after a demurrer is overruled, defendant answers, and plaintiff is then permitted to amend his petition, and defendant answers the amendment, on appeal after trial on the amended petition, the court will not consider the sufficiency of the original petition.

Judicial sale—Confirmation.—Cited in note in 20 Am. St. Rep. 496, on order confirming judicial sale; in 83 Am. Dec. 457 (par. 3), on conclusiveness of decision of court on confirmation of execution sale.

Judgment—When rendered.—Cited in Rice v. American Nat. Bank of Denver, 8 Colo. App. 81, 31 Pac. 1024, holding that a justice's judgment rendered against defendant four days before return of the summons is void.

Distinguished in Barons v. Anderson, 37 Kan. 390, 15 Pac. 226, holding that a justice's judgment, rendered on motion before the action stood regularly for trial, could be vacated on motion.

16 KAN. 293, MALLOBY v. BERRY

Exemptions—Animals.—Cited in Nuzman v. Schooley, 36 Kan. 177, 12 Pac. 829; Brady v. Banta, 46 Kan. 181, 26 Pac. 441; Young v. Bell, 1 Kan. App. 265, 40 Pac. 675—holding that the animals named in Gen. St. 1889, par. 2998, subd. 5, are absolutely exempt, regardless of their use or occupation.

Cited in note in 45 Am. Dec. 255, on property exempt from execution.

Same—Construction of statutes.—Cited in Donmyer v. Donmyer, 43 Kan. 444, 23 Pac. 627; Emmert v. Schmidt, 65 Kan. 31, 68 Pac. 1072—holding that exemption statutes should be liberally construed to uphold the exemptions; Edgecomb v. His Creditors, 19 Nev. 149, 7 Pac. 533 (dissenting opinion); Nelson v. Fightmaster, 4 Okl. 38, 44 Pac. 213—construing an exemption statute; Rockwood v. St. John's Estate, 10 Okl. 476, 62 Pac. 277, holding that exemption laws should be liberally construed to effectuate their purpose.

Cited in note in 45 Am. Dec. 253, on liberal construction of exemption laws.

16 KAN. 296, COUNTY SEAT OF OSAGE COUNTY, IN RE

County seat removal election—Number of votes required.—Cited in Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 22 Okl. 507, 98 Pac. 565, holding that a majority of the legal ballots, whether intelligible or unintelligible, must be cast for the removal of a county seat to authorize its removal, and that fraudulent, distinguished ballots, blank ballots and those cast by unqualified voters, should not be counted in determining whether a majority was cast for removing the county seat.

Distinguished in Board of Com'rs of Eagle County v. People ex rel. Love, 26 Colo. 297, 57 Pac. 1080, holding that, under Sess. Laws 1891, p. 117, in order to remove a county seat which has not been permanently located, a majority of all the legal votes must be cast for some one place.

16 KAN. 302, POALA & F. RY. CO. v. ANDERSON COUNTY COM'RS,

Same case on subsequent appeal, 20 Kan. 534

Power of county to aid railroads.—Cited in Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. Com'rs of Douglas County, 18 Kan. 160, holding that power to issue bonds in aid of a railroad may be granted to a county.

Exercise of authority by boards, etc.—Necessity of collective action.—Cited in First Nat. Bank of Ft. Scott v. Drake, 35 Kan. 564, 11 Pac. 445, 57 Am. Rep. 193, holding that bank directors can only act collectively as a board, and the individual consent of a majority of the directors, acting separately, is insufficient to ratify an unauthorized appropriation of money by the bank; Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County v. Webb, 47 Kan. 104, 27 Pac. 825, holding that a contract made by only two members of the board of county commissioners, without any previous authority from the board, is void; School Dist. No. 39, Pottawatomie County, v. Shelton, 26 Okl. 229, 109 Pac. 67, 138 Am. St. Rep. 962, holding that the board of directors of a school district must act as such in executing a contract binding upon the district, and their individual acts will not bind it.

Same—Notice of meetings.—Cited in Atchison Board of Education v. De Kay, 148 U. S. 591, 13 Sup. Ct. 706, 37 L. Ed. 573, holding that where city bonds were issued by the proper authorities, and interest was duly paid for 20 years, they will not then be declared void on purely technical and trivial grounds, as that notice was not given to all members of the special meeting of the council at which the bonds were issued; Hatch v. Johnson Loan & Trust Co., 79 Fed. 828; American Exch. Nat. Bank of New York v. First Nat. Bank of Spokane Falls, 82 Fed. 961, 27 C. C. A. 274; National Bank of Commerce v. Shumway, 49 Kan. 224, 30 Pac. 411—holding that a long-continued custom of bank directors of holding meetings and transacting business during business hours, whenever a sufficient number were present, gives a standing notice to each director, enabling those present to do business, in absence of by-law or statute; Dixon Tp. v. Board of Com'rs of Sumner County, 25 Kan. 519, holding that the law gives a person an opportunity to be heard before a proceeding will be held to affect him; Aikman v. School Dist. No. 16, Butler County, 27 Kan. 129; Mincer v. School Dist. No. 31, Reno County, 27 Kan. 253—holding where several persons, such as a school board, are authorized to do an act of a public nature requiring deliberation, they should all be convened by notice to each; Board of Com'rs of Leavenworth County v. Hamlin, 31 Kan. 105, 1 Pac. 237; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Stafford County, 36 Kan. 121, 12 Pac. 593; State ex rel. Bradford v. Commissioners of Seward Co., 36 Kan. 236, 13 Pac. 212; In re Troy, 67 Kan. 186, 72 Pac. 531; Williams v. Board of Com'rs of Broadwater County, 28 Mont. 360, 72 Pac. 755; Mahr v. Board of Com'rs of Pottawatomie County, 26 Okl. 628, 110 Pac. 751—holding the powers of county commissioners are not vested in three commissioners, but in the board as a whole, and it can act only when legally convened, by due notice given each commissioner; Rogers v. Slonaker, 32 Kan. 191, 4 Pac. 138, holding that an appointment by one member of the county court and the county clerk, without notice to the other member, was void; Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Meyer, 58 Kan. 305, 49 Pac. 89, holding condemnation commissioners must act as a body, and can perform no duty, unless each commissioner has notice of the meeting and an opportunity to attend; Singer v. Salt Lake City Copper Mfg. Co., 17 Utah, 143, 53 Pac. 1024, 70 Am. St. Rep. 773, holding that as a general rule personal notice must be given to each member of a corporate board of directors.

16 KAN. 312, TUCKER v. ALLEN

Deed—Execution in blank.—Cited in Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825, holding the grantor under a carte blanche deed may ratify the unauthorized filling in of the description, etc.; Chapman v. Veach, 32 Kan. 167, 4 Pac. 100, holding that where a deed was executed in blank, and afterward filled in with the name of a certain grantee generally, the crops passed to him thereunder, notwithstanding a parol agreement between the original parties.

Same—Delivery.—Cited in Kelsa v. Graves, 64 Kan. 777, 68 Pac. 607; Harmon v. Bowers, 78 Kan. 135, 96 Pac. 51, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 502, 16 Ann. Cas. 121; Zeitlow v. Zeitlow, 84 Kan. 713, 115 Pac. 573—holding that a constructive delivery of a deed, or any words or acts showing an intention by grantor that the deed be considered as completely executed, was sufficient.

Same—Ratification.—Cited in McNulty v. McNulty, 47 Kan. 208, 27 Pac. 819, holding that a deed delivered without grantor's knowledge may be ratified by him, after he has full knowledge of all the facts, by any words and acts which show a clear intention that the deed should be regarded as properly delivered.

Cited in note in 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 946, on validation of undelivered deed by ratification or estoppel.

Same—Effect of uncertain description.—Cited in Abercrombie v. Simmons, 71 Kan. 538, 81 Pac. 208, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 806, 114 Am. St. Rep. 509, 6 Ann. Cas. 239, holding that a deed will not be avoided for uncertainty, if in the light of contemporaneous circumstances the description is made certain.

Same—Validity of conditions.—Cited in note in 95 Am. St. Rep. 223, on validity of conditions and restrictions in deed.

Contracts against public policy—Depot location.—Cited in Enid Right of Way & Townsite Co. v. Lile, 15 Okl. 328, 82 Pac. 810 (dissenting opinion), as to whether a contract providing that a railroad depot shall be at a certain point is against public policy.

Estoppel.—Cited in Brake v. Ballou, 19 Kan. 397, holding that equity will leave the parties to a fraudulent contract where it finds them; McKinnis v. Scottish American Mortg. Co., 55 Kan. 259, 39 Pac. 1018, holding as a rule a party cannot avoid his own deed by his own illegal acts, and where the parties are equally wrong as to executed contracts the law will not aid either of them.

16 KAN 326, DAY v. WALKER

Usury as defense against innocent indorsee.—Cited in Gross v. Funk, 20 Kan. 655, holding that usury cannot be set up as a defense against a negotiable note held by an innocent indorsee before maturity.

16 KAN. 333, LEAVENWORTH, L. & G. R. CO. v. MARIS

Carriers—When liability terminates.—Cited in Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Moyer, 40 Kan. 184, 19 Pac. 639, 10 Am. St. Rep. 183, holding that nine days is an unreasonable time to permit the goods to be in a railroad depot, so that the company was only liable as a warehouseman; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Patten, 3 Kan. App. 338, 45 Pac. 108, holding that a carrier is an insurer of a passenger's baggage in transit and for a reasonable time after its arrival at destination to enable the passenger to remove it; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Weil, 8 Kan. App. 839, 57 Pac. 853, holding that an instruction that the delivery of goods by a carrier to the consignee's husband without authority was only slight negligence was properly refused; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. L. Newberger & Bro., 67 Kan. 846, 73 Pac. 57; McGregor v. Oregon R. & Navigation Co., 50 Or. 527, 93 Pac. 465, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668—holding that, if the consignee is present when the goods arrive, he must remove them without unreasonable delay, but if he is absent, but lives in the vicinity, the carrier should notify him of the arrival of the goods, and he should remove them within a reasonable time, and cannot hold the carrier as a surety if he fails to do so, and if he is unknown the carrier may put the goods in a warehouse, and its liability as a carrier ceases after a reasonable time.

Cited in notes in 17 L. R. A. 694, 696; 8 Am. Dec. 215, 217; 97 Am. St. Rep. 89, 91—as to when carrier's liability is reduced to that of warehouseman; in 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, on reasonable time for removal of goods, after which liability of carrier as such terminates.

Same—Limitation of liability.—Cited in Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. Simpson, 30 Kan. 645, 2 Pac. 821, 46 Am. Rep. 104; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Wichita Wholesale Grocery Co., 55 Kan. 525, 40 Pac. 899—holding a carrier cannot by contract exempt itself from its own or its agent's negligence.

Cited in note in 32 Am. Dec. 497, on limitation of carrier's liability.

16 KAN. 841, ORNN v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK

Collateral attack on judgment record.—Cited in Crist v. Cosby, 11 Okl. 635, 69 Pac. 885, holding that a recital in a judgment of a court of record that personal service was made upon defendant cannot be attacked in an injunction proceeding.

Power of national bank to receive conveyance.—Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Jaffray, 41 Kan. 694, 21 Pac. 242, holding that under the national banking law a national bank may take real estate as security for a pre-existing indebtedness to it.

16 KAN. 346, HOLDEN v. CLARK

Negotiable instruments—Destruction of negotiability.—Cited in Clark v. Skeen, 61 Kan. 526, 60 Pac. 327, 49 L. R. A. 190, 78 Am. St. Rep. 337, holding a stipulation, in an instrument for the payment of a certain sum of money, that upon default in payment of interest the whole amount shall become due at the option of the holder, and then draw a greater rate of interest, does not make it nonnegotiable.

Same—Defense of usury.—Cited in Gross v. Funk, 20 Kan. 655, holding that usury cannot be set up against a negotiable note while in the hands of an innocent indorsee, who purchased before maturity.

Pleading—Waiver of defects.—Cited in Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 17 Kan. 566, holding that an omission to state a fact essential to a cause of action is considered waived where it appears from the record that the case was tried without as if it were alleged and such fact was duly proved and found.

Same—Failure to file reply.—Cited in Netcott v. Porter, 19 Kan. 131; Bashor & Marx v. Nordyke & Marmon Co., 25 Kan. 222—holding that where no reply is filed to new matter in the answer, and only one specific objection is made to the sufficiency of the pleadings, and the case is tried as though a reply was filed, it cannot be objected on appeal that no reply was filed.

Waiving defects as to pleading.—Cited in Briggs v. Latham, 36 Kan. 255, 13 Pac. 393, 59 Am. Rep. 546, holding that defective pleadings or a want of pleadings may sometimes be cured or waived by subsequent proceedings.

Swan*, 5 Okl. 779, 51 Pac. 562—holding that it is a city's duty to keep a street in a reasonably safe condition for the usual modes of travel; City of Ft. Scott v. Brothers, 20 Kan. 455; City of Atchison v. Acheson, 9 Kan. App. 33, 57 Pac. 248—holding that an incorporated city is liable for injuries caused by negligently permitting a defect in a sidewalk to continue; Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County v. City of Topeka, 39 Kan. 197, 18 Pac. 161, on the duty of a city to maintain a bridge within its limits; Board of Com'rs of Marion County v. Riggs, 24 Kan. 255, holding that a county is not liable for injuries resulting from a defective bridge, in absence of statute; City of Abilene v. Cowperthwait, 52 Kan. 324, 34 Pac. 795; Dallas v. City of Concordia, 84 Kan. 734, 115 Pac. 558—holding a city is liable for resulting injuries, if it permits another to dig a pitfall in a street or alley and leaves it unguarded, permitting a pedestrian to fall in it; Oklahoma City v. Meyers, 4 Okl. 686, 46 Pac.

552, holding that a city is liable for injuries from a defective sidewalk; City of Guthrie v. Nix, Halsell & Co., 5 Okl. 555, 49 Pac. 917, holding that an abutting owner, who makes an excavation in a sidewalk for his own benefit, cannot recover for resulting injuries against the city, though the city was negligent in permitting the excavation; James v. Trustees of Wellston Tp., 18 Okl. 56, 90 Pac. 100, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1219, 11 Ann. Cas. 938, holding that, in absence of statute, a township is not liable for defects in a highway.

Same—Knowledge of defect.—Cited in Riggs v. City of Florence, 27 Kan. 194; Union St. Ry. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83, 37 Pac. 1012; City of La Harpe v. Greer, 74 Kan. 74, 85 Pac. 1015; Junction City v. Blades, 1 Kan. App. 85, 41 Pac. 677—holding that complaint to city officials is not necessary to charge a city with negligence in permitting defective streets, if the defect has existed so long that knowledge is presumed; City of Pleasanton v. Rhine, 8 Kan. App. 452, 54 Pac. 512, holding that a city is only liable for injuries from a defective sidewalk if it had notice of the defect, or it was patent and had continued for so long that notice might be reasonably inferred, or the defect was one which reasonably should have been ascertained and remedied; City of Guthrie v. Finch, 13 Okl. 496, 75 Pac. 288, holding that allegations that defendant city negligently permitted a sidewalk to become broken and out of repair, so as to be unsafe and dangerous, "and which sidewalk" the city negligently permitted to remain in a dangerous condition, sufficiently alleged actual or constructive notice by the city of the negligent condition of the sidewalk.

Stare decisis.—Cited in note in 73 Am. St. Rep. 101, on limitations on doctrine of stare decisis.

Demurrer to evidence and direction of verdict.—Cited in Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Couse, 17 Kan. 571, holding that a demurrer to the evidence should be sustained only when the court could, after all the evidence on both sides is in, withdraw the case from the jury and decide the case itself; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58; Waterson v. Rogers, 21 Kan. 529; City of Atchison v. Jansen, 21 Kan. 560; *St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. App. 293, 41 Pac. 221; Belcher v. Whitlock, 6 Okl. 691, 56 Pac. 23—holding it error to sustain demurrer to evidence, unless adverse party has failed to introduce substantial evidence; Sullivan v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 34 Kan. 170, 8 Pac. 112, holding that a motion by defendant for a directed verdict is substantially equivalent to a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, and a verdict cannot be directed if the evidence fairly tends to establish plaintiff's cause of action; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ditmars, 3 Kan. App. 459, 43 Pac. 833; City of Hutchinson v. Van Cleve, 7 Kan. App. 676, 53 Pac. 888—holding that there was no error in overruling a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, where there was some competent evidence tending to prove the facts essential to a recovery; Frick v. Reynolds, 6 Okl. 638, 52 Pac. 391, holding that a motion to withdraw the case from the jury should be granted, where the party having the burden of proof has wholly failed to present any evidence to support his case, and there are no disputed facts, being equivalent to a motion for a directed verdict.

16 KAN. 388, HOBSON v. OGDEN'S EX'RS

Pleadings—Amendment.—Cited in City of Burlingame v. Kansas Valley Nat. Bank, 17 Kan. 407, holding that there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to strike a reply because filed one day after time, where it had stood for three years unchallenged, and the parties had consented to judgment for plaintiff, but it was not entered through some oversight.

Same—Admissions.—Cited in Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. 570, holding that a statement in a petition for letters of administration is not admissible in evidence against petitioner as an admission, unless the petition was signed by him personally, or by an attorney acting within the scope of his authority.

Atkinson*, 38 Kan. 14, 16 Pac. 68—holding that a general finding in ejectment for a party for a certain tract embraced all the facts necessary to sustain his claim thereto; Winstead v. Standeford, 21 Kan. 270; Hargrove v. Woolf, 34 Kan. 101, 8 Pac. 192; Tootle v. Brown, 4 Okl. 612, 46 Pac. 550—holding that the court's findings on conflicting evidence are as conclusive as a verdict, which will not be disturbed, if supported by sufficient evidence; Betts v. Mills, 8 Okl. 351, 58 Pac. 957; McCann v. McCann, 24 Okl. 264, 103 Pac. 694—holding that a general finding on oral conflicting evidence is a finding of everything necessary to sustain the general finding, and is conclusive on appeal upon all doubtful or disputed questions.

Same—Notice to grantee.—Cited in Houck v. Christy, 152 Fed. 612, 81 C. C. A. 602, holding that the circumstances charged the purchasers of a bankrupt's property with notice that the sale was made in fraud of creditors; Crapster v. Williams, 21 Kan. 109, holding the evidence sufficient to show fraud in executing a chattel mortgage for the purpose of placing the property beyond the reach of the mortgagor's creditors; McDonald v. Gaunt, 30 Kan. 693, 2 Pac. 871; Patterson v. Temple, 5 Kan. App. 442, 49 Pac. 342—holding that, knowledge putting a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry which would lead to a knowledge of fraud, such party is chargeable with fraud; Lewis v. Hughes, 49 Kan. 23, 30 Pac. 177, holding a creditor purchasing of his insolvent debtor, whom he knows is attempting to dispose of his property in fraud of other creditors, must act in the utmost good faith and pay or allow adequate prices for the property; Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Co. v. Martin, 45 Kan. 765, 26 Pac. 424, holding that, if one acts in good faith in purchasing goods from an agent as the real owner without knowledge of the agency, his payment of the purchase price by a pre-existing debt from the agent is a defense to an action for the price by the real owner; Hasie v. Connor, 53 Kan. 713, 37 Pac. 128, holding that a creditor, who in good faith obtains from an insolvent debtor property in payment of an honest debt, will not lose his preference by reason of notice of the fact that the debtor intended thereby to defraud other creditors, if he does not participate in such wrongful intent; Gollobar v. Martin, 33 Kan. 252, 6 Pac. 267; Medore, Martin & Co. v. Marshall, 54 Kan. 147, 37 Pac. 977; Vickers v. Buck Stove & Range Co., 60 Kan. 598, 57 Pac. 517; *Hudson v. #### 16 KAN. 402, LANE v. SCOVILLE

Qualification of jurors.—Cited in State v. Ready, 44 Kan. 700, 26 Pac. 58, holding that, while a party may ordinarily rest on the testimony given by a juror on his voir dire in regard to his qualifications, where the objection that a juror had served in the same court within the preceding year was first raised after verdict, and it was not shown that the juror would have been challenged, had such fact been known, and no prejudice is shown, the objection is not available to obtain a new trial.

16 KAN. 411, ROSS v. CRAWFORD COUNTY COM'RS

Taxation—Judicial review of assessments.—Cited in Board of Com'rs of Lyon County v. Sergeant, 24 Kan. 572, holding that a county commissioner's order, made under Comp. Laws 1879, § 5842, correcting a personal property assessment after inquiry, will not prevent an inquiry, in a suit to enjoin the collection of the taxes, as to the amount of the party's property subject to taxation; Bardrick v. Dillon, 7 Okl. 535, 54 Pac. 785, on the question of the power of the courts to review assessments of taxes.

Trial by jury.—Cited in Central Branch Union Pac. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 28 Kan. 453, holding the constitutional guaranty of a jury trial imposes no restrictions on the exercise of the power of eminent domain; Loper v. State, 48 Kan. 540, 29 Pac. 687; Swarz v. Ramala, 63 Kan. 633, 66 Pac. 649—holding that the Constitution only guarantees a jury trial in such cases as were triable to a jury before the Constitution was adopted, and in chancery and statutory proceedings the Legislature has power to dispense with a jury trial, and the establishment of boundary lines by a county surveyor under the statute is such a statutory proceeding.

Board of Com'rs of Harper County*, 43 Kan. 195, 23 Pac. 101—holding that the evidence may be reviewed, if the case-made is so prepared that it is clear that all the evidence is in it, though it is not expressly so stated therein; Dewey v. Linscott, 20 Kan. 684, holding that the recitals in the case-made sufficiently show that it contains the entire testimony; Fillmore & Co. v. Campbell & Gilbert, 25 Kan. 107, holding that where the record merely recited, "Plaintiffs rest" and "Defendants rest," but it appeared after such expressions that further evidence was admitted by the trial court, the evidence will not be reviewed, as the record does not purport to contain all the evidence; Deatherage v. Burkdall, 38 Kan. 732; Ferguson v. Willig, 57 Kan. 453, 46 Pac. 936—holding that it cannot be determined whether the findings and judgment are sustained by the evidence, unless it appears from a fair construction of the record that all of the evidence is contained therein; Streeter v. Westenhaver, 1 Kan. App. 730, 41 Pac. 992, holding that, in order to have the evidence reviewed, it must be preserved in a bill of exceptions or case-made showing that it contained all of the evidence; Donnell v. Reese, 6 Kan. App. 563, 51 Pac. 584, holding that where a statement, signed by counsel for plaintiff in error, to the effect that the case-made contains the evidence given at trial, and such evidence is on the same page, and immediately follows the journal entry, and precedes the court's certificate to the case-made, such statement is a part of the case-made certified by the trial judge.

Bank of Pond Creek v. Cochran*, 17 Okl. 538, 87 Pac. 855—holding that the courts do not favor the method of attacking the petition by objecting to the admission of evidence thereunder, and such objection is not available when the allegations are merely indefinite or state conclusions of law; Young v. Severy, 5 Okl. 630, 49 Pac. 1024, holding an allegation of a material matter, though indefinite and otherwise defective, is sufficient, when first questioned by an objection to the introduction of evidence thereunder.

Same—Construction in absence of demurrer.—Cited in Bank of Glasco v. Marshall, 5 Kan. App. 252, 47 Pac. 561, holding that, in absence of a demurrer to the petition and motion, the allegations will be construed liberally, and will be held good, unless there is a total failure to allege a material fact.

Lien of tax deed holder—Priority.—Distinguished in Mercer v. Justice, 63 Kan. 225, 65 Pac. 219, holding that a tax deed holder, made a party to mortgage foreclosure proceedings, was entitled to a lien for the value of his improvements superior to the mortgage lien, and also to an order of court that he should not be evicted until the value of the improvements was paid.

Constructive trust.—Cited in Winkfield v. Brinkman, 21 Kan. 682, holding that one who has acquired the legal title to real estate to which another has a better right, will be considered in equity as the trustee for the true owner, and required to convey him the legal title.

County treasurer—Removal.—Cited in Loper v. State, 48 Kan. 540, 29 Pac. 687, holding that, under Gen. St. 1889, par. 1709, an order was properly made by the county commissioner, suspending a defaulting county treasurer and appointing another to act in his place.

16 KAN. 446, ODELL v. DODGE

Elections—Term of office.—Distinguished in State ex rel. Little v. Wentworth, 55 Kan. 298, 40 Pac. 648, holding that under Laws 1879, c. 113, § 3, providing that each insane asylum shall have a superintendent, etc., who shall be chosen by the board of trustees and hold office for the term of three years, such officers are entitled to hold their offices for three years from the date each appointment takes effect, no vacant or fractional terms being recognized.

Same—Time of election.—Cited in Jones v. Gridley, 20 Kan. 584, holding that, where the first regular elections for justice of the peace were held in April, 1872, elections could be held thereafter in each alternate year.

Same—Postponing elections.—Cited in Wilson v. Clark, 63 Kan. 505, 65 Pac. 705, holding that Laws 1901, c. 176 (Gen. St. 1901, §§ 2751-2755), providing for postponing the election of certain county and judicial officers for periods of a year for the purpose of securing uniformity in the commencement of official terms of office, does not conflict with Const. art. 4, § 2, providing for annual elections.

Former jeopardy.—Cited in State v. Colgate, 31 Kan. 511, 3 Pac. 346, 47 Am. Rep. 507, holding that where a mill and all its contents, including the account books, were burned by a single fire, an acquittal for burning the mill is a good defense to a subsequent prosecution for setting fire to and burning books of account; State v. Patterson, 66 Kan. 447, 71 Pac. 860, holding that, in a prosecution of a city treasurer for embezzling city money, a demurrer is properly sustained to a plea by defendant alleging his acquittal of a charge of forging entries in his books of account with intent to defraud the city; State v. Barber, 2 Kan.

App. 679, 43 Pac. 800, holding that under the statutes the illegal sale of intoxicants is a different offense from that of keeping a place where intoxicants are sold in violation of law, and an acquittal under a charge of making an illegal sale does not bar a prosecution for keeping a place where illegal sales are made.

Cited in notes in 58 Am. Dec. 541; 41 Am. Rep. 476—on former jeopardy; in 92 Am. St. Rep. 106, on identity of offenses on plea of former jeopardy; in 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735, on right to convict for several offenses growing out of same facts.

Same—Trial of plea.—Cited in Re Miller, 7 Kan. Cheney*, 76 Kan. 222, 91 Pac. 793, 123 Am. St. Rep. 129, holding that the declarations of persons in possession of realty, which illustrate the character of their possession and explain their claims of ownership, are admissible to show the character and extent of their claims; Butts v. Butts, 84 Kan. 475, 114 Pac. 1048, holding that, in an action to recover land claimed under a parol gift from plaintiff's father; declarations by the father, made while in control and possession of the land, are admissible to explain the nature and character of the father's possession; Perkins v. Territory, 10 Okl. 506, 63 Pac. 860, holding, where defendant himself as a witness explained an act, it was error to admit evidence as to declarations as to such acts.

Replevin—Property in custodia legis.—Cited in Wilde v. Rawles, 13 Colo. 583, 22 Pac. 897, holding that one whose property was wrongfully seized by a sheriff under attachment may recover it in claim and delivery in another court of concurrent jurisdiction.

Commissioners of Brown County*, 20 Kan. 243; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Atchison County, 47 Kan. 722, 28 Pac. 999—holding that persons paying taxes with knowledge of all the facts making them void cannot recover them back; Thimes v. Stumpff, 33 Kan. 53, 5 Pac. 431, holding that one who contracted to purchase a homestead, knowing that the vendor's wife did not sign the contract, and all the circumstances which made the contract void, cannot recover back a payment made under the contract, it being voluntary; City of Atchison v. State ex rel. Tufts, 34 Kan. 379, 8 Pac. 367, holding that, where taxpayers voluntarily paid illegal taxes levied, the public had no such interest therein as would authorize the state to enjoin the county treasurer from paying out the money, the payments having been voluntary; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. City of Atchison, 47 Kan. 712, 28 Pac. 1000, holding that a part of taxes illegally paid was an involuntary payment, which could be recovered back; Connelly v. Board of Com'rs of Trego County, 64 Kan. 168, 67 Pac. 453; Pomeroy v. Board of Com'rs of Graham County, 6 Kan. App. 401, 50 Pac. 1094—holding that illegal taxes paid involuntarily may be recovered; Kelly v. Board of Com'rs of Miami County, 85 Kan. 38, 116 Pac. 477, holding that a payment made pursuant to a claim asserted can only be recovered by showing fraud, duress, or mistake of fact; Ottawa University v. Stratton, 85 Kan. 246, 116 Pac. 892, holding that illegal taxes, paid under protest, may be recovered as an involuntary payment; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Gruendel, 3 Kan. App. 53, 44 Pac. 439, holding that a payment in condemnation proceedings was voluntary and cannot be recovered; Board of Com'rs of Wyandotte County v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 4 Kan. App. 772, 46 Pac. 1013, holding that a payment of taxes under protest, and to prevent the issuance of tax warrants therefor, is involuntary, and may be recovered, though no warrant was actually issued.

Cited in note in 45 Am. Dec. 156, 163, 164, on compulsory payments and right to recover them back; in 22 Am. Rep. 520, on right to recover back taxes or assessments paid; in 94 Am. St. Rep. 414, 416, on recovery back of voluntary payment.

Distinguished in Juneau v. Stunkle, 40 Kan. 756, 20 Pac. 473, where a payment was made with the understanding that if, at final settlement, it was found to be an overpayment, it could be recovered back; Lowe v. Wells Fargo & Co. Express, 78 Kan. 105, 96 Pac. 74, holding that money was paid to an express company voluntarily under a mistake of fact, and hence could be recovered.

16 KAN. 601, WRIGHT v. NOELL

County superintendent—Women eligible to office.—Cited in Russell v. Guptill, 13 Wash. 360, 43 Pac. 340, holding that women may hold the office of county superintendent of schools, under a statute establishing a general uniform system of public schools (Laws 1889-90, p. 348), by implication from section 78 of the act.

Cited in note in 38 L. R. A. 210, 212, on right of woman to hold office.

16 KAN. 608, STATE v. JONES

Former jeopardy—Discharge on preliminary examination.—Cited in State v. Ray, 81 Kan. 159, 105 Pac. 46, holding that an order discharging accused was not a bar to another preliminary examination for the same offense or further prosecution therefor.

Offenses against females—Knowledge of age.—Cited in State v. Johnson, 85 Kan. 54, 116 Pac. 210, holding that, in a prosecution for decoying a female under 18 years of age in a house of prostitution, it is immaterial that accused did not know the girl's age, or that she represented herself to be more than 18 years of age.

Cited in note in 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 662, on effect of mistake as to age of girl under statute denouncing sexual offenses.

Same—Information in language of statute.—Cited in State v. Tucker, 72 Kan. 481, 84 Pac. 126, holding that an information charging the taking away of a girl under 18 years of age for purposes of concubinage in the language of the statute (Gen. St. 1901, § 2020) is sufficient, it not being essential to charge cohabitation and intercourse.

Custody of children—Rights of parents.—Cited in State v. Angel, 42 Kan. 216, 21 Pac. 1075; Miller v. Morrison, 43 Kan. 446, 23 Pac. 612—holding that the father and mother are equally the natural guardians of the children.
